The commands of Christ, are the law of Christ. They are given to be observed. We are aware that it is not fashionable to observe them; but followers of Christ ought not to be absorbed in the fashions of the present age. The commands of God are at a discount in the world today. People hate them,—refuse to obey them; laugh at his counsel and will have none of his reproof. We must be unfashionable if we would please God. We must dare to be singular in the present age,—or condemnation awaits us. And in so doing, "Marvel not if the world hate you." The world loves its own, and the followers of Christ are not of the world. They have renounced it and all its pride, and vanity, and pleasure, and inordinate desire, and it is all passing away. If they have not done so, they will pass away with it.

The Glory of Jerusalem.

This was a theme the prophets of Israel loved to dwell upon. They vividly portrayed the exaltation and preeminence among the nations to which it will attain in the Age to come, and in most cases it requires only the mere reading of the passage to ascertain that it has not yet received its fulfillment, but that the description refers to a time yet future. One such passage, among many others, occurs in the prophecy of Zechariah. It refers to a time when there will be an annual and universal pilgrimage of nations to Jerusalem. It reads:—

"And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year, to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of Tabernacles." Chapter xiv. 16.

That the coming up against Jerusalem has not yet taken place is admitted,—neither has anything approaching to the description of events here recorded ever been chronicled in human history. In truth the whole chapter still remains unfulfilled. That the spiritualizing system cannot apply, let it be noted that there is no reference whatever made to an invisible community, a mystical church; that there is not a particle of evidence, nor shadow of a foundation in the words themselves, that can suggest to the mind that it has reference to a church being gathered out of the nations to form the future inhabitants of worlds on high. This is an allegorical mode of *mis*interpretation which, at its very best, is simply foolishness. The passage is clear, it needs no interpretation. It refers to subject mortal nations who survive "the rod of iron," with which the living wicked,—those who know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,—will be punished at Christ's coming.

Recognizing the literal nature of the events foreshadowed, and that some day in the near future they will remain prophecy no longer, but exist as present day realities, we can follow with a keen and longing interest the changing fortunes of Israel's children, and the vicissitudes through which the inhabitants of Jerusalem are called to pass. Though trodden down yet, the change will come and that before long, we believe, and then what blessings will be theirs. They will be the favored people, who henceforth will dwell safely, none making them afraid! What a privilege will be theirs.

Present day pilgrims to Jerusalem see only a long neglected city, with just the signs of a new era, and of new life and activity and enterprise; but those of the coming age will see the queen city of the earth, crowded with a dense and happy population, the very heart of commerce, the eye of the world, the seat of learning, and the throne of power. More than this, by far,—they will gaze on the person of the glorified Jesus, the King of kings, the Lord of Hosts, and of his associated saints, the lords and rulers of the new kingdom under the whole heavens, whilst they bask in the glorious sun-light, and gaze upon the jewelled splendor of the Jerusalem which is from above, the mother and home of the saints."

Baptism.

"Buried with Christ in Baptism," says Paul in his letter to the Colossians, 2nd chapter, 12th verse, "Wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." This may be objected to as a trivial rite ever so much; it may be objected to till the last moment of life,—but there it is, with all the authority attaching to the commands of inspired men,—with all the authority attaching to the command and the example of the Son of God. No one can neglect it with impunity. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." No one else has any claim to be. Importance attaches to every command of God. Look at the condition of the world today and consider that disobedience is responsible for all the sorrow, suffering and death,—yes; one act of disobedience, to what is doubtless considered a very trivial offence for such tremendous results. But there are many other illustrations of the importance attaching to the Law of God; among them we remind our readers of the fate of Nadab and Abihu, Saul and Uzza and Lot's wife. Reader, if you know the truth, and love the truth, do not dally with it,—obey it, for nothing can compare with it in importance, and the time to obey will soon be gone forever.

News Notes.

Emperor Franz Josef of Austria is having a conference at Berlin with the German Emperor and the Crown Prince of Italy. Much significance is attached to this meeting by the diplomats, as it is thought to have a direct bearing on the fate of the triple alliance, and so with the peace of Europe.

The South African war is taking a more active turn. The British have advanced their lines to nineteen miles north of Brandfort, and prevented the Boers from concentrating their forces. The fighting has been severe in places, but the casualty list is not great, the Boers falling away after a few hours of battle.

The Methodist General Conference is being held in Chicago, Ill. Among the questions to be settled is the one concerning amusements—will dancing, card playing, etc., be allowed.

The Paris elections held May 6, resulted in gains by the Nationalists and Socialists.

The following item from the dispatches of May 7, shows that the Church trouble in England is far from a settlement.

"The Archbishop's decision on the reservation of the elements of the sacrament is regarded by the religious press as the turning point in the history of the English church. The judgment utterly disallows the practice which ritualists consider of vital importance, and this is done on legal grounds, because the matter was settled at the time of the reformation, and the decision has never been reversed. It is not yet clear whether the strong minority of irreconcilible extremists will decline to obey the Bishops, but the great majority of the high church clergy will be bound by the decision, whether with or without constraint of conscience."

Inference.

When is an inference wrong? When it contradicts plain statements. It may be out of harmony with a whole system of revealed truth. This is true of the inference drawn from certain passages, that the soul is immortal. I need not enumerate the many plain statements with which this is in conflict. The readers of The Restitution will readily call these to mind.

INFERENCES LAWFUL AND LOGICAL.

In Matt. vii. Jesus says, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?" Here is a class of hypocrites who affect surprise at hearing the decision of the Judge against them. "That day" is not the day of death, but the day of his kingdom of his presence, the day of judgment. The inference to be drawn from this language of surprise and also from the sentence pronounced against them is that this is the first time these pretenders are brought face to face with the Judge of quick and dead. If they had met him one by one at the day of death, then their cases had been decided and their destiny fixed irrevocably, leaving no ground for surprise, nor any ground for summoning them to appear to receive sentence. That this is the first chance of meeting their Judge is a fair conclusion from the premises, and harmonizes every plain statement of truths, which in any way stand related to this; and is, at the same time, irreconcilable with numerous inferences unlawfully drawn, and formulated into creeds which continue to receive the sanction of the worldly-wise.

The popular notion that there are two judgments of each individual, one at death and the other at the last day, is a miserably poor theory, and even fails to satisfy many who hold the doctrine of the immortality of the human soul. Again, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, then shall he reward every man according to his works." Matt. xvi. 27. The logical inference here is, that the interval between dying and the personal coming of the Lord is a condition of death, in which those who died are incapacitated for enjoying a reward, as in the case of the righteous, or for having the penalty inflicted, as in case of those who deny Christ. From the day of death down to the Lord's coming they have been unconscious, but of being in fact. Hence the necessity of a resurrection. This conclusion is supported by the fact that the reward is due at the advent and not at death. Jesus would not talk of rewarding men at the epoch of his coming, if each one entered on his reward at the hour of death, as commonly taught. The faithful disciple who bore his cross, lost his life for his loyalty, and finds it when the Son of Man comes in the glory of his Father, and rewards every man according to his deeds.

This shows conclusively that in the intermediate state, be it long or short, man is without life, and must therefore be unconscious. This accords with what Solomon said, "The dead know not anything;" with the fact that man was formed of the dust of the ground; that he returns to dust again; that he goes to the grave; that life is a matter of promise, and that immortality is to be sought for by patient continuance in well-doing. The groundless inference that the soul is immortal is at variance with all these facts.

Again, when Paul had finished his course and the day of his execution was near he said, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 8. Now if I say, that when the executioner severed the Apostle's head from his body, he died and would remain dead until the day ("that day") when the crown will be given to him and all others of like faith and loyalty, is my inference false? I think not. It agrees with the positive teaching of God's Word, but does not agree with the tradition, that at death the soul as the proper person, the real man, goes to heaven and receives his crown. The inferences I have drawn harmonize with the plain and positive statements of the Word, and is sufficient to show how they may be made to support and strengthen the main argument.

The X Ray Papers. No. 8.

"The entrance of thy Word giveth light."

Rev. B. There are one or two more passages of Scripture that appear to sustain the theory of the conscious existence of the soul after death, which I would like to investigate. One is in Rev. vi. 9-11, "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar, the souls of them that were slain for the Word of God, and for the testimony which they held, and they cried with a loud voice, saying: How long, O Lord holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth. And white robes were given unto every one of them, and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also, and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled. Now, Mr. Mack, those souls that John saw under the altar, must have been conscious, for they cried with a loud voice. I think this is conclusive evidence of the uninterrupted existence of the conscious entity existing in man.

Mack. Friend B, we should not take up a lone passage of Scripture, and from that passage alone jump at conclusions, but we should study it in connection with the context. We must remember that the book of Revelations is mainly a book of symbols. This statement in reference to the souls under the altar comes in at the opening of the fifth seal. Let us examine what takes place at the opening of the other seals. At the opening of the first four seals John saw different colored horses and their riders. And at the opening of the sixth seal there was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sack cloth, and the moon became as blood, and so continuing a symbolic representation to the end of the chapter. Now friend B, I want to ask you for your candid opinion, in reference to what is signified, by those different horses and their riders, and the things represented as taking place under the opening of the sixth seal.

Rev. B. I am somewhat at a loss, as to the meaning to be attached to those different symbols. I have seen several explanations put forth in reference to them, but nothing very satisfactory to my mind. I think upon the whole they are intended to give a symbolic representation of different events to transpire on the earth from the beginning of the gospel age down to the end of the world.

Mack. I think, friend B, you are about correct in your general explanation. If you had said end of the age (the gospel age), in place of the end of the world. Now, friend B, do you think that there were actually horses with their riders that John saw at the opening of the first four seals, or were they representations through a vision.

Rev. B. Of course they were not actual horses but a representation given in vision.

Mack. Now, friend B, why do you accept what John saw at the opening of the first four seals and the sixth seal as symbols, and give the fifth a literal interpretation. We are taught by the popular theory that the souls of the righteous go to heaven at death, there to enjoy all that heaven is. Now, these souls are represented as being under the altar, and they are told that they should rest or keep quiet, yet for a little season, etc. Now, friend B, I think that it was hardly fair to keep these souls cooped up under the altar while the rest of the righteous were enjoying the bliss of heaven. And the popular theory that the parable of the rich man and Lazarus must be taken as literal, then heaven and hell are only separated by a gulf across which the occupants can see and converse. These souls under the altar could see those who persecuted and put them to death. If not already in that place of torment, dropping in from time to time. Then why should they cry to the Lord for vengeance on those who spilled their blood here on earth? Friend B, you will have to drop your theory on one or the other of these passages. Your argument on one kills your argument on the other. But these are the souls of some of the righteous that did not go to heaven at death. They are represented as under the altar. This must have been the altar of sacrifice on which they sacrificed their lives here on earth. We have no account of any altar in heaven, except the altar of incense. Under the Jewish dispensation the blood of the sacrifice was poured out at the foot of the altar, and as the Scriptures tell us that "the blood is life." Gen. ix. 4, and as Abel's blood or life is represented as "crying to the Lord from the ground," Gen. iv. 10, so the souls, life or blood of these martyrs are represented as crying to the Lord from under the altar of sacrifice on the earth. Friend B, do you suppose that the souls of the righteous, after they get to heaven, remember the wrongs they suffered here on earth, and call on the Lord to wreak his vengeance on their enemies. The word soul in the passage under consideration is from the Greek word psuchee; it occurs 105 times in the New Testament, and is rendered soul 59 times, and life 40 times, besides by several other words (see Emp. Bagster appendix p. 40).

Rev. B. But white robes were given unto them and they were told to rest for a little season.

Mack. Why should white robes be given unto them? Were their old robes soiled and unfit to wear, or were they without robes? Friend B, don't you see that the white robes are symbolic, as well as the rest of the passage? The martyrs whom this symbol represents were tortured and put to death for the cause of Christ, all through the dark ages of the reign of popery, in every fiendish manner that could be devised by man. Thousands upon thousands of them were burned, torn asunder, torn limb from limb, dragged to death through the streets, drowned, forced over cliffs, where if not killed outright, they lingered in mortal agony until death relieved them. Their memories were blackened and reviled by the most infamous calumnies that could be heaped upon them. They were branded as the most debased criminals on the face of the earth. Finally the great reformation set in, led by Luther, Melangthon and others, and it was found that these martyrs were not the vile criminals they had been represented, but had suffered death for righteousness sake, and that those who had persecuted, tortured, and put them to death, were the vile criminals. Then their memories were cleared of the vile aspersions, cast on them by the church of Rome; and were revered and honored, because they had suffered death, "For the Word of God, and for the testimony which they held." Thus the old sack cloth robes which the Papal power had forced on them, were taken off, white robes were symbolically given unto them. White is an emblem of purity and righteousness.

Rev. B. In Rev. xxii. 8-9, we read, "And I John saw these things, and heard them, and when I had heard, and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them that keep the saying of this book, worship God. Now, Mr. Mack, if the soul-sleeping theory be true, how could this old prophet appear there and converse with John? He certainly had not been resurrected, for the first resurrection has not yet taken place.

Mack. Friend B, you are jumping at conclusions again. This person who was talking to John was not one of the old prophets, neither does he say that he was. John says he was an angel, and angels are not disembodied souls, but are a creation of God, separate from man. By filling in the ellipsis in verse 9, we have the true meaning of the passage, "For I am thy fellow servant of thy brethren the prophets, and the fellow servant of them that keep the sayings of this book, worship God." That is the meaning given this passage by both the revised version and Emphatic Diaglott. He was a fellow servant with John and with John's brethren the prophets.

Rev. B. There are other Scriptures that I think sustain the idea of the immortality of the soul, especially those that predict the eternal punishment of the wicked, how could they suffer everlasting punishment if they are not immortal.

Mack. Well, friend B, the theories of the immortality of the soul and eternal torment are so closely allied that they must stand or fall together.

Be of Good Cheer.

"And he entered into a ship, and passed over and came into his own city. And behold they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying in a bed; and Jesus seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy; Son be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." Matt ix. 1-3.

As the writer nears the end of mortal life, the words of Jesus, and the power behind his words, are of far greater import to him than the contention now on in some of the churches over man-made creeds. "Be of good cheer," were it any one of my friends or acquaintances that addressed me thus, I would feel almost offended. For how can I be cheerful, afflicted as I am, youth gone, health going and friends? Ah, what shall I say to this? This is the deepest stab of any, namely, the quiet leaving of those we naturally expected to stand by and leave us a line, when our arms became too enfeebled to hold out our own against wind and tide. I hope none of The Restitution people suffer in this way, if they do, they have certainly learned the art of concealing. No, I have no recollection of ever hearing any of them complain of desertion, etc.

There is no class of people who need a word of cheer so much as old people, who have been deserted by friends (so called). How can such be cheerful? The attempt is like the man at the pool directed to take up his bed and walk. But Jesus never mocked any one, so the command must be all right. Christian soldiers should be trained like other soldiers, to anticipate surprises of all kinds. During one of the great battles of our civil war, one man was observed loading and firing a twelve pounder by himself, the work of nine or ten men; his comrades had all been killed or wounded. He was trained to keep up the fight by himself. Restitution people make a note of this. When with Elijah you imagine that you are all that is left, be of good cheer, isolated one. If God is with you, you are neither alone nor in the minority. Stop talking of being alone, with cheer on your face, go out among your neighbors and secure their friendship if not their fellowship. You have so much to talk about. While they talk about their man-made creeds. You talk to them of Jesus and the precious promises he has left for us. Church people rarely speak of Jesus. They are taken up with the preacher and his wife, or with some of the members. I asked a man the other day on the streets, if he was a believer in Jesus. "O dear no," he answered, "I am an Episcopalian." He afterward corrected himself, but remarked, "We have been in the country over 30 years, but never been asked the question in that way before." (He was English).

Be of good cheer, sister, brother, earth and all that you deem so essential to your comfort and present life may be receding, but God can supply in a way that you never dreamed of, all that you require. "Let not your heart be troubled." "Are not five sparrows sold for a farthing, and not one falls without your Father's notice; fear not you are of more value than many sparrows." Be of good cheer.

Not Far.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
Yet, in the shadow of sin,
How many are coming and going,
How few are entering in!

Not far from the golden gateway,
Where voices whisper and wait,
Fearing to enter in boldly,
So lingering still at the gate;

Catching the strain of the music
Floating so sweetly along
Knowing the song they are singing,
Yet joining not in the song;

Seeing the warmth and the beauty,
The infinite love and the light,
Yet weary, and lonely and wanting,
Out in the desolate night!

Out in the dark and the danger,
Out in the night and the cold,
Though he is longing to lead them
Tenderly into the fold.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
'Tis only a little space;
But it may be the last one forever,
Out of the resting place.

Zacharias.—Chapter 6.

1. And I turned and lifted up mine eyes and saw, and lo, four chariots going their way out from between two mountains, and the mountains were of copper;

2. In the first chariot were bay horses and in the second chariot were black horses.

3. And in the third chariot were white horses, and in the fourth chariot were dapple-gray horses.

4. And I answered and said unto the angel who was talking to me, What are these, my lord?

5. And the angel who was talking to me answered and said, These are the four winds of heaven; they are going their way to stand beside the Sword of all the earth.

6. The one in which the black horses were have gone their way out toward the north, and the white have gone their way after them, and the party-colored have gone their way out to a land of the south.

7. And the gray have gone their way and have looked to go and make their way around the earth; and he said, Go and make your way around the earth; and they made their way around the earth.

8. And he called and talked with me saying, Lo, they are going their way to a land of the north and they have given rest to my anger in a land of the north.

9. And a word of the Lord occurred unto me saying,

10. Take of the captivity from the rulers and from her serviceable men and from those who know her well, and enter into the house of Joosias, the son of Sophonias, who is coming from Babuloon on that day.

11. And thou shalt take silver and gold and make crowns (of victory) and thou shalt place them on the head of Jesous, the Son of Jooseelek the great priest.

12. And thou shalt say unto him, Thus saith the All-Controlling Lord, Lo, a man of prominence, Anatolee (a shoot from a root) is his name, and from beneath him will the re spring up, and he will build the house of the Lord.

13. And he will take courage (virtue C. V.) and sit and rule upon his throne, and there will be a priest at his right hand and peaceable counsel will there be between them both.

14. And there will be the crown (of victory) for those who wait and for her men of use, and for those who know her well and in the way of favor for a son of Sophonias and in the way of a psalm in the house of the Lord.

15. And those far from them will come and build in the house of the Lord, and ye will comprehend why the All-controlling Lord hath sent me unto you, and it will be if ye shall hear the voice of the Lord your God.

Chapter 7.

1. And it came to pass in the fourth year of Darrios, the king, that a word of the Lord occurred unto Zacharias on the fourth of the ninth month, which is Chaseleu;

2. And the king and his men of influence sent Sarasar and Ahmeer unto Baithel to seek the favor of the Lord.

3. Saying unto the priests that were in the house of the All-controlling Lord and unto the prophets, saying, It is the sanctification that hath come here in the fifth month, even as it hath done already for a sufficient number of years.

4. And a word of the Lord of Hosts occurred unto me saying.

5. Speak unto all the laity of the land and unto the priest. and say, If ye have fasted or mourned on the fifth and on the seventh, lo, even for seventy years ye have not failed me, have ye?

6. And if ye eat or drink, do ye not merely eat and drink?

7. Are not these the words which the Lord talked at the hands of the prophets formerly when Hierousaleem was inhabited and prosperous and the cities round about her, and the mountain-range and the plain were inhabited?

8. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Zacharias saying,

9. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, judge right judgment, and show mercy and pity each one to his brother.

10. And do not oppress widow and orphan and proselyte and the needy one, and do not bear malice each one in your hearts against your brother.

11. And they distrusted to take heed and they turned their back in contempt, and they made their ears heavy so as not to hear.

12. And their heart they made distrustful so as not to obey my law and the words which the All-controlling Lord sent out in his spirit at the hands of the prophets before them: and there occurred great wrath from the All-controlling Lord.

13. And it will be in the way that he said and they did not hearken: in this wise will they have cried, and I shall not hearken, saith the All-controlling Lord.

14. And I shall cast them out among all the nations which they have not known, and the land will have been left desolate behind them because of no one passing through it or living in it: and they have made a choice land a desolation.

Chapter 8.

1. And a word of the All-controlling Lord occurred saying,

2. Thus saith the All-Controlling Lord, I became zealous with a great zeal for Hierousaleem and Sioon, and with great anger did I show zeal for her.

3. Thus saith the Lord, I shall return unto Sioon and I shall pitch my tabernacle in the midst of Hierousaleem, and Hierousaleem will have been called a truthful city, and the mountain of the All-controlling Lord a sacred mountain.

4. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, yet again will elder men and elder women take their seats in the public squares of Hierousaleem, each having his wand of office in his hand because of a fulness of days.

5. And the public squares of the city will have been filled with boys and girls playing in the public squares thereof.

6. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, should it be impossible to bring it about in the eyes of the residue of this laity in those days it will not be impossible in my sight will it? Saith the All-controlling Lord.

7. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, lo, I am saving my laity from a land of the east and from a land of the west.

8. And I am going to lead them in and pitch their tabernacle down in the midst of Hierousaleem, and they will be a laity for me, and I shall be unto them for a God in truth and in righteousness.

9. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, may the hands have been made strong of those of you who hear in those days these words from a mouth of the prophets, from the day where the house of the All-controlling Lord hath been founded and the inner-house from the day it hath been built.

10. For before those days the wages of men will not be for profit, and there will be no wages for the domestic-animals (or possibly for "the slaves") and for the one who goeth his way out and in there will be no peace because of tribulation; and I shall send out all men each against his neighbor.

11. And now not according to the former days am I doing unto the residue of this laity, saith the All-controlling Lord.

12. But rather shall I show peace. The vine will yield its fruit and the earth will yield its products, and the heavens will yield their dew, and I shall cause the residue of this my laity to inherit all these things.

13. And it will be that in the way the house of Jouda and the house of Israel were in a curse among all the nations, even so shall I save you and ye will be in a blessing. Be of good courage and get strength in your hands.

14. For thus saith the All-controlling Lord, In the way I thought to do you evil when I became provoked with your fathers, saith the All-controlling Lord, and did not change my purpose.

15. Even so have I planned and thought to do Hierousalem and the house of Jouda good in these days. Be of good courage.

16. These are the words which ye shall do. Talk truth each one to his neighbor: truth and a judgment of peace judge ye in your gateways.

17. And account not in your hearts each one the evil of your neighbor, and love not a false oath; for all these things have I hated, saith the All-controlling Lord.

18. And a word of the All-controlling Lord occurred unto me saying.

19. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, the fourth and the fifth and the seventh and the tenth fast shall be for the house of Jouda joy and rejoicing and good festivals, and ye shall have been made merry, and the truth and the peace may ye have loved.

20. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, yet again will many laities come and inhabit many cities.

21. And those inhabiting five cities will come together into one city, saying, Let us go our way to beseech the face of the Lord and to seek out the face of the All-controlling Lord, I also will go my way.

22. And many laities and many nations will come to seek out the face of the All controlling Lord in Hierousaleem and to court the favor of the Lord's face.

23. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord, In those days, if ten men from all the tongues of the nations shall hold, they will even lay hold of the hem of a Joudaian man's garment saying, we will go our way with thee, for we have heard that God is with you.

Comment.

If there is anything clearly taught in this sixth chapter, it is the fact of angelic use and instrumentality in and under the controlling hand of God in the affairs of this natural cosmos. We hear so much now-a-days in religious philosophy about God's "immanence" that I think it will not be amiss to emphasize again the "immanence" of something besides law or laws in the hands of God alone. For here we have subordinate angels or spiritual personal intelligences doing the behests of God in all the earth. There has been a marked tendency in modern Protestantism as well as an earlier Catholicism to ignore and belittle this fundamental teaching both of the Old and New Covenant, namely that God is not only himself an intelligent personality and all that this implies, but that he sways this cosmos of the heavens and the earth or the universe, not merely through immutable natural laws of which he is the author and energizer, but through intelligent persons called angels. Then it is no insignificant fact that all through this book of Zacharias God constantly and re-iteratively speaks of himself and presents himself to the reader's thought and imagination as "the All-controlling Lord" (not "Omnipotent" as in the C. V. and R. V.) Control is a vastly more important and significant idea in personality than mere "power"—both objectively and subjectively. As illustrated in the finite, a man may be endowed with great powers intellectually and have no proper self-control of them, and of course if he has no proper subjective use of these powers he will have no proper objective use of them. We might also conclude that as all spiritual intelligence is higher than natural intelligence the things or phenomena that we account miraculous are really no more miraculous to God and his angels than man's acts when viewed from the plane of the lower intelligences. We are told that God "sways" the universe not only as a whole, but in the minutest particular. Why should we reason that what we do not understand of God's sway contravenes immutable law any more than man's sway of the intelligences beneath him? Why is it not a more reasonable conclusion to infer that an All-controlling spiritual Being, Author and Lord would know how to subject a natural man and a natural world to the laws of his own Being and world without contravening law of any kind? We know enough about the natural world to know that every law therein subserves a utility as an end and that if there be any loss it must be outside the pale of any use. Can we not infer that if there be any loss incurred in subjecting the natural to the spiritual, it will be because under the divine control and pro-science there can be no further use for some persons and things. Does the divine Potter when the vessel become marred in his hands not return the marred vessel of honor even to its unmoulded clay again? Cannot he who can lavishly create also lavishly destroy?

The figurative language used in this chapter of the horses and riders simply illustrate the fact that God, the All-controlling Lord, works through agents and instrumentalities all of whom and which do his supreme behests.

The sixth chapter teaches very clearly and emphatically God's idea of a fu[illegible] and the teaching coincides exactly with Christ's teaching in the Sermon on the Mount and the dicta here said to be in exact accord with the teaching of the prophets who had gone before them, and it may be summed up in the aphorism of all Scripture, "Do righteousness and show mercy, if you look for mercy from me."

The eighth chapter opens with an oft-repeated statement in prophecy that God is a jealous God not "a jealous one" as has been read into theological ideas and concepts of the divine character. This zeal prompts him to chasten with great severity, but invariably with love and the beautiful and glorious picture drawn in the closing verses of this chapter of the restoration of God's people to their native land and its restoration to fertility and the exaltation of this people to headship among the nations, is a picture yet to be realized and a large part of the kingdom which we are taught to be praying for and which we are praying for whether "with the understanding" or not.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Romans vi. 23.

"For the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

I think we are all aware what wages is, it is reward, pay, the value of labor performed, a just recompence for the work done. The wages of sin is death, death is the pay. We are told that sin entered into the world by one man, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. Rom. v. 12. According to this passage all are sinners and all will receive the same penalty or wages; but the next paragraph lets in a ray of hope, but the gift of God is eternal life. This is not wages, this is the free gift which man cannot purchase for himself, so the gift is the greater on that account. It is called THE gift of God. Now every thing we get is a gift from God, but this everlasting life is THE gift, being of so much more importance than all others, that it is God's greatest or special gift. Now, if man had an immortal soul and could live for ever in spite of God, it would not be a gift at all, but eternal life being a gift and depending on man's acceptance of that gift, it shows that the immortal soul theory is false. The passage says we get eternal life through Jesus Christ. In order to get this life we must comply with the conditions. Paul told the jailor that he must repent and be baptized, this is the first start. Repent means to turn back, or to turn in the opposite direction, and to leave off sinning and form a righteous character, or to follow Jesus, for he says I am the way, the truth and the life. A ransom for the world, that is he purchased the world and man with it, and will restore what was lost by Adam's fall, and give life to all mankind that will accept of it on the terms God has laid down. "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive," but we must be in Christ to receive the blessing he has promised. Christ says, "I am the door, any man that climbeth up any other way is a thief and a robber." The immortal soul doctrine robs Christ of all he has to give. Paul says that we receive this gift through the resurrection, and that if Christ be not risen, then our hope is vain, (or there is no hope without the resurrection). 1 Cor. xv. 14-20. But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept.

But every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Read the whole 15th chapter, it is a whole sermon of itself. To be in Christ is the first thing and to be waiting for him if alive, or if asleep, to go down to the grave with the hope of living again, when the trump shall sound and the dead in Christ shall rise first, and we who are alive and remain shall be changed in a moment and in the twinkling of an eye, and be caught up with them to meet the Lord in the air and so shall we be ever with the Lord.

Report.

As per former announcement, a series of meetings were begun at Inwood, Ind., on March 18th. Those of the faith seem to be earnest in the work they had undertaken and were ready to work. The interest was seemingly good throughout. Bro. G. W. Smith came on the 20th and assisted during the meeting. On March 31 the writer was called home. Bro. Smith continued the meetings until April 6th. No one took on Christ by baptism, though an aged couple have since expressed their desire to do so. The church at Inwood is young and small. The members there need the encouragement of one and all. Bro. Smith, who speaks for them once a month, has labored hard in that place, and what truth there is there, and the number who are in touch with truth, excepting two, is on account of, and they are indebted to him and his family. May his labors with them ever be fruitful and encouraging, and may the congregation ever stand upon the solid Rock.

F. L. AUSTIN.

On April 7, 1900, the writer met with those who had been formerly baptized "in the name of the Lord Jesus," at Green school house, 12 miles south of Rensselaer, 4 miles northeast of Remington, Ind., and organized a church with nineteen members. The name under which the church will be known is The Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, Green Grove, Ind. Bro. C. E. Vincent was chosen first elder, and Bro. Wm. Banes was chosen secretary. The post office of each being Remington. The church here is the result of work being done there last year by the request of Brother and Sister Job Banes. Bro. Zilmer will speak for them once a month, and a movement is on foot to have Bro. O. T. Hulstead speak there once a month. On Monday, April 8, Bro. Wm. Banes and wife drove to the home of the writer, from whence together with a small company of Christ's followers, we repaired to the river where she was immersed in obedience to a hearty belief in the gospel and its commands. Arising with the name of Christ and the Father as her name, she looks forward to the day in which the richness of God's love shall be manifest. It is hoped that around this nucleus a large church may be established. There are others in the neighborhood who are interested in the truth. Also at Remington there is a field ripe for work. May the Father's blessings attend each and every one of them and may the use of restitution have their presence and assistance is the prayer of one who has a hearty interest in their welfare.

F. L. AUSTIN.

Editor Restitution:

After an absence of four months, I am again at home with my family. My trip has been one of observation and experience. My last appointment was at Ripley. The Conference Board of Illinois, through their secretary, Bro. Glotfelty, wrote me at St. Louis, to come by the way of Ripley, Illinois, and hold meetings at that point, but as Bro. Graham was holding meeting at Ripley, on my arrival, I went to Cooperstown and preached one week, had good attendance part of the time and good interest manifested. At Ripley I preached four discourses, Saturday night and three times on Sunday, and baptized two persons. The church at Ripley has new life and all in deep earnest. They seemingly have forgotten the things that are in the past, and are looking forward and pressing onward toward the mark for the prize for the high calling of God, which is in Christ the Anointed One. May the good fight of faith begun in the members of the body at Ripley continue to work until the crown is won. It has been over two years since I last preached at Ripley. I found quite a number of lively stones, stones as the Apostle Peter calls them, added to the church, through the good work done by Bro. Austin last winter. And right here while I think of it, I wish to say, where is Brother Austin? I have written him twice since I left for the State of Washington last December. I am waiting patiently for a letter from him.

I wish to say in reply to a number of letters that I have received from brethren in six States, which were too numerous for me to answer. In Sister Edda Mills report, she spoke of my throwing a bomb in their little camp. To satisfy those brethren I will say, the same kind of a bomb that I have been throwing for thirty-five years, and was the first that those who were believers of the gospel, and were baptized after they did believe, and then were overcomers, would rise in the first resurrection, which of course excluded pagans, Catholic and Protestant believers, and children. And the one faith was the faith of Abraham, and that any other faith was not a Bible faith. Consequently had none of God's promises in it and was powerless to save a man in the first resurrection. Here is one thing, so-called of THE RESTITUTIONERS are right there can not be any others right. It is only a little flock, so says Jesus, that will inherit the kingdom. All others will constitute the nations that are saved through Jesus Christ after his coming to bless all the families of the earth. May that long looked for time soon come, is my prayer.

Your brother in the one faith,

D. M. HEDLER.

Green Grove Church, Indiana.

I am pleased to report to the brotherhood that we have another Society in this State, known as "Green Grove Church," organized April 8th, 1900, by Bro. F. L. Austin, who conducted a series of meetings at that place last Fall, eleven miles south of Rensselaer, Indiana, with the result that fourteen persons were baptized into the Anointed, and these, together with several other believers, were formed into a church, nineteen in number. The officers are the following:—

Elders, C. E. Vincent, and J. Clark.

Deacons, Wm. M. Banes, and A. Morehead.

Treasurer, John Rush.

Deaconesses, Mrs. C. E. Vincent, and Mrs. Morehead.

Secretary, Wm. M. Banes.

Arrangements have been made with the undersigned to preach for the brethren every four weeks. This field, as far as we are able to judge, promises to develop into a good working body. We hope they may stand together in the defence of the truth as it is in Jesus, and that in this way much good may be done.

Yours in the work,

A. H. ZILMER.

The Census—Church of God, Attention.

We wish to say to the brethren throughout the United States, that up to date we have received replies to our appeal to the brotherhood, as follows:—Michigan Conference has reported through Sister Woodward. Illinois 7, Wisconsin 4, Kansas 2, Indiana 2, Pennsylvania 2, and one each from nine other states. Please, brethren, the time is short: there is only one month until the first of June, and if we wish to do our duty as we ought, we must hasten. Let the Secretaries of the various Conferences kindly furnish such information as they have in their possession, and let all the isolated ones consider this a personal matter and report at once, so that we may be able to give the Government the information they desire.

Yours in Christ. Committee,

B. W. WOODWARD.

A. H. ZILMER.

Brother Underwood:

If men and women would read their Bibles more, and think and study and talk more about what they read, they would know more, and be more like the Master—more spiritually minded, and know and care less about the things of this world, and have more time and disposition to love and serve God, and less time and disposition to enter and conform to this world. The Master earnestly advises to lay up treasure in heaven and not in earth, and tells the reason why. He also tells us that where our treasure is there will our heart (mind and affections) be also. And then he tells us that out of the abundance of the heart (or mind) the mouth speaks. And that we must give an account for all our idle words. Then if our words principally relate to this life, and to this world, then our treasure must be here, and we have been deceived and our tongue has given us away. Our words are an index to our heart. Let them be as becometh the gospel.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference.

The time will soon be here for tent work, and as the tent needs some repairs, we ask all that have subscribed to the work to send in the amount of your subscription, and all others who will help in the work send in what you can.

The work this year, with the possible exception of one meeting will be down the state line, south from Kansas City.

We want to get into the field at the earliest possible moment.

I think the reason the brethren do not receive greater blessings in their work is that they have gone out of the way. I would recommend that all the brethren read Malachi iii. 7-12, if the Lord would bless the united effort and obedience in that day, will he not do it now?

Brethren, let us lay aside our differences and enter the work with the "Gospel of the Kingdom," as our cry. Let us support the work with our best energies, our prayers and substance and the Lord will certainly bless our labors.

His Care.

God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if he trusted it to me,
I should be sad.

What if tomorrow's care were here
Without its rest?
I had rather be unlock the day,
And on the hours swing open say,
"My will is best."

The very dimness of my sight
Makes me aware.
For, groping in my misty way,
I feel his hand—I hear him say,
"My help is sure."

I cannot read his future plan,
But this I know.
I have the smiling of his face,
And all the refuge of his grace,
While here below.

Enough; this covers all my want,
And so I rest;
For what I cannot be can say,
And in his care I sure shall be Forever blest.

Zacharias.—Chapter 9.

1. A burden of the Lord's Word in a land of Sedrach and his sacrifice of Damaskos, because the Lord overseeth men and all the tribes of Israel.

2. And because in the boundaries thereof Tyre (Turos) and Sidoon became very thoughtful.

3. And Tyre built walled-places for her and treasured up silver like dust, and gathered together gold like the mud of the highways;

4. And therefore the Lord will inherit them and will smite into the seas her ability (or host) and she will have been lavishly wasted with fire.

5. Askaloon will see and will have feared, and Gaza will have suffered woe exceedingly. And Akkaroon because she hath been put to shame on account of her stumbling-step; and the king will perish from out Gaza and Askaloon shall not be inhabited.

6. And other races will dwell in Azootos and I shall take down the haughty-pride of other-tribes; (translated Philistines in C. V. and R. V.)

7. And I shall take away their blood out of their mouth and their abominations out of the midst of their teeth, and these people will have been left unto our God, and they will be a killarareh in Jouda, and Akkaroon like the Jebousaite;

8. And I shall put a prop under my house, so it will not go apart nor lean, and there will nevermore come one who driveth them out, because now I have seen with mine eyes.

9. Hail, hail, O thou daughter of Sioon, herald, O thou daughter of Hierousaleem: Lo, the King is coming unto thee justified and one who saveth; he is meek and mounted upon a beast of burden, even a young ass's colt.

10. And he will utterly destroy chariots from out Ephraim and horse from out Hierousaleem; and warlike bow will have been utterly destroyed, and fulness and peace from out nations; and he will subjugate waters of earth's sea and of the outflow of rivers.

11. And not in the blood of thy covenant didst thou send away thy prisoners out of a pit having no water.

12. Ye will sit down in walled-places, ye prisoners of the synagogue, and in return for one day of thy sojourning I shall repay thee double;

13. For I have stretched thee, O Jouda, a bow for myself, and I have filled thee with Ephraim, and I shall raise up thy offspring, O Sioon, against the offspring of the Greeks and I shall feel for thee as for a warrior's sword.

14. And the Lord will be against them, and he will go out like a bolt of lightning, and the All-controlling Lord will blow in a trumpet and will go his way with a leap of his threatening.

15. The All-controlling Lord will hold a shield over them, and they will lavishly destroy those and will pour them down with sling-stones and drink them down like wine, and they will fill the mixing-bowls as an altar is filled.

16. And the Lord their God will save them in that day, his laity like sheep; for sacred stones will roll upon his land.

17. Because if there be anything good of his and if there be anything of his that is beautiful, these will be food for young men and wine of sweet smell for virgins.

CHAPTER 10.

1. Ask from the Lord rain in due season, an early and latter rain; the Lord hath caused appearances, and he will give them a spring rain, to each one herbage in the field.

2. Because the mutterers have talked wearisome things and the diviners false ways of seeing and lying dream-vision have they talked, vain consolers have they been; therefore have they withered like sheep, and suffered evil because there was no healing.

3. My anger hath become embittered against the shepherds, and I shall take an oversight of the lambs: and the All-controlling Lord God will take an oversight of his flock, the house of Jouda, and he will array them like his goodly horse in war.

4. And from him hath he taken his look and from him hath he arranged himself and from him hath he taken a bow in anger; from him will every one who marcheth in the same array go out.

5. And they will be like warriors who tread the mud in the highways in war, and they will array themselves, because the Lord is with them; and riders of horses will have been put to shame.

6. And I shall strengthen the house of Jouda, and the house of Joseph I shall save and I shall give them a dwelling-place because I have loved them, and they will be as though I had not turned them away, because I am the Lord their God, and I shall hearken to them.

7. And they will be like warriors of Ephraim and their heart will be glad as with wine; and their offspring will have rejoiced, and their heart will joy in the Lord.

8. I shall show them a sign and receive them to myself, because I shall redeem them and they will have been made many, even as they were many.

9. And I shall sow them among latties and those afar off will have remembered me, they will bring up their offspring and they will return.

10. And I shall return them out of a land of Aiguptos, and I shall receive them out from among Assurians, and I shall lead them into the Galaaditis and into the Libanos, and there shall not be one of them left behind.

11. And they will pass through a narrow sea and they will smite the waves in the sea, and all the depths of rivers will have been dried up, and all the pride of Assurians will have been taken away. And the sceptre of Aiguptos will have been taken off.

12. And I shall make them strong in the Lord their God, and in his name will they boast, saith the Lord.

COMMENT.

The word "burden" with which this 9th chapter begins has a very singular history in the use the prophets made of it. The word primitively means received. Then the sum total received as "revenue" derived from the receipt of customs or taxes. When there had been an oracular delivery to the prophet and the rulers and elders of the people had been called together to receive it, if the verbatim delivery proved to be long, the leaders would become impatient and ask for the substance or gist of the matter in fewer words to be given them by the prophet and then in their repetition and delivery of the same to the people carelessly or wickedly charge the meaning of this "burden of the Lord." This sin we find becomes such a crying evil that in Hieremia's (Jeremiah) time he was instructed to utterly prohibit this way of delivering "the Word of the Lord" and any further use at all of this term "burden" as applied to it. The exact words of the Lord and not their substance or interpretation must be given whether the people understood and would receive them or not.

"The burden" in this case, as the reader will see, was "a sacrifice of the Lord in the land of Sedrach (a very ancient name of this whole country) including Tyre, Sidon, Askalon, Akkaron, Azotos, Gaza, etc., included in what is commonly known as the land of the Philistines. This prophecy as far as it relates to this people and this land was literally fulfilled. The supplementary prophecy relating to Sioon and Hierousaleem has not all been fulfilled yet; but looks forward to "the restoration of all things as spoken by the mouth of all the prophets since there was an animate-age."

The 10th chapter opens with instruction and reproof for their idolatrous apostasies present and past, and the rest of the chapter is devoted to a sure promise of help for Jouda in his humiliation and distress and a still fuller picture than in the 9th chapter of ultimate restoration and glory of Israeel, "the hope of Israeel," as Paul called it in his day, and for which he finally suffered martyrdom.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Zionist Meeting.

The meeting of the Zionists in Baltimore, April 23, was the most remarkable meeting I ever attended, remarkable in a good many different ways. To begin with, it was not advertized in the local dailies. I had seen a short notice that there would be a mass-meeting of the kind several days previous to date mentioned; but not knowing that I could be in town had not charged my memory with time, place, etc., but happening to be in Baltimore and having the leisure, I resolved to attend, thinking of course that all I would have to do would be to turn to the advertizing columns of a daily paper, but in vain we searched both "religious" and "special" columns, and only after considerable walking round and discovering the address of a Hebrew prominent in the movement did we get the particulars.

Another surprise was that they charged admission at the door, 10 and 25 cents. This was remarkable, considering that it was not advertized, and people poured in and filled the large hall to the doors. It was a motly crowd, there seemed to be all kinds, from the fashionable dressed belle of Eutau Place to the emigrant sweater and second hand dealer in Harrison Street. But it was orderly and democratic, no distinction seemingly was made, but the 10 and 25 cent kind. Another surprise was that all the speaking and singing was in German and Hebrew, and although the enthusiasm was intense and the musical interludes were exceedingly beautiful, yet the most interesting meeting in the world will pall on one after a while if he does not understand a word spoken, so that it will be readily understood that after an hour and a half in unknown tongues, it was like a great load taken from both head and heart when Dr. S. S. Wise of New York delivered himself in English, magnificent and eloquent English without the faintest trace of a foreign accent even.

It would be impossible for me to reproduce or represent the arguments of the gifted speaker. I had no means at hand to take notes, and even if I had it was not so much what he said, as the way he said it, that gave the meaning he intended, sometimes humor, wit, pathos, sarcasm, indignation, all rolled out volubly, and in everything he showed the gentleman and scholar, but it was plain that he had been raised in a world where the word Christianity was synonymous for all that is base, idolatrous and contemptible—humorously contemptible, the Dr. did not say so in so many words in fact he spoke briefly of the Christian ministers who were friends of his and quoted from them in depreciation of his own national brethren who were antagonising the movement. On one occasion he referred to an argument of some minister before the recent "ecumenical council" in New York, if I remember rightly, that minister had stated that the conversion of the Jews now seemed possible as they, the Jews, had given up the idea of returning again to Zion and all hope of natural regeneration. Then with scathing rhetoric picturing the awful sufferings of the Hebrew brethren at the present time in Europe and the callous heathenness of the money-loving Jews here—"hogs," he called them, "such are not worth saving to Christianity even or any thing else."

But these are only given as specimens of Dr. Wise's foibles, the general tone of his address was lofty, pure and noble in the extreme and expressed the sentiments of the "intellectual" and its burden was the restoration of Zion, the establishing again of Israel's nationality. It was a political meeting, yet it was so different from any thing else in the way of politics that I have ever seen. There was the spirit of reverence running all through it, there was no Parisian la revanche, no bowery Irish nursing of old wrongs and defeats under Cromwell and the Stuarts. It was a cry of present anguish, a wail for deliverance from actual distress and imminent danger and the aspirations were for Israel as the [illegible] world, the bringing of salvation [illegible] their present oppressors.

Among other things Dr. Wise said that the Jews in Europe are in more danger today than at any time during the last hundred years. By some recent enactment in Roumania about a thousand men, women and children have been turned out to wander penniless and homeless. Every year brings more stringent laws in regard to the Jews. Turkey is the only friend of the Jews in Europe, outside of England. By some recent laws in Turkey the Jews are permitted the rights of citizenship. Speaking "as one who is in the inside of the movement," the Dr. said that there were prospects of the realization of some of their hopes in the near future.

In conclusion, I would like to say that another remarkable thing about the meeting was that although it was doubtless the largest public meeting held in the city on the same date, and although we watched the papers next day for an account of it and a synopsis translation, at least of the other speakers, we could only find one newspaper that had noticed it with a little high and a half or so paragraph, which had evidently been written by the office boy or the "printer's devil." When we consider that columns and pages are devoted to alleged Christian sermons every Monday morning, it seems to me that this is the most remarkable thing about it, for there was no attempt at secrecy, saving the 10 cent bar, and I don't suppose the press would have been restrained by that even.

J. F. GELLETLY.

The Inheritance.

The Savior in his memorable sermon on the Mount, used these words, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Now, this does not agree with the modern theology of today, as we hear it taught by men who can boast of their college education, and training for the ministry, they tell us of the great reward that awaits us in heaven, and when we die, the soul leaves the body or house, and goes off to heaven to get its reward and sits down on the right hand of the Father forever after. Now, if this be true, Jesus could not have understood the Scriptures very well when he said, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5. By turning to Psa. xxxvii., we can find where Jesus got his authority for using those words. David says, "The meek shall inherit the earth: and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." But says one, the meek are inhabiting the earth now; very true, but then we will have to admit the fact, that the wicked have the supremacy at present by a large majority. Now, David did not mean it that way at all, for he says, "Such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." And again he says, "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it." Yes, dear friends, then and not till then, "The meek shall see the abundance of peace," and not before. How could the righteous be in peace now, with all the turmoil and wickedness that is going on around them at present, but thanks be to God, there is a time coming, when all will be peace and harmony, for God has said, "My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places." Isa. xxxii. 18. In every case where God promises man an inheritance, it has been the earth and not heaven. When God called Abraham and told him to go into a land that he would show him, and when Abraham had obeyed, and came into the land of Canaan, God made a covenant with him, and tells him to "Look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward, for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Has Abraham got possession of that land yet? No, he has not, for Stephen tells us that, "God gave him none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." Acts vii. 5. "The Scriptures say, Abraham believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness."

A little farther on we find that Jacob had a dream, "And behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it; and, behold the Lord stood above it, and said I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land where on thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed." Gen. xxviii. 12-13. God did not say, Come up here and get thy inheritance, no, he says nothing of the kind, but he says, "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it." David says, "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Psa. cxv. 16. Again he says, "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Psa. xxxviii. 29. And in Prov. ii. 21, it says, "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." And again, "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be for ever, but the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Psa. xxxviii. 18-20. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them: and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." Psa. xlix. 14. When Christ has raised the sleeping dead, and has subdued all authorities and powers, and the last enemy death has been destroyed, then will the meek inherit the earth, and dwell therein forever, in the abundance of peace, for we read, "That there remaineth a rest for the children of God." Heb. iv. 9.

Now, my dear brothers and sisters in the faith, are we laboring earnestly to enter into that day of rest, for Paul tells us to "Press earnestly forward toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God, set before us in Christ Jesus." "For the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes it."

Submitted in love of the truth and a hope of an eternal inheritance in the coming kingdom.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 16, 1900. NUMBER 19.

Walter Tomlinson St. Kingston

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations: the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Dear Restitution:

The greatest trouble met with today by the workers in God's vineyard, is the disposition of most persons, to look upon the dark side of everything. We complain that only a very small per cent of the great mass of the human family understand God's plan of salvation and only a very small per cent of those, who profess to know and follow the blessed Master, really and truly understand his teachings. Then again we complain that of those who do understand the way, only a small per cent do what they ought to do, to promote and push forward the truth. The attendance on divine service is small. The preachers become discouraged, because the people do not manifest more interest. The people are not satisfied because the preachers are unable to compel their relatives and friends to obey the gospel. Various reasons are urged why the lack of interest is so great. Suppose, for the sake of argument, we admit all this to be true, what does it signify? Who is responsible for this condition of things? Is God's plan a failure? Do not let us become discouraged or faint by the way. God is at the helm and all is well.

R. S. DURHAMS.

MARRIED.

Brother Claude Morris and Sister Lizzie Moore were married at her home in Oak Park, Illinois, at high noon, Wednesday, May 9, 1900. These young people are the salt of the earth. They met for the first time about the time Bro. Butler held meetings here a year ago last March. They soon became interested in the truth, and at the close of the series of meetings they, together with Mrs. S. J. Lindsay, were baptized by Bro. Butler. They are young people of splendid attainments, both having taught school for a number of years. Both are inclined to music. The service that they will be able to render the church at Oregon in the way of advancing the truth will only be definitely known when the King comes. May God bless them in all their walks of life.

We hope to have a full delegate representation, and extend an invitation to all who may have a desire to attend.

A committee on programme has been appointed and will report in due time.

P. L. AUSTIN, Pres.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 16, 1900.

THE Dowager Empress, mother of Kaiser William of Germany is seriously ill, and her death may be expected at any time.

FRENCH troops under command of Colonel Bertrand have taken possession of Knarigli, which gives them complete control of the Morocco frontier.

VESUVIUS has been on the active list for some days past, and the people in the towns near its base have left their homes to seek safety from lava and ashes.

THE Labor troubles in many of our larger cities is causing much uneasiness. Fighting between strikers and police is common, and the out-look is not bright.

A DISPATCH from Bombay tells of the ravages of cholera in the famine camps. There were 400 deaths in three days at Maudvi, and the cases at Godhra the authorities were unable to collect and bury the dead, the bodies lying in the sun for days. A similar state of things prevails at other places. Out of 210 cases of bubonic plague at Sydney, Australia the official reports show 75 deaths.

A SHORT note from Brother Joblin written May 11, informs us that he is very sick, being unable to lie down, and not able to walk, for want of breath. His wife also is quite sick. We shall miss his usual words of wisdom, but will not ask him to write while he feels so bad. We trust the Lord will preserve their lives, for truly the world needs these staunch upholders of his Word. Remember them when you pray.

TAKE notice of the Conference calls and appoint delegates in time, and instruct them in any business you wish brought before the meetings. Make arrangements, all who can, to be there at the first meeting, and stay to the last. The signs of the times indicate a change before long, and your chances to work for the Master are growing fewer every year. This is a reason why we should redouble our energies and work the harder. Attend the Conferences, and give aid to others and get help for yourself.

WE dislike very much to do so, but we are compelled to again call attention of a number of our subscribers to their delinquency. Surely, brethren, you do not want to subject us to the expense of sending statements to each one. You certainly know if you have paid for your paper for 1900. You will remember the last time you paid, and you surely know that we must have our money in order to do our work. Please look up your account, and if you are owing us, send the money at once. You can surely be trusted to attend to this, and save us farther anxiety.

THE South African war is being forced by the British. Lord Roberts has entered Kroonstad, the new Free State Capital, President Steyn fleeing to Lindley. Many of the prisoners taken say they are glad to be made prisoners, as they are tired of fighting a hopeless fight, and see no reason why they should throw away their lives. The Boer army has now retired to the Vaal River. Whether they will make a stand there or fall back to Pretoria will be known before very long. The report comes that Mafeking has been relieved at last, and the war may now be carried direct to the heart of the Dutch Republic.

A LECTURER in Chicago recently said, "We are not to tie ourselves down to Jesus Christ, but to transcend from him. Jesus is to be a Guide, but not our Master." L. A. Crandall of the Memorial Baptist Church, in commenting on these words said: "The true measurements of life are moral rather than intellectual. It is not what one knows, but what he is that determines his stature as a man. The one who illustrates in his own life the beauty of a flawless character and who renders to his fellows the most signal service in their struggle for moral and spiritual perfection, has a right to be the world's master. Such is the position occupied by Christ. When some one arises whose character is purer, whose service to humanity is greater, then we may flatter ourselves that the world has passed beyond him."

AT Barcelona and Valencia, Spain, very serious riots have occured owing to an obnoxious tax law. The military was called out and fired into the crowd, killing several people.

ALL is not pleasant in China as the following dispatch will indicate:—"The Shanghai correspondent of the Express sends a sensational message regarding the revolutionary temper of the southern China provinces, into which 20,000 Mauser rifles were recently imported. The Mandarins, he says, are joining a movement against the Empress, and a fire may start the train at any moment.

EMPEROR Francis Joseph of Austria, replying to an address from the delegations with reference to his visit to Berlin said:—"In the intimate relations of the allies so clearly manifested at Berlin I find a happy complement of the excellent relations between Austria, Hungary, and all the powers, especially Russia. May this augur firm conditions for the continuing maintenance of peace."

A REPORT from Japan says the work of fortifying at Port Arthur by the Russians, and of building the railroad to that point is being pushed with feverish haste. During March and April 100,000 coolies were shipped in from China to work on the railway. Large quantities of coal and military stores are being laid in, and the steadily increasing number of Russian troops stationed there is far in excess of what are needed to protect the railroads.

THE most important matter to come before the Presbyterian General Assembly at St. Louis this week is the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith. It may not be practical to complete the work this year, but a committee will be given the task to report on by next year. The Methodists in their General Conference in Chicago, have under contemplation some very radical changes in their discipline, all of which shows the faults in man-made institutions. If these people would stop revising and throw away bodily the whole thing, take their Bibles and study them, there would be some hope, but as it is, only confusion will result.

THE Nationalists now have a majority in the Council seats of Paris, and as they are coupled with the Socialists, the Ministry of France is in a very peculiar position. This is best shown by the words of Gambetta who is quoted as saying "No one governs France without Paris." When the election returns were known, crowds assembled, shouting, "Down with Loubet," "Long live the army," "Long live the French fatherland," "Into the Seine with the Jews," etc. Women were numerous in the crowds, and such scenes have not been witnessed since the days of Boulangerism. A report that President Loubet had been assassinated was started, and caused a panic on the Bourse.

IN another column will be found a brief obituary of Bro. Benjamin Wilson, prepared by his nephew Thomas Wilson. While in the nature of things we expect events of this kind to occur, yet the constitution of mankind is such that there is always a shock when word comes of the death of another. It would be folly in the writer to attempt to add any words to what has been said, or to tell over what is well known to many of the life work of Benjamin Wilson. When a boy our home was near Geneva, Ill., where for years he resided, and "Uncle Benjamin," together with his brothers, Uncle James, Uncle Joseph, and Uncle John, were frequent visitors at my father's house, where many times they with others talked of the Blessed Hope that has been theirs through life's changes, and if the precious promises that sustained them each as they entered the silent state to rest till the angel of the Lord shall call. We say "Good by, Uncle Benjamin," and pray that we each may so live as to meet him in the kingdom of God.

The Baptism of John the Baptist and that of Jesus Christ.

The following request was sent to me a few days ago:—
A. H. Zilmer:

Will you kindly explain in brief article through THE RESTITUTION, the difference between the baptism of John and the baptism of Jesus? For the enlightenment of

A SEARCHER AFTER TRUTH.

I will say in reply to the above, that by the "baptism of Jesus," I understand the baptism which he authorized his apostles to administer to those who should hear and obey the gospel of the kingdom. The work of John was preparatory, as will appear by reference to the following Scriptures: Matt. iii. 3; Mark i. 3; Luke iii 4; John i. 23; iii. 27. John was the connecting link between the Old and the New dispensations. Jesus said concerning him, "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until (or up to) John." Matt. xi. 13. His work was introductory to that of the great Prophet that was to come into the world. Ages before God had said through Moses, "A prophet like unto me will the Lord your God raise up unto you from among your brethren: him shall ye hear." His Word was to be final "In all things whatsoever he should say to the people." John was, in the true sense, "the messenger sent before the face of the Lord," to prepare the way and herald his coming. As was the work of the Baptist—in a limited sense also his baptism. He was not "that Light" (John i. 8) but was sent to bear witness of the light. Instead of an indistinct anticipation of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, he announces that the kingdom had drawn near, and in view of this, earnestly commanded the people to repent and be baptized for the remission of sins. Now, every promise of God will ultimately find its fulfillment in Jesus Christ. The establishment of the kingdom had long before been predicted by the prophets of old, but before this could be accomplished, he who should "rule over the house of Jacob" must appear and be presented to the people as the One designed for this purpose. In the days of John "the fulness of time," appointed in the economy of God, had come (Mark i. 15; Gal. iv. 4); the Messiah was about to be introduced to the people, and it was the mission of John to prepare them for this event. John's work was not final; that is, it was not the ultimate object at which the Almighty aimed in sending him out to preach. It was only intended to prepare the way of the Lord when he should come. When Jesus appeared, John said, "He is among you whom ye know not," and added that "he must increase, while I must decrease. He is greater than I. I indeed baptize you in water; but he shall baptize you in Holy Spirit and fire." The effect of John's testimony must indeed be said to have been remarkable in preparing a people for the Lord. No doubt there were many among those who had been baptized by him who turned away from their sins, and in this way their hearts were made receptive for the truth as it should be presented by the Lord Jesus himself. We are told that the baptism of John was "for the remission of sins," the same as the baptism of Christ later on. Yet we find that the baptism of John was not "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ," as it was administered by the apostles, or, as in Matt. xxviii. 19, "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," which is virtually the same. It is furthermore a fact that the baptism into which believers of the gospel are baptized, is "into Christ's death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead, so we also should walk in newness of life." Rom. vi. 1-4. The death of Jesus Christ had not taken place in the days of John, and hence no one could be baptized into the death of Christ until Christ had died. Jesus himself is the "Mediator of the New Covenant," and as such he administers the same according to his own will, subject to the Father. "All authority in heaven and on earth" had been given him, and thus he had the right to send men into all the world to preach the gospel and to baptize believers according to his will. The baptism of Jesus is the uniform plan of salvation in the present age. The command is, "Believe the gospel, repent of sins, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins." This order will not be changed, because it pertains to the everlasting covenant.

"As many of you as have been baptized into Jesus Christ, have put on Christ." This is done by being baptized into his name, and thus by obedience to his gospel we obtain a title to everything that is his; are made "Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 26-29. All this goes far beyond the baptism of John. It is not to be wondered at that some of John's disciples who had been baptized into his baptism, and had not been instructed as to the Christ who had actually come, were baptized "in the name of the Lord Jesus," when Paul explained the differences between the two. Acts xix. In a few words the difference between the baptism of John and that of Jesus is, that the former was introductory and hence temporary, while the latter is permanent at least as far as it relates to the gospel age.

Obituary.

Robert McChesney was born in Butler Co., Ohio, March 8, 1827; died May 5, 1900; aged 73 years, 1 month and 27 days. He moved with his parents to Marshall County, Ind., in 1847. Was married to Jeanette M. Burch, Dec. 24, 1854. To this union were born twelve children. His wife and six children preceded him to the grave, she dying Dec. 22, 1881. He was a kind father, a good neighbor, and was respected by all who knew him. He leaves three sons, three daughters, one brother, and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn his death. Bro. McChesney was baptized about one year ago and united with the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith at North Salem, Marshall Co., Ind. Funeral services were held in home community and he was laid away in the family grave yard to await the summons of the Master.

F. L. AUSTIN.

I am requested by his only son, to send you a notice of the death of my uncle Benjamin Wilson, of Sacramento, Cal.

He was born in Halifax, England, on Feb. 17, 1817, and died on the morning of May 8th, 1900, aged 83 years, 2 months and 19 days.

He was confined to his room and bed for some weeks, but did not suffer as much pain as he had anticipated. It seemed to be a failure of life's powers—a gradual succumbing to the inevitable. He was attended most of the time by Sister Nettie Shattuck, as nurse, who ministered to his needs, and from her we learn of his strong hope of life through Christ, and of his clearness of perception, and mental powers to the last. He loved to hear the Word of God read, and to commune with his Savior in prayer. He sent me word that he knew he was entering "the valley of the shadow of death," but he added "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me," and "he feared no evil."

At his request I went to Sacramento and spoke words appropriate to the occasion, to the friends who gathered to pay their last tribute of love and respect to the deceased. The floral offerings were plenteous and beautiful. At the grave everything was tasteful and perfect. The earth removed from the grave was banked up on one side, and entirely covered with fresh cut grass, and in addition, beautiful and large fresh roses were seen about a foot apart over the entire mound, which gave it an appearance of a bed of roses with green foundation. A combination of tent and awning was erected near the grave, where the friends and mourners were seated during the closing services.

The life work of "Uncle Benjamin" is so well known to THE RESTITUTION readers that it would be almost superfluous for me to relate it. I might add, however, that he was practically a self-educated man, having left school when a mere boy. His has been a life of continuous activity. His long connection with the Gospel Banner, as editor and publisher, and his never-to-be-forgotten labor in the production of the "Emphatic Diaglott" are landmarks in his life's history that will remain for many years to come.

His partner in life, Alice Wilson, whom he married in England, passed to her rest not many years after coming to California, where they removed in 1871. All of their children have been laid to rest but one, Edwin B., with whom he has resided for about 13 years past.

Perhaps I cannot better close this brief sketch than by adding the following extracts from an article that appeared in the Evening Bee of Sacramento, May 9th.

"Yesterday, in this city, there passed away, at the age of 83 years, a noted man. Not great because he had builded for himself a name in the political or religious world, but great because he has left to the student of the Bible and Christian religion one of the most remarkable translations of the New Testament now extant. This version is known as the "Emphatic Diaglott."..... In the course of his study and research he discovered that the King James' translation of the New Testament contained a great many errors and inconsistencies which he believed were not in keeping with the teachings of Christ or the early fathers of the Christian Church. Among the doctrines and teachings of modern theology that he could not harmonize with what he believed to be the teachings of the early Church were the following: Infant damnation, infant baptism, fore-ordination, doctrine of eternal torment, inherent immorality of the soul, and the doctrine of the Trinity.....The dead author who has just closed his four score years, was one of the least pretentious and unassuming of men, never seeking the praise of mankind, or the glitter of the world. He never would refer to his life work unless interrogated concerning some disputed theological doctrine, and then his reply would invariably be: 'The original manuscripts, when translated by those who have no creed to serve, reads thus and thus.' The author's work has never become popular with members of modern theology, and perhaps never will; at least, that was the author's opinion. Deceased was the father of C. B. Wilson, a contractor of this city."

THOMAS WILSON.

Eli C. Renner was born in Ogle Co., Illinois, May 21, 1838, and died at his home six miles north of Brooklyn, March 28, 1900. He was married to Martha M. Nipe, Jan. 9, 1862. There were born to this union twelve children, nine of whom still survive. There were five sons and seven daughters. He resided in Illinois until the year 1871, when he came to Poweshiek county, Iowa, where he has since resided until the time of his death. He was in apparently good health on the very day of his death. He had made no complaints of feeling ill. He went to the barn about noon or a little before to care for the stock. He remained away long enough to excite the fear of his wife, but the rest of the family felt no anxiety. One of the sons went to the stable to turn out his horses and found the father lying on the floor behind the cows with life entirely extinct. A physician was called but all in vain. The funeral services were held in the Kent school house where a large concourse of friends had gathered to pay their last respects. Dr. Benson officiated, taking for the text, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." His theme was, "The surprise of death." The remains were laid in the Kent cemetery. Mr. Renner was of a gentle and quiet disposition devoting himself entirely to the interests of his family and farm. He was a kind husband, an indulgent father, and a good neighbor. He was reared in the Restitution faith, and although not a member of the church adhered to that belief through life. His friends extend their sympathy and condolence to the bereaved family.

Mrs. Mary Renner nee Cunning, was born in Maryland, July 3, 1814, and died at the home of her son, Eli Renner, March 30, 1900. She married Samuel Renner in the year 1836. There were born to this union four children, two sons and two daughters. One of the daughters died in infancy. In 1838, they settled on a farm in Ogle County, Illinois. Her husband died Sept. 1844. Her daughter Mrs. John Bope died Dec. 24, 1890. Her son Eli Renner died March 28, 1900, leaving one son to survive her, Henry Renner of Belle Plaine. Mrs. Renner was of a deeply religious nature. She united with the church of the Restitution faith early in life, and has lived an earnest, conscientious Christian life all her days. She has been in feeble health for a long time and entirely dependent upon others. But she was always so grateful and appreciative for the kindness of her friends that she felt she never could be sufficiently thankful. She had been very feeble for many weeks past and her decease was expected almost any time. While the body of her son was being prepared for the casket she suddenly passed away, thus making two corpse in the same house at the same time. The funeral services were held on Sabbath afternoon at the Kent school house. They were conducted by Dr. Benson of Brooklyn, who spoke from the text: "I am the resurrection and the life." A large number of friends laid her to rest in the adjoining cemetery to wait the final resurrection. She was greatly beloved by the family and friends, and the family so suddenly bereft of two of its members is cast down with sorrow. The neighbors and friends extend earnest sympathy to the sorrowing relatives.

Fell asleep in Jesus, April 22, 1900, Theodore Button, of brain tumor; born April 20, 1843, near Libertyville, Lake Co., Ill., and has always lived in this State, excepting ten years spent in Tennessee, where he met and married Miss Fanny McCowan. To them were born four children, all boys, and they with the faithful sorrowing wife are left in the lonely home to wait the summons, or meet the coming Christ. Bro. Button was immersed into the Christ about the year 1860, and his godly life, his pure, clean conversation, will always stand as witness of his fidelity to the cause he loved so well. He sleeps to be awakened early in the blessed resurrection morning. May God keep the wife and children faithful to the end. Funeral services were held from their home in Austin, Ill., by the writer, using the Apostle's beautiful words, 1 Thes. iv. 13 to end.

B. W. WOODWARD.

Christ Bears Our Griefs.

They tell us that in some trackless lands when one passes through the pathless forest he breaks a twig ever and anon as he goes, that those who come after may see the traces of his having been there, and may know that they are not out of the road. Oh, when we are journeying through the murky night and the dark woods of affliction and sorrow it is something to find here and there a spray broken or a leafy stem bent down with the tread of his foot and the brush of his hand as he passed, and to remember that the path he trod he has hallowed, and thus to find lingering fragrance and hidden strength in the remembrance of him as "in all points tempted like as we are," bearing grief for us, bearing grief with us, bearing grief like us. Oh, do not, do not keep these sacred thoughts of Christ's companionship in sorrow for the largest trials of life. If the mote in the eye be large enough to annoy you, it is large enough to bring out his sympathy, and if the grief be too small for him to commassionate and share, it is too small for you to be troubled by it. If you are ashamed to apply that divine thought, "Christ bears grief with me," to those petty mole hills that you magnify into mountains sometimes, think to yourselves that then it is a shame for you to be stumbling over them. But, on the other hand, never fear to be too irreverent or too familiar in the thought Christ is willing to bear, and help you bear, the pettiest, the minutest and most insignificant of the daily annoyances that may come to ruffle you.—Alexander Maclaren.

A Growing Light.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Prov. iv. 18. People who are right with God never have to travel in the dark. Even when it is dark to all the rest of the world they have a constantly growing light. Nothing can happen to a Christian that may not result in his good. No trial can overtake him that will not tell him more of God. He walks in a sure place and knows that there are no pitfalls before him, but the wicked are in the most danger when they feel the safest. When midnight comes to the wicked it will be high noon for the righteous. Let us walk in the light of Christ, and let us be lights to guide the feet of others unto the good and right way.

Poetry.

He Restoreth My Soul.

I am often so weary of sorrow,
So weary of struggling with sin,
So timid concerning the morrow,
So faithless of entering in
To the beautiful rest that remaineth
Secure in the city of God,
Where shall enter no evil that staineth,
Nor even the speller hath trod.

But aye when the struggle is sorest,
And dark are the clouds on my soul,
Dear Lord, the sweet cup that thou pourest
Has balm, and I drink and am whole.
From the quenchless old well of salvation
I quaff the pure waters divine,
And a sense of triumphant elation
Is thrilled through this spirit of mine.

No hand but thine own, blessed Master,
Could comfort and cheer in the day
When the touch of a sudden disaster
Has cumbered and tangled the way,
No look but thine own could illumine
When night gathers black o'er the land,
And strength that is failing and human
Lies prone on the desolate strand.

But ever thy help is the nearest
When help from the earth there is none,
And ever the word that is dearest
Is the word of the Crucified Son;
And aye when the tempest-clouds gather
I fly for sweet shelter and peace
Through the Son to the heart of the Father,
The terror and tremor shall cease.

He restoreth my soul, and I praise him
Whose love is my christ and crown;
He restoreth my soul; let me raise him
A song that his mercy will own.
For often so weary of sorrow,
So weary of fighting with sin,
I looked and I long for the morrow
When the ransomed their freedom shall win.

Matthew xxv.

Bro. Joblin asks that the search light be turned on Matt. xxv. A motion which I heartily second, for I believe this chapter when correctly understood, to be in perfect harmony with other Scriptures and to contain a rich mine of the hidden purpose of God. To my mind much of the cause of confusion lie in verses 31-32, which seem to fix the scene so vividly described at the coming of the Lord. But the understanding evidently clashes with much plain Scripture, which places the judgment of the dead and living nations at the end of the thousand years, hence the confusion. It has been suggested that the class referred to by the Lord as "my brethren" may be fleshly Israel, and that whole nations may be accepted or rejected upon the grounds alone of their treatment of those fleshly Jews. But it is difficult for me to believe that he of whom it is written "judgment and justice are the habitation of his throne," would admit into his kingdom, even the best of nations known to history, for all are filthy and corrupt, all maintain prisons filled to overflowing with fiends in human form. The masses of all nations practice adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, hatred, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, and murderers; and such we are plainly told cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Gal. v. 21. This being true how can we believe that the Son of Man will say to any nation or company of nations, "Come ye blessed of my Father and inherit the kingdom," etc. Neither is it in accordance with other Scriptures that the age lasting fire that shall consume the wicked will be kindled prior to the great white throne judgment of Rev. xx. Again we who understand and hold the truth believe that mortal nations will people the earth during the thousand years' reign of our Lord and his saints. That sin and death will prevail then as now, but in a lesser degree; that "the child shall die an hundred years old, but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." Will some brother, who knows, explain how these things can be, if all nations are gathered at the coming of the Lord and cast into age-lasting fire along with the devil and his angels or given eternal life in the kingdom of God as Matt. xxv. is supposed by many good and honest people to teach. But let us take another and different view. We will suppose that the judgment scene of Matt. xxv. and the great white throne judgment of Rev. xx. are identical, and difficulties melt away like a summer's snow. But says the objecter that of Matt. xxv. is at the coming of the Lord. Let us examine again verses 31-32 in the hope that harmony may be found in God's Word. We will first read verse 31, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all his holy angels (messengers) with him. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Now the space between those verses represents the thousand years. Inspiration makes one grand leap over that period. Verse 31 records the ushering in of that glorious epoch. Verse 32 pictures its close. But says the objector, can a parallel case be produced from the Word? I answer there can. Turn to 1 Cor. xv. 22-24 "For as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. * * * Then cometh the end when he shall have delivered the kingdom up to God the Father, etc." Here again inspiration leaps over the space of one thousand years, touching only the beginning and ending of that period. If then our premises be correct and the judgment scene of Matt. xxv. be but another picture of the great white throne judgment of Rev. xx. then that honored company related to by the King as "these my brethren" are the "royal priesthood." "that peculiar people," "the nation of kings and priests," "the despised of the earth whipped and scourged by men, imprisoned and starved, torn by beasts, beheaded, crucified and burned at the stake. But now alive in glory and clothed with power for evermore. Then may not the sheep and the goats be "the rest of the dead that lived not again till the thousand years are finished." Rev. xx. 5. Together with the living nations of the earth who have "come up and compassed the camp of the saints about and the beloved city." Rev. xx. 9. It would seem that one at least of the grounds of acceptance or rejection is to be the attitude which they have manifested towards the gospel and those who proclaimed it during this the gospel age.

In evidence of this view I might quote much, but Mark ix. 41-42 will suffice, "For whosoever shall give you a cup of water in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea." Now, let me ask you kind reader, at what period in the history of the world were Christ's brethren hungry and thirsty, sick and strangers, naked and in prison? There can be but one answer, viz., During the term of their natural lives. Then who are that company classed as sheep and goats? Why, manifestly those peoples or nations among whom God's people have lived, labored and suffered from Adam down to this present time and forward to the coming of the Lord. If all this be so it would seem to follow, that before the scene of Matt. xxv. can take place, not only the living nations must be gathered but the "sea must give up the dead which are in it, and death and hell deliver up the dead which are in them," which brings us (does it not) to the great white throne of Rev. xx. The closing scene in the great drama of human life. I love this understanding of the chapter in question, for if correct it reveals the suspicion of a length and width, a heighth and depth in the purpose of God toward his creatures, hardly dreamed of by many who hold the truth. That company on the right hand of the King are taken from and belong to this age in which we live. They are not accepted upon a basis of faith and obedience to the gospel. They are not kings and priests, not brethren of Christ. The accidents of birth, peculiar environments or adverse circumstances may have prevented their reaching that exalted position. And yet it would seem that God in his mercy, justice and wisdom has provided a place for such in his blessed kingdom, and here I rest the matter upon what condition or plan the tender mercies of a loving Father can reach out to and around a good and honest heart, shut out by circumstances over which it had no control. I would not even venture an opinion, but trust in a well defined hope, that the Abrahamic promise, "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" is capable of a much wider application, than is generally given it by short-sighted humanity.

Apocalypse xiv. 1.

The "and" commencing the 14th chapter indicates consecutiveness in the scenic manifestations. The operations of that organized sin-power in its various manifestations have been going on all through the centuries; and now a change in the scenery is introduced in the order recorded, "And I saw, and behold a Lamb standing upon the Mount Zion, and with him 144,000 having his name and the name of his Father written on their foreheads." There can be no mistake in identifying the party here presented—placed conspicuously so that they can be known and read of all men. The time was and is when the person, name and rank of the Lamb continued to be unrecognized by the party now with the Lamb. In our common intercourse with men and things, we find no difficulty in knowing United States soldiers and other servants of the government. And so also with those who serve the railroad and express companies to any extent.

The Lamb in his sacrificial aspect, the basis of his "Lion" aspect—v. 5, 9—when about to enter upon his career of conquest, as a fitting sequel to his offering for sin, in order to individual and national reconciliation. "With him 144,000"—compare vii. 4. These are selected, redeemed, purchased out of the twelve tribes of Israel's sons. No tribal relations are recognized in the Ecclesia, or body of Christ. "Out of the tribes," while the tribes, as tribes remain undisturbed; these are taken out for a purpose, which the testimonies affirm, to thresh the nations, and beat them small as dust, so that the winds of the heaven may sweep them away as chaff before the storm. Consult Gen. xlix. 8, 9, 10, and compare Isa. xli. 15, 16 and Zech. ix. 13, 16: x. 3, 4, 5. The reader should examine these passages as pointers, showing in part the mission of the chosen men of Israel for the work assigned them. So that, under such a leader, they will sweep all before them.

2. "He heard a voice out of the heaven as the voice of great thunder, and I heard a voice of harpers," etc. "And they sing as it were a new song before the throne." The same throne as iv., "And before the living creatures and the elders, and no one was able to learn the song but the 144,000 who had been redeemed from the earth." Compare verse 4, "Redeemed from among the men," namely the tribes. These are not the heavenlies, nor are they the earthlies, but a class between, taken out from the earthlies and not elevated to the rank of the heavenlies, midway between.

They belong to God and the Lamb in a sense which the remainder of the tribes do not, as will appear evident further along. They are constituted an army corps for a purpose, as before mentioned, under their Leader. The soldiers of most nations are purchased from among men in general and owned by the ruler or government in a sense which will not apply to the masses.

"They follow the Lamb in his conquering career. (4) These are they who were not defiled with women, for they are virgin, as a class, in the singular, in the sense of being pure from the defiling influences of the apostasy. It may be affirmed of these as a class, that they have not been defiled with the harlot women of the apostasy, Roman or Protestant. None others can truthfully affirm freedom from such idolatrous defilement—saint or sinner—all are or have been more or less intoxicated with the abominable mixture furnished for a set price by the dealers in ecclesiastical wares. We may become clear-sighted by sticking close to the reading: "A first-fruits—offering to God and the Lamb." The definite article should not be used here: "a firstfruit" in relation to certain things now being acted in the scenic heaven. But Israel as a nation are (to be) the national first fruits: consult Jer. ii. 3, "Israel sanctified for the Lord, the first-fruits of his increase." The distinction is evident. And Israel being the national first-fruits—a mere handful, what will the great harvest be, in the great ingathering? We must expand our conceptions of things if we would realize the length, breadth and height of the divine purpose concerning Israel.

5. "In their mouth was found no lie, for they are faultless," in the direction of, and for the purpose for which they were chosen as being suitable instruments in divine hands. "Another messenger flying in mid-heaven," between the heaven and the earth, and not a constituent part of either; but occupying as the scene represents, a mediatorial position between. "Having a good message pertaining to the age to announce to the dwellers upon the earth,"—to nations, tribes and peoples of the whole earth, and for the purposes set forth in the next verse. 7. And therefore not the gospel or good message of the preceding dispensation with reference to remission of sins through the name of Jesus, "Because the hour of his judgment is come."

8. "And another messenger followed, saying Fallen, fallen, is Babylon, that City, for of the wine of the wrath [illegible]ion she hath given all [illegible]rink." The woman who [illegible] the many waters. xvii. [illegible]man riding and guiding [illegible]eaded, and ten-horned [illegible]. "She hath given all [illegible]rink." This is not complete willingly in the delusion [illegible]tion, her intoxicating [illegible]d with her sorceries and [illegible] doctrines; mother of [illegible], soon to be called to account given plenty of blood to drink [illegible]6. "Fallen," sometime [illegible]our of judgment: not fallen [illegible]he faith not from the truth [illegible]ighteousness required: but [illegible]her glory and grandeur, [illegible]o costliness in gold and silver [illegible]ats, precious stones and p[illegible]eans of her traffic the merch[illegible] earth became rich, her la[illegible]"saints" and "martyrs" [illegible]ples and a richly clo[illegible]orated hierarchy, [illegible] to [illegible]. [illegible]

9. And another, a third messenger followed them, saying: If any one worshipeth the beast (xiii. 2) and his image (xiii. 15) and receiveth a characteristic mark (xiii. 16) on his forehead or on his hand, he also (10) shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God. We should keep it in mind, that this series of scenes belong to the "hour of judgment," and consult xiii. 16, in relation to the characteristic mark by which the worshipers of the beast and his image were known. Here are two rival proclamations. One from the two-horned beast (xiii. 15) and one from the messenger in mid-heaven. xiv. 15. "Fear God and give him glory," etc. Not only the great city must fall with her worshipers, but he too must drink, who worship the beast and receive the mark. And he shall be tested—undergo the trial-test which will consume the subjects thereof into smoke which ascendeth unto the ages of ages, or unto the commencement of the thousand years' reign of peace. The thought is taken from the testing of metals. The pure stands the test and is the better for the trial test. But the spurious metal is consumed into smoke, and even this clears away when dawns the millennial day. "In the presence of the holy angels, and in presence of the Lamb." Under the supervision of the Lamb "who executeth judgment because he is a son of man."

12. Here is the patient endurance of the saints—they who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. Compare this with xiii. 7, 8, 10; i. 9. Here in the trial-test is where the patient enduring saints have the advantage over the cruel persecuting powers, secular and religious; here the consummation most devoutly to be wished, here the saints behold righteous retribution meted out to the destroyers of the earth, in harmony with the divine decrees. Turn to xiii. 8 and note the reading, "Whose names have not been written in the book of the life of the Lamb." These are the only exceptions: those whose names have been written do not worship, do not pay homage. They have no respect nor consideration for the beastly power. xiii. 16, "He (the two-horned beast) causeth all, that there be given them a mark on their right hand or upon their forehead; and that no man should be able to buy or sell, except he that hath the mark (the name of the beast or the number of his name). xiv. 9 declares with reference to this demand of the two-horned beast, and the question arises as to what this worship and mark is. Consult xv. 2. "And I saw, as it were, a sea of glass mingled with fire, and them that escaped victorious from the beast, and from his image and from the number [illegible] standing [illegible] the glassy sea, having harps of God," iv. 6. These as glass as before the throne and those victors were there by it in the representation of the living creatures and elders. The mark, name or number of the beast is associated with buying and selling, trafficing in ecclesiastical ware. And from the time of the condemnation of the Arian Heresy to the present 1900 A. D., the passport to dealing these wares was, and is to this day, the doctrine of the Trinity. No matter who drove the chariot, it was all the same, Roman, Greek, or Protestant: "Trinity" is the Shibboleth, as may and have been observed by any who, having their names written in the book, desired to have communication in order to let the light shine, whether in debate or whether for the use of their "churches" for lectures or the many obstructions thrown in the way, the great question raised usually is with reference to the trinity. All the ordinations, "baptisms" so called, with births marriages and deaths, and the ceremonial belonging thereto, all to be done and said in the name of the Trinity. It is the bottom and top of the whole Babylonian constitution of things. Under its supposed divinity, kings rule and popes and prelates manage their immense interests in Church and State. The blessing of wells, animals, bells, clothing, water, flour, and all the things mentioned in xviii. All performed in the name of this fabled trinity. It is in civil, social, military and diplomatic affairs among refined and savage peoples, in kings, courts and legislative halls. Every chaplain of every sect performs their mummery in the name. All the damning and anathematizing from the sole of the feet to the crown of the head, is in the name. All the curses as well as the blessings are pronounced in the name of the "holy trinity." Write, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth, yes, says the Spirit that they may rest from their toils for their works follow with them." From the toil and sufferings imposed on them by their enemies for the time being..... The powers of organized sin let loose for the final struggle to the consummation. To die for their faithfulness to Jesus their Lord is gain; and the exclamation of the souls under the altar, "How long, O Lord," indicates the blessing in store for them. See xx. 4-6. Leave out about "the rest of the dead"—Blessed be they who have a part in the first resurrection; not first in time but first in rank, that resurrection to the royalty of the Melchizedek priesthood.

14. "A white cloud, and one like a Son of Man sitting thereon, and having a golden crown upon his head, and in his hand a sharp sickle." None other than the glorified Christ, the Executor of Divine Retribution. The golden crown representing the wearer as a royal personage, who judgeth and makes war according to righteousness.

15. "A sharp sickle," harvesting instrument about to be used for gathering the harvest of the earthlies, being as in the days of Noah, over ripe, on account of the forbearance of God. "Out of the Temple"—the inner temple; for "temple" consult iii. 12. "I will make a pillar in the temple of my God".....a living, intelligent and glorious community: "A congregation of first-borns."

18. "Another messenger came out from the altar." A priestly personage, having to do with sacrificial offering and therefore Israelitish—and whose official power over fire in the symbolic consumption of Israel's national sins and iniquities—compare Jer. i. 20, and in harmony with the New Covenant Jer. xxxi. 31-42, to be made with them.

19. "And the messenger thrust his sickle into the earth and gathered the vintage of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God. And the winepress was trodden without the city 1600 furlongs off, and there came forth blood out of the winepress unto the bridles of the horses."

Consult Isa. xxxiv. 1-7, 8-10. And compare with lxiii. 1-6. Who is this that comes from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah? This that is glorious in his apparel, marching in the greatness of his strength? Response: "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save wherefore art thou red in thy apparel, and thy garments like him who treadeth in the winefat?" Response: "I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me; yea, I will tread them in my anger and trample them in my fury; and their life-blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and shall stain all my raiment," etc., etc. read on. And compare Hab. iii. 3, "God cometh in from the South, and the Holy One from Mount Paran—his glory (splendor) covered the heavens. And the earth is filled with his praise, and his brightness was as the light, and rays (of light) coming forth from his hands, and there was the secret of his power."

Aphorisms.

If you would shun vice, follow virtue.

If you would avoid crime shun the company of habitual idlers. It is from the ranks of such that criminals are recruited.

If you are inclined toward rashness seek the companionship of the over-cautious, and heed their counsel with one ear at least.

If you are remarkably wise in your youth, you should endeavor to know less as you increase in prudence and discretion.

If you are an orphan, cultivate the standing on your own legs. Dont trust to fools to direct your steps, nor rogues to divide with you their honor

If you are inclined to heed evil advice, consult your conscience, if it is not dead, and it will tell you wherein safety lies.

If you have been guilty of a crime, refuse not to suffer; only be sure to profit by the bitter experience. Suffer no one to get between you and reformation. One fall has bruised, another may break your neck.

If your punishment has been lighter than your crime, do not repeat the offense on that account. Troubles thicken with age when principal and interest alike demand a settlement. The evil day is sure to come to the evil doer. Reformation is possible if you begin today. Tomorrow is in the hand of God to be given to those only who start today. A little time may be sufficient, while much time is too short.

Opportunities embraced are meal in the barrel, oil in the lamp, grapes on the vine, and herd in the stall. Disregarded they are the very husks of emptiness and despair.

Righteousness invites to a crown of glory, and a long day to enjoy the outing.

Wickedness reckons with her votaries before midday, and their light is extinguished in darkness, and their heads covered with shame.

Peace shall be the portion of the upright, and a safe habitation in which to rest forever. Choose therefore the right way and secure the life, and the home.

Report.

On the 27th of last month we took the train for Jefferson, some twenty miles northeast of Greenville, Mercer met at Jefferson by Bro. Goin's son, and conveyed three miles to Brother and Sister Goins. Brother Goin is over 70 years old—and badly crippled with rheumatism, both strong in the faith, and took good care of us while there. We began meetings on Friday night, preached four discourses, closing on Sunday night, on the conditions of pardon. There was a very good turn out, and good attention, and, we hope some good was done for the Master.

M. L. Adams.

Editor Restitution:

I am requested by a brother of Ripley, Ill., to write to The Restitution, and ask all the preaching brethren to give their understanding of 1 Cor. iv. 15. The question is, when does the begetal spoken of by Paul take place, before baptism or after baptism? I and the brethren differ with regard to the time of begetal. We want every brother to answer this question the same week, so that each answer will be independent of the other, and let all the answers be published the fourth Wednesday in May, this will give time for brethren living at a distance to get their answer in, and each brother signs his name to his answer. Let the answers be short without comment. Just say before baptism, or say after baptism, as the case may be, and I will give the brother's position after we have heard from all the preaching brethren.

Your brother in the faith,
D. M. Hubler.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Mary A. Woodward,	1.50
E. K. Holt,	3.50

Send The Restitution to some poor person as present for 1900. The cost is only three cents a week.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference.

The time will soon be here for tent work, and as the tent needs some repairs, we ask all that have subscribed to the work to send in the amount of your subscription, and all others who will help in the work send in what you can.

The work this year, with the possible exception of one meeting will be down the state line, south from Kansas City.

We want to get into the field at the earliest possible moment.

I think the reason the brethren do not receive greater blessings in their work is that they have gone out of the way. I would recommend that all the brethren read Malachi iii. 7-12. If the Lord would bless the united effort and obedience in that day, will he not do it now?

Brethren, let us lay aside our differences and enter the work with the "Gospel of the Kingdom," as our cry. Let us support the work with our best energies, our prayers and substance and the Lord will certainly bless our labors.

Send all money to P. H. Oatman, 2711 Olive St., St. Joseph, Mo.

Works of Bro. Wiley Jones.

Twelve Works, or the true meaning of Hell, Soul, Spirit, Ghost, Paradise, Incorruption, Incorruptible, Immortal, Immortality, Forever, Everlasting, Eternal, and their originals as learned by their uses in the Bible. A tract of 40 pages, sold formerly at 10 cents a copy.

The Gospel of the Kingdom, an 8 page, double column tract, sold formerly at 10 cents a dozen.

Early Lessons, suitable for young or old, 30 pages, sold formerly for 10 cts a copy.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 30 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses. A Volume of 288 pages, cloth 25 cents, leather bound, embossed, and gilt edges, $1.00. By Wiley Jones. This book is so well known that it is only necessary to announce that it is for sale, to insure a market for it. We have undertaken to dispose of these books for the Widow of our lamented Brother Jones, and while getting them at this low price, you at the same time help Sister Jones to much-needed money.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Joy Cometh.

"...ping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Out of the weary shades of night,
Out of the darkness round us light;
Eternal dawn or midnight storm,
Courage and hope of faith are born.

From mountain height the deepest things
Earth's hope is death death's angel wings,
But lo! there shines the "morning star,"
Gleaming in glory from afar.

Beyond the storm king's mantling shroud,
God's signal ring upon the cloud,
Pledges his love and truth and light,
When faith herself is lost in sight.

What is Your Life? Jas. iv. 14.

What a solemn question! How solemn the answer! "For it is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Too brief to waste; too uncertain to allow of boasting of our plans for tomorrow. Do not say in an assured and confident air, "Today or tomorrow we will go into such a city and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain." You know not what will be on the morrow. You ought to say, "If the Lord will, we shall do this or that." This language shows in what light we should consider the future of our lives. Inspired men wrote in a way to gravely impress us with the thought of the brevity of life; and employed various figures to forcibly set its uncertainty before us. The vapor, the grass, the flower and the leaf were thought fitting similes for this purpose. The vapor vanishes away before the rising sun. The grass and flower wither and fade under the noonday glare; and the leaf grows sere by the autumn's breath. If the measure of our days is three score years and ten, or our vital powers be sufficient to carry us on to the forescore limit, it seems so short. It is written of the children of men: "Thou carriest them away as with a flood." Psa. xc. 5. All generations of men except the present have been swept away by the onrushing flood of death. How faithfully the decree, issued at the fall of man, has been carried out. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." What numberless instrumentalities and agencies have operated to cut short what may be termed the normal period of life! The sum total of the life of any generation, and of all generations is immeasurably less than it might have been under conditions clearly within the scope of man's knowledge and freedom of choice. Men in every age of the world's history have gone counter to laws known to them; the penalties incurred by such violations they knew would shorten the period of life. We can only philosophize on what was and what might have been regarding the generations of the past. [illegible] to the stage concerns us [illegible] that the course they are pursuing can but result in sickness and premature death. Others in ignorance of the laws which govern their being, stumble along in their blindness and reap the same consequences. These are responsible for not obtaining a knowledge of the conditions on which health and physical well-being depend so largely, when such knowledge is conveniently near, and cost so little. The imbiber of intoxicants knows, or may know, that even temperate drinking inflames the stomach, gorging the blood vessels, as shown by Dr. Beaumont's observations and experiments on Alexis St. Martin. It was further shown that digestion was impeded which fact since then has been conclusively demonstrated by Dr. Kellogg a well conducted experiments. Our fathers of half a century ago thought that rye whiskey taken in moderate(?) quantities was promotive of health, that it aided digestion, imparted strength, cleared the mind, drowned trouble, inspired hope, and last but not least, made poor men forget their poverty when taken in little more than moderate quantities. Our fathers were deceived, alcoholic stimulants do nothing of the kind, except the last. They make men forget their poverty—and many other things they ought to remember. Life at its natural length is short. To knowingly pursue a course of conduct that will result in making it still shorter is sinful. To do so is, in a sense, suicide. In this mortal state there are many things and conditions over which we have no control. But we are morally and religiously bound to husband our life forces by living up to what we know of the conditions of health. Our powers of body and mind are ours to use, but not to abuse. The man who lives a life of sin, perverts his powers and thwarts the purpose of his own creation, which was to "glorify God," and enjoy his goodness forever.

Life is too short, too precious to waste in idleness, in sinfulness, and in the indulgence of our selfish passions and appetites. God lovingly asks us to devote our time and talents to his service; to "offer our bodies a living sacrifice holy acceptable unto him, which is our reasonable service." This is all. For a life conformed to his will he purposes to give us eternal life under conditions infinitely better than what we have here—a reward not reckoned of debt but of grace—"the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," with which "our light affliction which is but for a moment," and our meager service, is not to be compared. I will close this short [illegible] quoting two passages from [illegible] Moses. David says, "Lord, [illegible] to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is; that I may know how frail I am. Behold thou hast made my days as a handbreadth; and mine age is as nothing before thee." Psa. xxxix. 4, 5. And Moses, "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." Psa. xc. 12.

STEPS TOWARD RECOVERY

Began in the noble lives of Wickliff, Luther, Melanethon, Wm. Tyndale and others (A. D. 1300 to 1600) and of men in civil life who stood firmly for fair play and the right of free thought and free speech, and in the noble characteristics of the English and the German people—"The church" had for centuries kept the Bible sealed up in Latin to prevent the common people from reading it. When Wickliff, Luther, Tyndale and others translated the Scriptures into the vernacular and the people began to read the Word of God for themselves, the power of popes, and priests, and their tools, began to wane.

THE LITERAL SENSE was the uniform rule with reformers and translators. They saw that the Papacy was Antichrist, to be destroyed by the second coming of Christ, after that the millennium, the first resurrection, the saints with Christ take the kingdom under the whole heaven as an ever-

[illegible] Luther [illegible] controverted subject [illegible] by the literal sense, which is uniform throughout the whole Scripture."

William Tyndale said, "Thou shalt understand therefore, that the Scripture hath but one sense, and that is the literal sense, and that literal sense is the root and ground of all, and the anchor that never faileth, whereunto if thou cleave, thou canst never err nor go out of the way." He says "the decay of faith sprang first from allegories; for Origin, and the doctors of his time, drew all the Scriptures into allegory."

Luther saw the true gospel light on immortality (Rom. ii. 7; 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 16; 2 Tim. i. 10; 1 Cor. xv. 51-54), and denounced the doctrine of the immortality of the soul as one of the "monstrous opinions found in the Roman dung hill of decretals." He saw that purgatory, endless torment, immediate reward in heaven at death, and saint worship, are supported by the notion of the immortality of the soul; and that the doctrine of the New Testament on immortality, if generally believed, would destroy the Papacy. Many strong men in Germany and England supported Luther on that question.

But Thomas More of England opposed, and Tyndale, answering More, said if the soul is immortal and the saints who have died are already in heaven, what need is there of a resurrection or the judgment.

The Church seemed to be moving out into the clear light of God's unclouded Word. But, unfortunately, the reformers thought public opinion was not ready for unreserved gospel truth: so Luther and the other reformers stumbled on the threshold of reform: and we hear no more from them on immortality for about 300 years, but have instead

THE PROTESTANT COMPROMISE.

They decided to leave the most vital and most vicious roots of apostasy undisturbed. So the truths they did propagate simply fertilized Christendom for the prolific seed of the serpent's first lie (Gen. iii. 1-6; John viii. 44), which has been sown broadcast and the crop diligently cultivated. The reformers, their historians, and commentators seem to have reasoned: The true light must be shaded. The world cannot take it so fast. The spiritual must keep within the support of the secular. Hence the new device, like mixing clay with the iron in the feet and toes of the image, just liberty enough to crumble but not enough to adhere into a better mass. In the Protestant re-cast a new element is introduced into the amalgam both a universal solvent and an omnium gatherum—and the product is modern Christian civilization, a compact between Christ and Cæsar for mutual advantage. Allow all that either claims, then "water the stock." As we are to do business on Cæsar's ground and in Cæsar's time, we must give Cæsar the controlling voice. The grand scope is commercial politics. The "congress of religions" shall determine the faith. What will fetch the largest results and build the best show must make the conscience. Be as good, have as much truth, as you can afford, or is profitable. Immediate success, quick returns, is the criterion. Modern genius will help us out. If Cæsar will help send Bibles and missionaries to foreign lands, we must let him sell opium and rum to pay expenses.

The first and greatest commandment is—GET

The second is like it—SOLD.

On these two hang all your hopes in church and state. The future—we are not there yet.

It seems unfortunate that the reformers, lacking courage, wisdom and faith, shut off the light so much needed in the after centuries. Timidly and at great labor and suffering, a few humble Christians, during the last sixty years, have been compelled by the Word of God to supplement their work. We find: no future life without a resurrection. No vital existence after death without the life of the body: God will not allow his work in forming man of the dust of the ground (Gen. ii. 7), to be dishonored—he will [illegible] despise the body. [illegible] effect our redemption, took on [illegible] our nature—our physical organism, became a "dust man"—to honor his Father's work. He has that "dust" body now—it is himself—immortalized at his resurrection, and glorified at his ascension. He—the first immortalized, the first glorified—will soon come the second time to complete the great work so wisely begun when he was here the first time.

A FEW SPECIAL WORDS for our Methodist Brethren in General Conference at Chicago: Their advancement for sixty years in spiritual power has not been altogether satisfactory to themselves. Their attention is kindly asked to one reason.

Richard Watson, in his Biblical and Theological Dictionary, (London and New York, A. D. 1831-1841, published for the M. E. church at the Conference Office, 200 Mulberry Street), a Standard of British and American Methodism, Art. Mohammedanism, says: "With respect to the great doctrine of a future life, and the condition of the soul after its departure from the body, it must indeed be acknowledged that the product of Arabia has presented us with a nearer prospect of the invisible world, and disclosed to us a thousand particulars concerning it, which the Holy Scriptures had wrapped in the most profound and mysterious silence."

Mr. Watson, notwithstanding the above endorsement of the Koran at the expense of the Holy Scriptures, seems to be annoyed with the apparent kinship of Methodism and Mohammedanism, and uses four and a half pages to show that the difference consists in the grossness of the latter; yet he gives the Koran credit for explaining three very important things—the future life, the condition of the soul after its departure from the body, and the invisible world—and gratuitously asserts that "the Holy Scriptures have wrapped these subjects in the most profound and mysterious silence." He certainly knew and all Methodists know that the Scriptures do speak on these subjects. The fact that what they say on those subjects does not suit the leading Protestant sects, simply proves that they have not yet protested enough, and are not yet fully nor safely reformed from the dominating "policy" of the Pago—philosophic—little horn—man of sin—Babylonish intoxication.

The Holy Scriptures speak clearly on a future life: "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16: xvii. 1-3; vi. 40; Rom. ii. 6, 7; vi. 23; Luke xviii. 15-43; xx. 34-38.

On the condition of the dead: No knowledge of the living (Job xiv. 21), know not any thing (Eccl. ix. 5), thoughts perished (Psa. cxlvi. 4), they are in the grave (hades, Eccl. ix. 10; John v. 28, 29), not in heaven (John xiii. 33; Acts ii. 34), asleep (Dan. xii. 2; 1 Thes. iv. 13-18).

On the invisible world, to Abraham. Gen. xii. 1, 5; xv. 7; Acts vii. 1-5; Rom. iv. 13; Heb. xi. 8, 9, 13, 39, 40; Rev. v. 9, 10.

The Bible does not say that "the soul departs from the body at death." That is a Pagan and a Papal fiction, re-distilled to sweeten the wine in Babylon's cup for modern Christians.

Death does not bi-sect the man, killing half of him and making the other half more alive and worth more than the whole was. It kills the man. Read Webster's definition of death. That will help you to believe the Bible. Please read carefully all the above reference texts. They will clear up much of the fog left over from the dark ages. O. R. L. C.

Home Again.

Dear Restitution:

After an absence of four months I am thankful to say that I am at home again, and I have met with the little band of believers at our new church home at Browntown, Va., and am happy to say, that I have found them standing firm to the truth; and all in working order, and I am much delighted at the improvement of our little ones, since we have had a regular place to meet and call them together for the purpose of training them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord; and we older children of the heavenly King, surely do enjoy the happy privilege of coming together to read his Word, and sing his praise, and make melody in our hearts to the Lord; giving thanks to the Father in the name of his Son. That we are yet the spared objects of his amazing goodness and mercy. I have abundant reason to thank him for his Fatherly care and protection during my winter tour; notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, and changes of climate, I enjoyed good health. I visited some of the old fields of labor, where my dear husband and I used to travel in Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania, found some of the old soldiers standing firm in the one faith, some on the retired list, and some ready to enlist in the service of the Master, and some more good ground for the reception of the Seed. Oh, for more laborers to go forth and wield the Sword of the Spirit; truly the fields are white and ready for the harvest. This tour afforded me many blessed opportunities to speak of the things concerning the kingdom and name of Jesus, which subject will shine brighter and brighter until the perfect day. We see many sign posts now, that did not appear some years back, and as it is by revelation and observation, that we are enabled to see the unfolding of the prophecies; let us rejoice and be glad that the eyes of our understanding has been enlightened, so we may know what is the hope of our calling and what is the riches of the inheritance in his saints. I have been watching the leaves of the fig tree, for the Master said, "When ye see them put forth, know ye that summer is nigh, even at the door." The prophet points us to a time when he shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root. Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit. Isa. xxvii. 6. Oh, may he hasten this in his own good time, with much love and gratitude for the many cheering letters I read in our good paper. I remain your Sister in hope of eternal life,

On Torture as Punishment.

To the Editors of the Journal:

Of all the superstitions that have come down to us from heathendom perhaps the basest and most brutally barbarous is the belief in "eternal torment," and so far removed is it from the spirit of the present age that it would seem almost necessary to apologize for presenting anything on such a matter before the public, even negatively. Yet in this age of intellectual and ethical light we sometimes stumble into some dark, sequestered nook where old Father Time, aweary, has sat down to rest, and fallen asleep. Such a shady spot, for instance, was that meeting of Baptist ministers in Baltimore, where a paper was read on Hell, (old style,) and in the after discussion on the subject all agreed, so says the newspaper report, that "there was such a place." Since then we have had an elaborate sermon, by a prominent minister of the same city, delight and bedizened with all the horrors that used to bristle our hair when we were boys. Nearer home we occasionally come upon some other specimens of spiritual opacity, and wonder where in the world they keep themselves so successfully from the disintegrating light of the nineteenth century. I suppose it would be a reflection on the intelligence of the readers of the Journal even to present a counter argument to the perverting of grammar, the inverting and reversing of oriental imagery, and crazy quilting of garbled Scripture texts that purport to be arguments for this "piece of belated mediævalism" and, besides, the subject has for the last century been disposed of successfully by more able pens than mine.

The general tenor and spirit of the revelation of God, given us in the Bible, ought to be answer enough, and every child of the heavenly Father might use this argument, if he knows no other, as a complete refutation of the charges that foolish or interested persons bring against the character and reputation of the only living and true God, whose loving kindness and tender mercy is the theme of David's "perennial springs of song" and the lofty eloquence of Isaiah,—the my "Father and your Father of Jesus of Nazareth"—the God who "so loved the world" and whom "we love because he first loved us" of the apostles,—the kindly God of Emerson and Whittier and Holmes and the others of that bright galaxy of thought that this country and century has given a priceless legacy to an adoring world—the "Lord God merciful and gracious," that has been the rest and consolation of the true and the good of all ages, and is still the same to the spiritual minded of all Christian denominations today. And year by year we think we see a better appreciation of the gospel of God's salvation, and we say, "surely although there be heights and depths of spirituality we are far from having attained, yet we are learning line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little;" surely we begin to understand better the purposes of the Father and the reasons for his corrections and chastisements: surely "the minds of men are broadening with the circling of the suns," when from out the bushes of some back hundred comes the roaring, blood-curdling Jabberwock, with accompanying following of raving illiterates, threatening us with everlasting roasting if we refuse or neglect to set the clock back a century or two and, like Billy Bottom's cuckoo, even the "shepherds of the flock" protesting neither to the roasting nor the racket.

"Their note full many a man doth mark,
And dare not answer nay,"

But there is no reason for pessimism in this matter. In the full armory of God he has various weapons of his warfare, and in the long battle with ignorance the public school has been one of the leading advance guards of civilization, and has, in this country, kept itself comparatively free from the contamination of mediævalism. May heaven still purify and defend it. Only think of the little tots in the kindergarten and A, B, C classes being entertained by the stuff we hear at the religious orgies of the voudoo order we some times run against, and what would the higher classes think of lessons on hell outside of Virgil, where it belongs. Ah, these young folks don't fully appreciate what educational and moral advantages they have—and the other they don't have. We used to have lessons when we were boys. Well do I remember dear old McL—as he came around daily at threshing time, shortly before closing school, to read the dreadful inscriptions on the slates we had held over our heads for half a day: "Whispering to the boy behind," "Grinning to the girl across the room," "Blotting his copy book," "Missed his lessons," etc. I can see him now wiping his spectacles and feeling for a fresh hold and a better grip on his cane, bending and wiggling it meanwhile to test its suppleness, and then, when the examination was done, two or three or half a dozen of us got our "palmers," and on an elevated platform, in full view of about two hundred calloused little Lazaruses, we squirmed and writhed, like poor old Dives in his flame, for fifteen minutes daily. I was as moral an exhibition as a Georgia lynching bee, or the tumbril or guillotine of the French Revolution. Yet McL—was a good man, otherwise a kind man, and a high-toned, deeply religious gentleman. His morbid idea of torture as punishment was the result of the so-called religious teaching of the time. Our daily miniature inferno was an object lesson in keeping with the tidings of damnation that Burns ridiculed the century before, and which certain mossbacks of the preaching faculty try to re-introduce yet; but, thank God, we have passed into a less cruel age.

Here are some of the ideals of the teachers of today, extracted from a reprinted article in the Hand-Book issued by the School Commissioners of our own county, for last year. "By administering right punishments parents, teacher, society and God co-operate to strengthen virtue and lessen evil. Injudicious punishment has produced unbounded woe. Punishment should ever be reformatory—never vindictive. All punishments should tend to benefit the punished. Vindictive punishment fosters vindictiveness. Punishments that crush manhood are fiendish. The punishment should be a natural consequence of the offense. This is a fundamental principle of the divine government. Punishment should be mild and certain. All semblance of cruelty should be avoided. The loving heart and kind word should accompany the firm hand." While such a spirit as these words indicate prevails and presides over the rising generation we may rest assured of the ultimate triumph of reason, truth and righteousness, and the clamor of the fogies will waste itself in the dim reaches of the night air.—J. F. Gellerly in the Denton, Md., Journal.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 25, 1900.

There being five Wednesdays in this month, our next issue will bear date June 6.

After withstanding a siege of 216 days the city of Mafeking was relieved. Consequently there is great rejoicing in England. The people had lived on the smallest amounts of food, and for some time horse and mule meat had been a luxury.

Archbishop Corrigan was received by the Pope and many church matters discussed, but the one subject that the people of this country were thinking about, that of "Americanism," was avoided, and will not be mentioned at this time.

We dislike very much to do so, but we are compelled to again call attention of a number of our subscribers to their delinquency. Surely, brethren, you do not want to subject us to the expense of sending statements to each one. You certainly know if you have paid for your paper for 1900. You will remember the last time you paid, and you surely know that we must have our money in order to do our work. Please look up your account, and if you are owing us, send the money at once. You can surely be trusted to attend to this, and save us further anxiety.

It was reported last week that Bro. J. L. Wince of Pierceton, Ind., had the small pox, and some apprehension was felt lest the disease should have been communicated to others. Letters from Pierceton report the case not so serious as was first thought, it being called by some "Indiana small pox," or "Cuban Chicken pox." We trust it may be as later reports indicate, and that such care will be exercised as will prevent its spread. Whatever the name, it is likely bad enough, and Brother and Sister Wince have the sympathy of the church at Plymouth, and of the entire brotherhood in their affliction.

From the following item it appears that there is a difference of opinion between high officials in the Catholic church. Archbishop Ireland thinks it would be best for the Pope to remove all claims to temporal authority, and as he has more influence with American Catholics than any one else, it may be taken that this is the opinion of the large part of the Church in this country. We give the dispatch from Rome.

"Archbishop Ireland's efforts towards an Anglo-Saxon Catholic alliance are considered futile in Rome. It is known that archbishop Corrigan bitterly opposes Archbishop Ireland's move, but Cardinal Rampolla fears to antagonize Ireland because of the latter's great influence with the American Catholics. Cardinal Rampolla, therefore, favors the alliance, but will never consent to Archbishop Ireland's proposition that the Pope renounce his claims to temporal power. Archbishop Ireland is expected to arrive here soon.

The Russians have made another move, and apparently won their point, as the following from the London Times of May 18 will indicate.

"At Peking on March 30 two agreements were signed by M. Parioff, the Russian Ambassador, and a representative of the Corean government. By the first Corea grants Russia a site for a coal depot and naval hospital for the exclusive use of its Pacific squadron at Masampo Harbor, within three miles of the Masampo foreign settlement, the details to be settled by a joint Russian-Corean commission. The second was a reciprocal agreement, Russia undertaking never to seek to rent or acquire any land on Kopedo Island, on the mainland opposite and extending to the limits of Masampo Harbor, or in any of the adjacent islands, while Corea agrees not to alienate to any other power any portion of land above these places.

Russia thus obtains as an exclusive settlement of her naval needs, the finest harbor in Corea, abreast of Japan, and excludes Japan from acquiring similar advantages, and ear-marks all adjoining points of strategical value. M. Pavloff informed the Corean government that Masampo would be the winter headquarters of the Russian fleet. His action bears a close analogy to Russian proceedings prior to the occupation of Port Arthur."

We have received no word from Bro. Joblin this week, but sincerely hope his condition has improved.

The existence of the bubonic plague at San Francisco is causing trouble in the Chinese quarters where the health officers have attempted to inoculate them with anti-plague Serum. Port Said on the Suez Canal is quarantined on account of the plague.

From Constantinople the following is sent under date of May 16.

"There is a hitch over the French concession for Syrian railways and it is doubtful if the convention is signed tomorrow. The convention stipulates that the French syndicate shall have the concession for a line from Hamah, to connect later with the Bagdad road. Germans regard the stipulation as contrary to the Franco-German Bagdad agreement.

The following regarding the Iowa State Conference will give ample notice to the brethren of that section, and we urge all to get ready to attend who can do so.

"The Iowa State Conference will be held on the new camp ground at Waterloo, beginning Aug. 18, lasting over Sunday Aug. 26. Dedication service Aug. 19. Let all the brethren take notice.

A. J. Eychaner, Pres.

The present administration in China seems to care little about advancement and reforms, apparently using no means whatever to check the murderous bigots, but rather to encourage their outbreaks. The following item from Peking, tells of the trouble in one district.

"The Boxer anti-foreign movement has attained alarming proportions. A serious anti-Christian outbreak occurred in the district midway between Pao-ting-fu and Peking. There was a great destruction of property and seventy-three native Christians, including women and children were murdered. Many were burned alive. Mgr. Favier and the Catholic missionaries report that the persecution is the most serious that has occurred for many years. The danger of the spread of the movement is increased by the apathy or connivance of the present anti-foreign government."

Dispatches from London commenting on the reported action of Russia in Corea have the following words under date of May 19:—"Among those who study Chinese questions the belief obtains that Russia's latest move is a direct breach of contract with and a blow against Great Britain and Japan, which brings these nations face to face with a grave crisis which pusillanimous diplomacy will neither end nor mend. The Globe, for instance, openly advocates immediately sending a powerful fleet to Corea and bluntly demanding that Russia forego the advantages she is alleged to have secured in contravention with the agreement of 1881." Joseph Walton, M. P., says: "If the report of the establishment of a Russian naval station at Masampo is correct, then it is quite on the cards that Japan will not sit down quietly under such a provocation. All the leading Japanese statesmen with whom I spoke during my recent visit to the far East were emphatic on one point—the determination to prevent Russia obtaining a foothold in Corea. As to our own interests, this latest piece of news, taken together with the new Russian railway through Mongolia to Peking, now actually commenced, though incorrectly denied in the House of Commons, shows once more how things are going from bad to worse for us in the far East."

Answers.

Replies have been received to Bro. Hudler's question published last week as follows:

In answer to Bro. Hudler's question, I Cor. iv. 15, "I have begotten you through the gospel." Not before baptism, not after baptism. But in the act of baptism, when the begettal is completed, the life for the spiritual child is now begun, to be developed for the spiritual birth in the resurrection. Johns Foons.

Brother Hudler asks: "Does the begettal spoken of by Paul in I Cor. iv. 15, take place before or after baptism?

I understand it to be before baptism. A. J. Eychaner.

In answer to question desired by the brethren of Ripley, Ill., I would say the begettal takes place after baptism. H. Giddings.

In response to Bro. Hudler's request, as to when the begettal takes place? (I Cor. iv. 15,) he says answer, or "say before or after baptism." I prefer to say, By-In—or Through baptism (in obedience to the gospel.)

The Bible.

Which is justified, the believer or the disbeliever of the Bible? It is contrary to reason to rely upon its instructions as God given without convincing evidence of that fact. It is equally absurd to believe its instructions originated elsewhere than claimed without furnishing unquestionable evidence for founding that belief.

Moses in Egypt claimed to be the agent of God. He brought lice upon man and beast, which the magicians could not do. He informed that God would fill the Egyptian houses with flies, which thing was done. He entreated the Lord to remove the flies; they disappeared. He prophesied that "tomorrow the Lord shall bring murrion upon the beast," which thing occurred as stated and the cattle died. He scattered ashes in obedience to the Lord's command, and the boils appeared. In like manner did the Lord demonstrate his power by sending rain of hail; by sending and then taking away the locusts; by causing thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days; by destroying the first born. After these demonstrative evidences were the people justified in giving heed to Moses and Aaron? Were such to occur in America, a wise people would answer yes; but to these were added the passing of the sea, where the believers passed over to look back upon the death struggles of the self confident ones. The manna from heaven, water from the rock, quails for food, victories over enemies, were demonstration of God's determination and power to verify his statements. Were the evidences sufficient for hearty belief in other statements that might originate from the source?

Christ, in proof of his claims that he was acting under the instruction of his Father, turned the water to wine; gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, health to the sick, fed the multitudes, raised the dead, cursed the fig-tree, stilled the storm, walked upon the water, and in agreement with his own statement before death (Mark ix. 31) was himself raised from the dead. Were his followers simple-minded for believing?

But where are the demonstrations for the nineteenth century thinkers. Compare Scripture with history. Christ said of the temple, (Matt. xxiv. 2) "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." Again, Luke xxi. 20, "When ye see Jerusalem encompassed with armies then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." History confirms the fulfilment of both these prophecies forty years later. Daniel prophesied of four successive kingdoms when as yet Babylon alone existed and Rome waited centuries for her birth. Isaiah of the Jew says, lii. 9, "The show of their countenance doth witness against them." Let observation answer to the truthfulness of this and diligence search another people who have preserved their features while mingled as has been the Jew for centuries with other nationalities. Jesus says of Jerusalem, (Luke xxi. 20) "They shall fall by the sword, (History responds, 1,100,000), shall be led away captive. (History echoes 97,000), and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of Gentiles," (for this last consult the Turk). Ezekiel affirms that Magog (now Russia) will ally with Persia, (chap. 38) which affirmation is now being verified. Are we lacking present demonstration? Compare prophecy with history and passing events, then answer.

Jesus the Great Healer.

The subject matter of a Sunday School lesson was the healing of the paralytic. As usual a sharp distinction was made between healing the body, and forgiving sin in this case. In my opinion a misleading conception. Says Jesus in substance, what is the difference whether I say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or Arise, take up thy bed and walk? Our poor humanity is afflicted with many diseases and all are the result of sin. (Violation of law.) We were reminded that the act of healing was twofold, viz. curing the palsy of the body, and removing the palsy of the soul. Now while healing the palsy was not all of the process of full salvation, nevertheless it figured very significantly in that poor man's case.

Salvation consists largely in freeing mankind from bodily suffering. We rejoice that in the regeneration we shall be free from sickness, sorrow, pain and death. These are all the result of sin, and are most certainly bodily ills; penalties that fall directly upon the sinner. If we are delivered from all these and their effects, and given health, joy, rest, life, is not this salvation? Or does salvation leave out the one God formed of earth and consigned to earth again? Made to bear the penalty but not share the glory. Who is redeemed from death, if it is not the one that dies? Who is to be saved, if it was not the creature that was lost? Again we ask, what is the motive power of the gospel? Does it not embrace largely physical blessings? If they were not assured to us few would covet the promised life. The comforts and treasures are expressed in terms that we can interpret to mean nothing else than real food and raiment and shelter. Associate with these love, joy, peace, immortality, and we have the full meaning of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. Israel was promised a land flowing with milk and honey, corn and wine, and a city or dwelling whose builder is God. Abraham believed God, and went toward the land of promise. We cannot realize the glory of the world to come now in this life, but we can appreciate a redemption that gives us freedom from sin and suffering and death.

Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Do not these words imply that he professes the power to remove the cause of our liability to death? And does not his work embrace a removal of the curse from off those things upon which man subsists in this life? Viz: the air he breathes, the food he eats, the water he drinks. In a word, will he not renew our environment in harmony with our regenerated nature? In that blessed era there will be no poisonous vapors to impregnate the air we breathe. No animal nor mineral impurities in the waters we drink, nor the food we eat. All these things shall be made new or renewed. As sanitary conditions protect us now from the terrible Bubonic plague, so will the renovation of the entire universe secure our immunity from all evil. To wipe the tears from all faces, is to remove the cause of tears. To heal sorrow is to take away its cause. To abolish death is to turn aside the causes that produce death. All this is included in the grand work of redemption in Christ. "Set your affections (loves) on things above." This is our work alone, and God does not propose to do for us what he commands us to do. To obtain his favor of freedom from sin, and all its results, and the inheritance of life and all its joys, we must conform our lives, our affections, our entire being to his will and purpose. So he will care for us, and nurture us with the bread of life, that the new creature in Christ may grow, and transform into the image of him who created him. The old image in Adam being lost in the growth of the new, until we become fit for the Master's use, and worthy of life everlasting.

Obituary.

Mollie P. Taylor fell asleep in Jesus, May 18, 1900, bowel and stomach trouble, at the age of 41 years, lacking a few days. She was the daughter of O. D. and Hellen Purviance. Was married to Geo. L. Taylor, Dec. 18, 1881. The writer officiating at the wedding. Baptized by the writer into the All-saving name of Jesus Christ in the year 1890, dying in the faith. Unto them were born five children, three girls and two boys. Funeral discourse was delivered by myself at the home. There was a large gathering of people. We read a part of the 90th Psalm and a part of 7th chapter of Eccl. 2nd verse, "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living lay it to heart." 3rd, "Sorrow is better than laughter; for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better." Ver. 4, "The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth." First hymn, "Asleep in Jesus," second, "O Troubled Heart there is a Home," last hymn at the cemetery, "Unveil thy Bosom, Faithful Tomb." Found in the Christian hymnal. Text I Thes. iv. 18, "But I would not have you to be ignorant brethren concerning them that are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others who have no hope." It was a sad time for the dear children and family, but they need not mourn as those without hope. They are dear motherless children and I often think, what is a home without a mother? Oh, how they will miss their dear mother, and poor George will also miss her, and the church and her friends will miss her. She leaves a husband, five children, one sister and brother to mourn her loss, and a host of friends both in and out of the church, as the large gathering of the people showed, and it seemed our little sermon had its effect on the people. At least as I read them, at such a time Bible truth will tell. Next we moved to the cemetery. At that place we sang our favorite burial hymn.

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb,
Take this new treasure to thy trust,
And give these sacred relics room
To slumber in the silent dust."

The hymn is a sermon in itself. My prayer is that we all take lessons from the oft repeated obituaries we get in The Restitution and other papers. And may we all prepare ourselves to meet our Savior and our dear loved ones at his coming in the resurrection morning. May God's blessing rest upon our dear brother and the orphan children, is my prayer.

John Foons.

William Kopp died on May 14th, 1900, at his residence in Newark, N. J., aged 43 years. He leaves an aged father, and also a stricken wife and two little boys to mourn his loss. He was a thoughtful and attentive husband, and a loving father. On the 17th inst. we laid him away to wait for the coming of the King. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Samuel Wilson whose theme was the gospel hope—the resurrection of the dead. This is the hope wherewith Paul comforted the weeping friends at Thessalonica, and it is the hope which the Christ has left to comfort his church during the long ages of her pilgrimage. "I am the resurrection and the life." These glory-fit words are still ringing down the ages, and thus they will ever ring until faith is swallowed up in victory. They are the words of him who hath passed through the shadows of the grave and illumined it with his footsteps—the words of him who hath "rolled away the stone" from the sepulchre of earth's suffering, and lighted the dark places of grief with a promise that shall know no failure. As surely as God lives, so surely shall our dear ones come again from the halls of death—they shall come with light and life and love—they shall come bearing the palms of victory and singing the songs of triumph. Death shall have no power to hold them when the cry, "Give up thy dead" shall ring through the caves of earth and cleave the ocean walls of pearl and saphire. We shall stand with them on the glorified heights of God's eternal mountains, and look into the dear eyes from which all tears shall have been washed away. We shall walk with them in white on the banks of the beautiful river, and kiss their lips all fresh with the dews of immortality. God's promise is a golden chain which reaches from the darkness of death through all the halls of space, and is anchored fast to the great white throne. No link can ever yield, no storm can break its hold, for this is the unfailing anchorage of the storm-tossed heart. It reaches down into the depths of the grave, and holds our dear ones in loving clasp, until the day when God shall make up his jewels, and they shall gleam in the crown of the King. None are lost, and none can be forgotten, for they are written in the Book of his remembrance and the angels of God shall keep watch and ward above them until that glory-lit morning, when earth shall wear her bridal robes and be wedded to the glories of eternity. Then shall her mountains ring to a shout such as never before swept over their bright tops, and the dark places of the earth shall be illumined with light and life and joy, for all the ransomed of the Lord shall be there, and the Sun of Righteousness shall rise with healing in his wings.

Prosperity in Modern Egypt.

The annual report of Lord Cromer on Egypt and the Soudan tells a story of great prosperity. In Egypt the revenue has reached the highest figure since the British occupation commenced and shows a surplus of £E402,000 of income over expenditure. Lord Cromer complains of the necessity under the present international agreement of raising more taxation than is necessary for the annual expenditure. Three hundred and twenty-three thousand pounds of the national debt was paid off, and the general reserve fund now stands at £E3,617,000.

Lord Cromer calls special attention to a government attempt to lend small sums to the peasantry to aid them in cultivating their land. The attempt, which is somewhat on the lines of the well-known people's banks in Germany, is still in an experimental stage. But the results so far have been encouraging, and it is contemplated extending them.

Railways and telegraphs have had record years. Much of the railway stock is obsolete, and the government is slowly replacing it. The railway administration has been purchasing engines from Glasgow and from America. The Scottish engines have not given the slightest trouble, but it has not been possible to get the best results from the American type, owing to their divergence from the standard pattern. The Nile reservoirs are being pushed on with great rapidity. Many works of local importance, such as agricultural railways and city drainage schemes, are in course of completion.

Concerning the Soudan, the report says that the main efforts of the government have been to get the people to return to their homes. Great efforts are made to encourage the gum trade, which it is believed can be largely extended. Mining concessions are now issued for metals, minerals, and precious stones. No details can be given about the progress of Gordon College, as the work is left wholly in the hands of Lord Kitchener.

The authority of the dervishes has been absolutely uprooted, and a new system of administration is being built up under district officers.

One of the most serious difficulties is due to the large number of firearms still in possession of the Arabs. Many have been collected, but others are used by the people in intertribal raids.

It is anticipated that, apart from the railway, the income of the Soudan administration will soon equal the expenditure.—London Mail.

Poetry.

Oh, For a Perfect Trust.

Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust,
My loving God, in thee;
Unwavering faith, that never doubts
Thou choosest best for me.

Best, though my plans be all upset:
Best, though the way be rough;
Best, though my earthly store be scant;
In thee I have enough.

Best, though my health and strength be gone
Though weary days be mine,
Shut out from much that others have:
Not my will, Lord, but thine!

And even though disappointments come,
They too are best for me,
To wean me from this changing world,
And lead me nearer thee.

Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust
That looks away from self;
That sees thy hand in everything,
In great events or small;

That hears thy voice—a Father's voice—
Directing for the best:—
Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust,
A heart with thee at rest!

It is written, that they that are Christ's shall be raised from the dead at his coming. 1 Cor. xv. 23.

It is written, that Christ died for our sins, and that he was buried, and rose again the third day. 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4.

It is written, that the dead know not anything, and that their love, their hatred, and their envy are perished. Eccl. ix. 5, 6.

It is written, that there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol, (the grave) whither thou goest. Eccl. x. 5, 6.

The clergy say that those in hell, as well as those in heaven, have all faculties and increased powers for using them; the former for imprecating curses upon the Almighty, and the latter for swelling the chorus of happy songsters.

It is written, that as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on (or entered into) Christ. Gal. iii. 27.

The clergy say that believers are in Christ the moment they believe, and that baptism has nothing whatever to do with it.

It is written, God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave. Psa. xlix. 15.

The clergy teach that the body, and not the soul, will be redeemed from the power of the grave.

It is written, that he that overcometh shall have power over the nations. Rev. ii. 26, compared with Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 29, 30; 1 Cor. vi. 2; Rev. iii. 21; xx. 4.

The clergy teach that those who overcome go direct to heaven, and, by implication, that what is referred to in the Scripture mentioned, will not take place.

It is written, that whosoever is ashamed of Christ and his words, Christ will be ashamed of him when he shall come in his own glory, etc., Luke ix. 26.

The clergy teach that whosoever is ashamed of Jesus, here, Jesus will be ashamed of him when he goes before the judgment seat at death.

Little Ones.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God" Luke xviii. 15, 16.

I wish to call attention to Bro. Joblin's reply to Bro. Mettler's second question in THE RESTITUTION of April 25th regarding the resurrection of little children. It seemed to me that his answer was very unsatisfactory. The thought came to me, surely some one will answer this question. As I waited and no one did, I was filled with a desire, almost felt it my duty to do so myself. The thought has been with me so much that I dare not neglect it. Feeling my inability to write, and ever mindful of the admonition, "Let us not be wise above that which is written." I ask, Is there no light, no hint; are we left in the dark concerning a question that must come to every fond parent? This thought becomes a wail, a lament, as the little forms are being consigned to their last resting place. That little one that brought such joy when it came, was our constant thought and care while with us. And oh, the gloom that fills our homes, when the little ones fall under the power of the enemy death. Our heavenly Father even regards the sparrow's fall. "Not one of them is forgotten before God." Luke xii. 4-8. Are not these little ones of more value?

The loving Christ who took little children up in his arms and blessed them saying, "For of such is the Kingdom of heaven;" (Matt. xix. 14), also said, "Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted." Can it be that there is no hope for the stricken mother that she shall not be rewarded for all this labor of love and that the little ones shall not come back again from the "land of the enemy?" Yes, thank God, there is. The prophets have revealed many things that have been as hidden things until the brighter light of the gospel has brought them to our attention by some event, which was declared to be the fulfillment of that particular Scripture. Let us be instructed by this light.

Turn to the prophet Jeremiah. Jer. xxxi. 15, "Thus saith the Lord; a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not." Now turn to the gospel light. Matt. ii. 11 to end of chapter. "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremiah, the prophet, saying. "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not."

Picture, if you can, the sorrow and mourning in those Bethlehem homes. Herod has slain the pride of the homes, the babes, that he might destroy the child Jesus. That this is a fulfilment of Jeremiah xxxi. 15, cannot be denied. But you say, what bearing has this on the subject in question. Now read Jer. xxxi. 16, 17.

"Thus saith the Lord; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." "And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." The first has been fulfilled. Those mothers suffered the loss of their children on account of the child Jesus. Dare we say the second part will not be fulfilled? Those same children, resurrected, come from the land of the enemy. Death is the enemy. 1 Cor. xv. 26, "The last enemy to be destroyed is death."

Job called the grave a "land of darkness;" David called it a "land of forgetfulness;" and may not Jeremiah properly have called it "the land of the enemy?" Yes, they (the children) "shall come again from the land of the enemy?" The prophet speaks specifically of those that were slain. They shall come to their own border. This same little form is to be brought back to its own border, to fill its proper place in the new order of things.

That the little child is to become a factor in the restitution period is a truth clearly revealed. Isa. xi. 6-8; Isa. xlv. 17 to end of the chapter. This new earth is not to be desolated of child life. While these are spoken of in connection with the nations existing during the restitution age it does not exclude those spoken of as coming from the land of the enemy, any more than the immortalized saints are excluded from that period. It may be asked why more was not revealed concerning this subject by Jesus and the Apostles. The solution may be found in Jesus' words to the Pharisees. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Matt. ix. 12, 13. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. xviii. 10. "Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish." Matt. xviii. 14. Dear ones, there is enough revealed so that we may be comforted. Thus saith the Lord. Our work of love shall be rewarded. They shall come again from the land of the enemy.

Yours in hope,
MRS. L. A. BOICE.

[We give place to the above article that those who believe in the resurrection and salvation of infants may not say we have cut them out. It would be useless to open a discussion on this question, as it cannot be settled to the satisfaction of all. Doubtless Bro. Joblin is willing that the children should be admitted to the kingdom, but in the absence of a direct statement concerning them, he deems it best to "not be wise above what is written," and so leaves them exactly where Christ left them. Our sister has a fair argument, but based solely on inference. This may seem a trifle harsh to her, but we hardly think she will be willing to have a doctrine built up on the same kind of evidence. The belief of natural immortality, and a sky-kingdom rests upon inference and a desire of men to have it so. Let us be very careful, and find out the clearly revealed will of God, and do that; but what is not specifically stated let us leave with him, with full assurance that he will do precisely right, and just what will be satisfactory to our stricken hearts. We can well afford to trust implicitly to a merciful and loving Father, who notes the sparrow's fall.—ED.]

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference.

The time will soon be here for tent work, and as the tent needs some repairs, we ask all that have subscribed to the work to send in the amount of your subscription, and all others who will help in the work send in what you can.

The work this year, with the possible exception of one meeting will be down the state line, south from Kansas City.

We want to get into the field at the earliest possible moment.

I think the reason the brethren do not receive greater blessings in their work is that they have gone out of the way. I would recommend that all the brethren read Malachi iii. 7-12. if the Lord would bless the united effort and obedience in that day, will he not do it now?

Brethren, let us lay aside our differences and enter the work with the "Gospel of the Kingdom," as our cry. Let us support the work with our best energies, our prayers and substance and the Lord will certainly bless our labors.

Send all money to P. H. Oatman, 2711 Olive St., St. Joseph, Mo.

The Church of God.

"Zion, arise, break forth in songs
Of everlasting joy:
To God eternal praise belongs,
Who doth thy foes destroy.
Then church of God, awake, awake
For light beams from on high:
From earth and dust thy garments shake,
Thy glorious day is nigh.

[illegible]
God will his power employ;
He'll turn thy mourning into mirth,
Thy sorrow into joy.
In shining robes thyself array,
Put on thy garments pure;
Thy King shall lead thee in the way,
That's holy, safe and sure.

In thee, the Lord shall place his name,
And make thee his delight,
And place on thee a diadem,
Divinely fair and bright;
And thou shalt be the dwelling place
Of him that reigns above.
Yes, then shalt be adorn'd with grace
And everlasting love.

The joy of nations thou shalt be,
A bright and shining light;
For God is in the midst of thee,
To keep thee day and night.
He'll bring thy wand'ring children home,
And gather those without;
And with a wall of jasper stone,
Will guard thee round about.

Arise, O Zion, praise thy King,
And make his name thy trust;
With joy and triumph loudly sing;
For he is true and just.
O Zion, sing with fruitful voice,
Thy great Redeemer's praise;
In his almighty power, rejoice
Throughout eternal days."

The Gospel of the Kingdom Superceded. No. 7.

JAMES BROWNING AFFIRMS. W. H. WILSON DENIES.

I have not as yet seen it my duty to refute in detail your arguments drawn from Heb. ii. 3, the great salvation, for even a casual reader ought to see that the time referred to is after the exaltation of our Lord. This is indicated by the words, "Therefore we ought" of verse 1. These words receive their force from the truth of the previous chapter, that Jesus was made higher than the angels, as a matter of fact. He was lower than the angels when the gospel of the kingdom was preached; moreover, it is hardly likely that the writer would employ the word spoken, if by it he meant preached later from which the word is translated is not used in connection with the kingdom gospel. Can you prove, my brother, that this was attested to by distribution of the Holy Spirit, as was the great salvation? Can you show that this salvation was preached (I do not say spoken of) before atonement was made? The writer says that having been made perfect (through suffering) he became the author (margin cause) of eternal salvation. Do you insist that the effect salvation was preached before the cause? How is it that the Apostles even after preaching the gospel of the kingdom were still ignorant of his predicted death and resurrection, if these two events were a part of that gospel. I am puzzled to know how you can adduce arguments from the passages you have selected and parade them as though they refuted my position and justified yours, when the context in every case indicates the very opposite of every deduction; however, sincerity of purpose is not incompatible with error of judgment, and here I leave it. I would now direct attention to Matt. xxiv. 14, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end be." This universal preaching of this particular gospel constitutes one of the signs whereby Israel might know when the end of the age would come. Since Paul's gospel was preached in all the world, (Rom. x.) to every creature (Gal. i.), and the end is still future, it is proof that he did not preach that designated by our Lord as the gospel of the kingdom. To evade the force of this by assuming that the witnessing is not complete is to disregard the very object for which the prediction was made, for it is impossible to know when it has been fulfilled. How can it be a sign? We may put it down as a rule of the Scriptures, that no sign is darkened by ambiguity. Seeing then that the Master himself has disassociated the one gospel from the other. Why insist on joining that which he has put asunder? Better a thousand times that we acknowledge our inability to understand aright, than force Scripture to our ideas. It [illegible] by putting our own construction on the phrases used; but surely our reverence for things holy should check us in so doing. Such a system as that of putting different words and phrases in an interchangeable sense can only serve to destroy the simplicity of the Book and render void, or at least nullify the truth. This phrase "gospel of the kingdom" was never used by the inspired writers to denote the preaching after Pentecost. "This is the Word of faith which we preach, that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and shalt believe in thine heart that God has raised him up from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Paul. You say, and justly so, there is but one gospel. This is true of baptism also, but John's baptism was not the immersion of Rom. vi., nor is the gospel you contend for the same as that preached among all nations for the obedience of faith. Let us rightly divide the Word of truth and the present truth referred to by Peter will appear in greater power and grandeur.

JAMES BROWNING.

ANSWER.

We have a remarkable passage recorded in Heb. ii. 3, which unmistakably reveals the gospel of the kingdom as being the "great salvation," provided by God for the salvation of those who accept and obey the same. And beside this, there is not the slightest indication that this message of life has been "superceded" by something of a later date. So evident is this, that the question is asked: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at FIRST began to be spoken by the Lord, and was CONFIRMED unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing witness both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to his own will?" How can we escape if a measure like this is neglected, which is doubly confirmed as being true.

1. Confirmed by those "that heard him."

2. Next by God also bearing witness, whose witness must be true.

3. Then sealed by the Holy Spirit—"gifts" and "miracles" attesting the same.

With regard to the above Scripture, Mr. Browning says: "I have not as yet seen it my duty to refute in detail arguments drawn from Heb. ii. 3, the great salvation, for every candid reader ought to see that the time referred to, is after the exaltation of our Lord."

Now, every reader who pays any attention at all to the construction of language, does "see that the time referred to," is that which at first began to be spoken by the Lord"—recorded in Mark i. 14, which reads, "Jesus came into Galilee preaching THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD," and he also adds: "Repent and believe the gospel—even "the gospel of the kingdom of God." "How shall we escape," if we "neglect" to do so?" Don't you see that the tendency of Mr. Browning's teaching leads away from "the great salvation," and those who trust it are in danger of missing "the great salvation," offered in the gospel first preached by Jesus. Oh, how dangerous! Beware!

The message of life is never changed or "superceded" by something of a later date, but is always the same all the way through.

The great salvation is a priceless boon which should be eagerly sought for by all right thinking people. Among other earnest seekers we find Cornelius whose heart yearned for the true message of life. His heart's prayer was heard, and God sent Peter to reveal to him the saving words. Peter pointed out the path with great clearness.

1. He said it was "the Word which GOD SENT." hence it comes with proper authority.

2. The next point in the chain of evidence is, that he first sent it "unto the children of Israel." Hence in looking for the saving "words," we must find the message first sent to Israel.

2. Who bore the message to Israel? [illegible] should then find what message he carried to Israel.

3. The next point to investigate is where did he first publish the Word to Israel? The answer is. "Throughout all Judea."

4. To get down closer, from what city did he commence? "From Galilee."

5. In order to be exact, I will ask at what time did he commence his delivery of the message to Israel? The answer comes, "After the baptism which John preached."

6. Where was John when Jesus commenced to deliver the message to Israel? "John was put in prison."

7. The next most important point to investigate is, to know exactly what the message was. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

8. Was this saving message always confined to Israel? If it had been it never would have been given to the Gentile household of Cornelius, as a saving message.

9. Did Jesus intend that this message should always be confined to the land of Israel? No. "This GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM shall be PREACHED IN ALL THE WORLD."

10. Suppose some man should want to substitute in place of this "gospel of the kingdom," a modern fix up called a "three-fact gospel," or some other message. What position will he occupy? The answer from God's Book is: "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be ACCURSED."

Mr. Browning says: "You say, justly so, there is but ONE gospel, and this is true of baptism also."

Now, if my teaching from God's Word that there is but ONE gospel is true, and "justly so," how do you get a succession of gospels out of ONE gospel? You say the gospel of the kingdom has been superceded by another gospel, which you style a three-fact-gospel. A strange thing for one gospel to displace or succeed another, when "there is but ONE gospel," as you here admit. In Jesus teaching of the one gospel he named it as "the gospel of the kingdom." He never in a single instance preached his death, burial and resurrection as the gospel, neither did he commission his disciples to preach those three facts as the gospel. Before those events became facts, he called on the people to "repent and believe the gospel." The gospel was preached before those events became facts, and there is not the slightest hint in God's Word, that the glorious gospel Jesus preached, and sent his disciples to preach, has been superceded by three historical facts. you call gospel, (but not Jesus) which you affirm has superceded the gospel Jesus preached. The gospel Jesus preached has not passed away and been changed like an old garment, but on the contrary shall be "preached in all the world," previous to the end.

The death, burial and resurrection is the outworking of the Divine plan to bring about the good things promised in the gospel of the kingdom. Had not those events taken place, the good things promised in the gospel of the kingdom would have proved a failure. The means used to bring about the things promised in the message cannot of itself BE THE MESSAGE. Friend Browning exchanges the means for the message. He places everything on the atonement. The atonement is all right in its place, and is not to be ignored, and is a means used to bring about the realization of the things promised in the gospel, but one thing must be remembered, and that is the atonement is of no effect where the message is not understood, believed and obeyed. Friend Browning's quotations on the atonement are all right, but he makes a fatal error, when he makes the means the message. The atonement falls flat without the true gospel message.

Mr. Browning says: "The phrase, 'gospel of the kingdom' was never [illegible] inspired writers to denote the [illegible] because the mind reaching forward to the time of the end, said: "THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM SHALL BE PREACHED IN ALL THE WORLD." This being the case, others "after Pentecost" must preach it to the extent of carrying it in "all the world." Paul "after Pentecost," preached it at Rome, and called it "the salvation of God," as any one can see by reading of the last chapter of Acts Paul "after Pentecost," took the last leave of his brethren, used the phrase, "among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God," and said he was pure from the blood of all men, seeing he had not "shunned to declare the whole counsel of God." Philip at Samaria, (after Pentecost) preached the kingdom of God as a PRE-REQUISITE TO BAPTISM. See Acts viii. 12.

To enforce his point Mr. Browning quotes: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved."

Here are three things to confess:

1. "Lord." "God hath made this same Jesus whom you have crucified both Lord and Christ." To confess him as "Lord" comprehends his KINGSHIP.

2. "Lord Jesus." This word Jesus comprehends him as the Savior.

3. "Hath raised him from the dead." No person believing in the immortality of the soul believes in their heart that God "hath raised him from the dead," for the reason that he (his soul, the so-called real man) never died, hence, they do not believe that he either died or rose again.

Mr. Browning further adds: "The apostles even after preaching the gospel of the kingdom were still ignorant of his death, burial and resurrection." They certainly were ignorant that those three events were the gospel, but not ignorant of the gospel Jesus taught them. They doubtless did not fully comprehend what the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus had to do in the fulfilling of things promised in the ONE gospel Jesus had taught them.

I now wish to close this discussion with a few words as to UNIVERSAL WITNESSING.

After the resurrection of the Lord (Acts i. 1-11) he spent forty days before his ascension, in giving his chosen heralds his final instructions as to their proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom of God, "after Pentecost." Verse 3, says: "Being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:" which things included the restoration of Israel, as can be seen in verse 6: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

Now, that to preach the gospel, and preach the kingdom, are synonomous phrases, any one can ascertain by consulting Luke ix. 2, 6.

The witnessing previous to Pentecost had been confined to the land of Israel. As we have already seen that before being offered to Cornelius and household; it was first sent to Israel. Now, after receiving power from on high they must bear universal testimony concerning the things he had just given them forty days instruction, even "THE THINGS PERTAINING TO THE KINGDOM OF GOD," "unto the uttermost parts of the earth," and this is all "after Pentecost."

We can all see how beautifully this all dovetails in, and fits accurately with Jesus' word: "THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM SHALL BE PREACHED IN ALL THE WORLD."

Now, who is to carry this message? The Apostles are not here? The answer comes, "Let him that heareth say COME." It is you and me, my brother and sister, whosoever you may be, who have believed and obeyed the gospel of the kingdom, you are his witnesses to bear this testimony. There are many ways in carrying this message. If you cannot use the living voice, use printed literature, scatter it broadcast like autumn leaves. Circulate such papers as THE RESTITUTION, and tracts. The printing press, and the [illegible] wields a mighty power for disseminating knowledge which our forefathers did not have, and we must be held responsible for its use. Think of this.

We have obstacles in our way to meet with like that of friend Browning, but God's Word is sufficient for the pulling down of the strongholds of the devil.

This ends our discussion. Let us be loyal to God and the gospel of the kingdom, and never compromise with the enemy. Eternal issues hang upon it.

W. H. WILSON.

(Concluded.)

Why I Wish to be Saved.

Friend:—This is a subject of vital importance; do you give it the necessary amount of consideration? Now, in the present life, questions which to us are of value, we give our attention although they must end with death, then how much more attention we should give to a question which pertains to our eternal welfare in the age to come, which gives life and contentment forever.

Dear ones, it means that we shall have a beautiful place to dwell in throughout eternity without sickness, disappointment or death; that love, charity and unselfishness will abound, their opposites will be a thing of the past.

First: Of the dwelling place "And I, John saw the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Rev. xxi. 2. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst; and the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold as it were transparent glass." Rev. xxi. 10 to 22. Now friends, let this be real, or signify as to beauty and quality of the city. Will it not be worth our while to try and follow in the Master's steps so we may inherit it? But farther, this is the least of the blessings in store for those who love Christ and do his will; the curse of the earth." Gen. iii. 18. Thorns also and thistles shall it (earth) bring forth to thee;" shall be removed and "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." Isa. xxxv. 1.

Second: God cares for you, he cares for me. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believed in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Jno. iii. 16.

Third: We will be great, "For I say unto you, Among those that are born of woman there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he." Luke vii. 28.

Fourth: There will be no more sickness, death, disappointments, tears or sorrow, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be anymore pain: for the former things are passed away." Rev. xxi. 4. "Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed. For this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and when this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? 1 Cor. xv. 51-56.

Friends, will not this be grand, is it not a great gift, is it not worth trying for, and one is so much more contented, it gives contentment of mind, while worldly pleasures are mockery and will not do to rely upon in time of trouble. Then, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Jno. v. 39. "And he said unto them, go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15-16.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 1 Cor. ii. 9.

Now, dear friends, is it true that in the majority of cases where parents are not Christians or even church goers they desire their children to attend Sunday School and church, to them I say, are you not setting a poor example? Sanction a thing, yes, desiring it, and not doing it yourself; can you think of a mother who is in shame and sin, but who will say, "do not allow my child to fall where I have," if there should be one who would not care, but just as soon have her child fall to her level, of the two she is the worst and may God deal with her as is best, and he is the only one who is able, as his wisdom and love are right; man is not able, he is too weak and mortal. "For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as I am known." Cor. xiii. 12.

Two friends meet, Samuel and John, Samuel is married, his wife is a Christian, he is not, but he is loving and kind. John also is a Christian, Samuel is telling John of his taking out a large life insurance policy, saying, "should I happen to be taken away, I want my family well provided for." John says: "Samuel you certainly are very kind, but do you want to please your wife more, if so, take out an insurance policy with Jesus, and then try and so live that you will meet her in the age to come, eternity; this life you have today, tomorrow you may not, you may have the pleasure of your wife's company today, tomorrow you may not. Now, why not be baptized into Christ and so live that you may enjoy the pleasure of your wife's company throughout eternity, and she yours, and both bask in the sunlight of God's love, with happiness, and contentment of mind and where there will be no sickness, sorrow, or death, or disappointment, and there will be no need of the sun "For the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever.

One thought more, do you know of a young man or woman, who has fallen, but who will say, do not let mother know it or keep this from father. Is this with the above, not proof that even those who have fallen or are in sin, are ashamed and undoubtedly would prefer to step higher, God help and bless them. Amen.

Stumbling Blocks.

Strive vigorously to form the habit of using everything that comes to you, whether pleasant or unpleasant, fortunate or unfortunate, to your advantage. Do not allow an unpleasant letter, a disagreeable criticism, an uncharitable remark, or other trial of any kind to darken your whole day and cast a shadow over your life.

Make up your mind resolutely that nothing shall stand in the way of your genuine success. You cannot allow your life to be darkened by the clouds cast over your pathway by those who wish to injure you.

Misfortunes and difficulties make strong those who have the courage to surmount them and use them as stepping-stones instead of stumbling-blocks.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 6, 1900. NUMBER 21.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 6, 1900.

LORD CURZON reports that the cholera is still unabated in India. The total number on the relief roll is 5,607,000.

THE labor troubles in St. Louis still continue, and hardly a day passes that some one is not killed. In Chicago there is a truce, but settlement is not in sight.

THE question of revision of the Presbyterian creed was taken up by the general Assembly at St. Louis, and a committee appointed to examine the matter and report to the next meeting.

THE trouble with the "Boxers" in China has become so serious that marines from the war-ships of the several nations have been landed and sent to Pekin to protect the foreigners. United States troops are with the force, and it is likely this prompt action will check the movement.

A DISPATCH from Shanghai dated May 30, says:—"The real object of the forthcoming Japanese naval demonstration on the Corean coast, off Masanpo, will be to occupy that portion of the mainland in the immediate neighborhood of the harbor. On this area, which will be acquired by force, if necessary, Japan proposes to establish a fortified station. This will be so devised as to constitute a most important weapon in case of difficulty with Russia leading to active hostilities.

THE friends of Brother and Sister Wince will all be interested to know of their condition. In response to a letter of inquiry Mr. J. K. Lawrence of the People's Bank, at Pierceton informs us under date of June 2, that both Brother and Sister Wince have been afflicted with what is reported as small-pox, but neither have been very sick, and are not confined to their bed. The boy staying with them has not taken the disease, and all are doing well. We trust the number of cases will not be increased, and that the afflicted ones may soon be fully restored to health.

ON May 30 the British army entered Johannesburg, the Boers having retired, and left them to take peaceful possession. It was reported that the same action would be taken regarding Pretoria, and it is certain that President Kruger has removed his government to Machadorp, but whether the entrance to Pretoria will be opposed is not known. Lord Roberts is supposed to be moving his lines onward, in the meantime he keeps his plans to himself. Opinions differ, some considering the war practically ended, while others think the Boers will make a stand and continue a war in the mountain districts for years.

THE "time limit" was abolished by the Methodist Conference at Chicago. Wesley believed that a minister should move on after one year. This limit was changed to three and then to five years, and now is removed, and a minister can stay in one place as long as the congregation wish and the Bishop wills. This gives a Bishop the power to remove a minister at any time, and also enables a congregation to get rid of an unpopular man easier. This Conference has also granted the admission of women to sit in future sessions. The question of "amusements" was passed over hurriedly, and Methodist young people will go on as they have done heretofore, and the ministers will not expel them.

THE following dispatch shows that Russia is still endeavoring to tighten her grip on Turkey as she does on every neighbor she has. "The belief that Russia would cease bothering the Porte about repatriating the Armenian refugees as soon as the concessions for the railroads in the Black Sea Basin had been obtained seems to have been unwarranted. The Russian Ambassador at Constantinople has just informed the Sultan verbally and by note in the most positive terms that the St. Petersburg Cabinet no longer will endure the closing of the Turkish borders to Armenian merchants and traders who return from the Caucasus. Russia also objects to the recently increased immigration into Russia of Turkish Armenians, which is due to the unjust treatment the Armenians have to endure at the hands of Turkish officials."

We have received no word from Bro. Joblin, and fear he is still sick.

AGAIN John Alexander Dowie of Chicago is getting some more advertising. It appears that a woman whose daughter was declared insane, and had papers made out committing her to the Asylum at Kankakee, while passing the Dowie establishment, yielded to the girl's wish to be prayed for, and when she appeared better and more contented, left her there. Dowie had her up before a congregation as an example of his power to "cast out devils." The girl "gave her testimony" as she was told to do. Later when the insanity reappeared she was removed to another place, and when her mother found her she was bound with cords in a cruel manner, and showed on her person the marks of torture to which she had been subjected by the attendants. This is another sample of the work of this arch deceiver, who is parading as a follower of Christ. Such actions ought to satisfy any thinking person that this is one of the latter day deceptions that are to try the faith of man.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed $1.50 for the old RESTITUTION, for it is all the true gospel I get here, outside of the Bible, as I am the only one here that belongs to the Abrahamic faith. Oh, how I wish some of our ministers would come to Carson, Pine Valley, and hold a series of meetings; they could do so much good. Pray for me.

Yours in the Christian love,
M. A. ALLEN.

Dear Restitution:

I will say that although alone here, I am still strong in the faith, and very much enjoy reading (THE RESTITUTION) our weekly visitor. May God bless you in your efforts to do good. Let us not be discouraged, for the gospel will some time accomplish that unto which it was sent. I rejoice that the whole earth will yet be filled with the glory of God. I hope to be there, and hope that many others also may rely on the promises and be ready when the King comes.

Respectfully yours,
MRS. JOHN RAUTMAN.

Dear Restitution:

I would like to write a few lines and add my testimony in favor of the gospel of Christ, for it is all there is worth living for. I have been looking for my Lord for the last forty-five years, and the way grows brighter every day. Ever for the truth,

THOMAS W. FARMER.

Dear Restitution:

We enjoy your weekly visits, so many good writers of the gospel of the kingdom. We could not afford to do without it; it is the only preaching we have. May we continue steadfast toward the mark of our high calling, and meet one another in the kingdom of God. Your Sister hoping for eternal life,

REBECCA BALDWIN.

Dear Brethren of the One Hope:

By the blessing of God I am permitted to write a line through THE RESTITUTION to you all. My faith is anchored in Christ, who is our life and refuge. It is a great feast to me to read the many good letters found in THE RESTITUTION, from the faithful ones, looking for the coming kingdom, which soon will come; and it is my hope, that we may all be ready to meet him, when he comes to take his Bride and reign on the earth. Blessed hope, sure and steadfast, and when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. v. 14. "Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." John iii. 2.

Fraternally yours,
GEO. W. HAYNES.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Selections.

The Music of Christian Hearts.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians (v. 18-20) we have these counsels: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Mr. Conybeare renders this passage in such admirable modern English, that we feel as if it had been written for the first time yesterday:—"Be not drunk with wine, like those who live riotously; but be filled with the indwelling of the Spirit, when you speak one to another. Let your singing be of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, and make melody with the music of your hearts to the Lord. And at all times, for all things which befall you, give thanks to God the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

What a blessed thing it is that, if we have not eloquence to sway the multitude to the side of Christ, or influence to bear extensively upon our contemporaries, or gold to send the gospel to the heathen at home and abroad, we can at least offer to the Lord the music of grateful hearts! Eloquence, influence, and gold are very valuable when men know how to use them in the service of God, as faithful stewards of his manifold gifts; but we can sing in our hearts without either of them, and with perfect certainty that the song is accepted in heaven. We can even make melody to the Lord without knowing a note of music, or being able to join vocally in the service of praise. It is a grand fact for the Christian that his Lord knows the heart. We may be misunderstood by our brethren, our words may be wrongly interpreted, and our actions traced to motives far from our thoughts; but the Master, the Judge, makes no mistake. He knows each of his friends with the most perfect knowledge; and there cannot be a doubt that he has accepted as incense meant for him the silent breathing of the heart heavenward, when perhaps some storm of sorrow was pressing hard on the worshiper, and neither church nor world cared so much as to ask for his welfare. "When I was first heard in my defence," writes Paul to his dear friend, Timothy, "no man stood by me, but all forsook me. (I pray that it cannot be laid to their charge.) Nevertheless the Lord Jesus stood by me and strengthened my heart, that by me the proclamation of the glad-tidings might be accomplished in full measure, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered out of the lion's mouth. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil, and shall preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom. To him be glory unto the ages of ages. Amen." There is a forsaken man sorely pressed, but the music of his heart to the Lord he loved is grander than ever rose from choral festival in temple made with hands.

Just before his last journey to Eisleben, where he was summoned by the Count of Mansfield to settle a dispute, Luther wrote thus to a friend: "Aged, worn out, weary, spiritless, and now blind of one eye, I long for a little rest and quietness; yet I have as much to do, in writing and preaching and acting, as if I had never written, or preached, or acted. I am weary of the world, and the world is weary of me; the parting will be easy, like that of the guest leaving the inn. I pray only that God will be gracious to my last hour, and I shall quit the world without reluctance." He was but sixty-three when he wrote this, in January, 1546, and on the 18th of the following February he died, leaving a widow and two children in straitened circumstances, notwithstanding all he did for gospel truth and the deliverance of Europe from priestly tyranny. Yet the music of the great reformer's heart was ever welling up like a perennial spring, and overflowing in song to the Lord whom he trusted and loved. It is easy to say now that the "rest and quietness" he coveted might have been enjoyed, and, humanly speaking, many years added to his very useful life, had the money which has been spent on granite and brass monuments to his memory been devoted to the comfort of the living man. But we are all wise after the event. Yet "he served his own generation," and many generations following, with a priceless service; and whilst fighting amidst stern difficulties, as the soldier of truth and humanity, offered habitually the praise of his heart to the Lord.

Far up the stream of time we go for another illustration. It is just a precious bit of autobiography,—a gem sparkling amidst the "whirlwind" and "the arrows" of which the writer speaks in such storm-like language:—

"Though the fig-tree shall not blossom,
Neither shall fruit be in the vines;
The labor of the olive shall fail,
And the fields shall yield no meat;
The flock shall be cut off from the fold,
And there shall be no herd in the stalls;
Yet I will rejoice in the Lord,
I will joy in the God of salvation.
The Lord God is my strength,
And he will make my feet like hind's feet,
And he will make me to walk upon mine high places."

Here is the music of the heart, the triumphant song of faith, the shout of assured victory amidst terrible desolations! The God who can bring poor feeble men up to this sublime altitude deserves their praise!

It is, as all earnest Christians know, a great privilege to assemble for worship with their believing brethren. On the first day of the week especially, the memorial day of the Redeemer's resurrection, when the din of commerce is silent, and the rivalries of trade are hushed for the time, it is pleasant to look forward to the rest that remaineth, to worship the Father together, and anticipate the song of perfect victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. To unite in the act of adoring praise is to rehearse the words which have been prepared for us in the coming glory:—"Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." Those who are to enter that glory must be prepared for it here by grace, and those who shall have the honor of singing the "new song" there must practice it now.

The place where Christ's friends meet is hallowed, however humble, by the fact of their meeting in the faith of his promise that he will meet with them. Wearied and burdened ones, almost crushed by troubles of which, perhaps, they have spoken only to God, feel a delicious sense of relief as they contemplate together the sympathetic Savior on the right hand of the Father, and know, without doubt, that he is thinking of them, as only Jesus can think of those whom he loves. Mutual sympathy—brotherly affection—has also a cheering influence. It imparts quiet joy and strength. We feel that we are "fellow-helpers," and that while each is receiving out of "the fulness of Christ," all are participating in the banquet, and are making melody in their hearts to the Lord. It is a time and place of holy education, and the thoughts of the cross and the crown, the sufferings and the glory, the church and the kingdom, which the ministering brother brings before the minds of his brethren, strengthen their faith, deepen their piety, and provide rich matter for the music of the heart.

The well-instructed pastor can never weary his audience by sameness; for his text-book is literally inexhaustible. Time and eternity, life and death, sin and holiness, history and prophecy; the past, the present, and the future; with the Father in the center, and Christ as the glorious Executive of the Father's will, furnish scope enough for deep research, varied illustration, and earnest heart-to-heart speech. Speaker and hearer are alike interested in this vast field of thought; and if minds are not enlightened, and if hearts are not stirred so as to produce the music of gratitude, there is something mournfully wrong with the preacher, or hearer, or both!

But the song of the heart may be sung any day, in any place, and under any circumstances. "The doctrine of the Lord" is not a thing of times and seasons, locality and ceremony, official and rite. Those who think that it is, understand it not. It is life, pardon, peace, sonship, love, hope,—and all "in Christ." Externalism, or dead form, is unknown to the divine salvation, which means nothing short of union with and immortality in the Son of God. Hence, the "true worshiper" can make melody in his heart wherever he may be, in the field, at his work, in the streets, at home, abroad, on land or sea. He is glad to meet his brethren for the hallowed purposes already named, and will meet them unless hindered by events which he cannot control; but such meeting is not essential either to prayer or praise. He is graciously independent alike of the gorgeous cathedral and modest meeting house; for he can pray to his Father who seeth in secret, and send up the incense of his loving heart in the name of the High Priest within the vail; whilst the certainty that his prayer is heard, and his praise accepted, strengthens him to discharge the duties and bear the trials of life as a follower of Jesus should.—Wm. Leask, in Rainbow, 1876.

Temperance.

Who'll Buy?

[Suggested on seeing the advertisement of a wholesale liquor dealer.]

Forty casks of liquid woe—
Who'll buy?
Murder by the gallon. Oh!
Who'll buy?
Larceny and theft made thin,
Beggary and death thrown in,
Packages of liquid sin—
Who'll buy?

Foreign death imported pure—
Who'll buy?
Warranted, not slow, but sure—
Who'll buy?
Empty pockets by the cask,
Tangled brains by pint or flask,
Vice of any kind you ask—
Who'll buy?

Competition we defy—
Who'll buy?
Dye, to make the soul jet black;
Dye, to make the conscience slack;
Nothing vile do our casks lack—
Who'll buy?

What Intemperance Does.

Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength and age in its weakness.

It breaks the father's heart, it bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, blights parental hope and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave.

It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life.

It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends, and all of them paupers and beggars.

It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption.

It covers the land with idleness, misery and crime.

It fills your goals, supplies your almshouses and demands your asylums.

It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cherishes riots.

It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victims for your scaffolds.

It is the life blood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman and the support of the midnight incendiary.

It countenances the liar, respects the thief, and esteems the blasphemer.

It violates obligations, reverences fraud and honors infamy.

It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and slanders innocence.

It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, helps the husband to massacre his wife and the child to grind the parricidal axe.

It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God and despises heaven.

It suborns witnesses, nurses perjury, defiles the jury box, and stains the judicial ermine.

It degrades citizens, debauches the legislature, dishonors statesmen and disarms the patriot.

It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness; and with the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and, unsatisfied with its havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputation, and wipes out the national honor, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin.

The Quaker's Reply.

Years ago several persons, among them a Quaker, were crossing the Alleghany mountains in a stage. A lively discussion arose on the subject of temperance and the liquor business, and those engaged in it were severely handled.

One of the company remained silent. After enduring it as long as he could, he said: "Gentlemen, I want you to understand that I am a liquor dealer. I keep a public house, but I would have you to know that I have a license, and keep a decent house. I don't keep loafers and loungers about my place, and when a man has enough he can get no more at my bar. I sell to decent people and do a respectable business."

He thought he had put a quietus on the subject, and that no answer could be given. Not so. The Quaker said:—

"Friend, that is the most damnable part of thy business. If thee would sell to drunkards and loafers, thee would help to kill off the race, and society would be rid of them. But thee takes the young, the poor, the innocent and the unsuspecting, making drunkards and loafers of them. When their character and money are all gone, thee kicks them out, and turns them over to other shops to finish off; and thee encourages others and sends them on the same road to ruin.

Temperance and labor are the two best physicians of men; labor sharpens the appetite, and temperance prevents him from indulging in excess.

Habits are formed by single acts. If you, therefore, have a fear of the liquor habit, beware of the single acts, the drinks now and again, that makes this habit.

"That the primary duty of this nation as to crime and criminals is to prevent crime by suppressing agencies that contribute thereto."—Hon. Henry B. Metcalf.

"Spiders do not weave webs just for the mere amusement of catching flies. They have a living to make, and they trap flies as a means to an end. So with saloon keepers, tobacconists, theatrical people, music hall proprietors, and others. They have a right to live, but they have no right to live by sucking away the life-blood of others. They have no right to starve the bodies and damn the souls of men and women merely that they may fatten and flourish. Beware of the spider.

Poetry.

Reclaimed.

My God low'r thy feet tonight I bow,
Acknowledging my sinful ways,
Happy, that thou dost own me still;
With heart renewed, I sing thy praise.

I wandered many a weary day;
Almost beyond thy tender call,
In the deep anguish of despair, I turned
From thee, my Lord, my life, my all.

Earth's troubles thick'ned 'round my way,
The clouds of grief hung black and low;
Each breeze that 'round my dwelling moaned,
Seemed freighted with the notes of woe.

In wild despair my soul cried,
"My prayers met not a listening ear:
I'm left to walk my desolate way
With many a heart-ache, many a tear."

And louder still grew a tempest howled.
The light of faith almost went out:
The last faint, flick'ring ray of hope
Seemed sinking in the gloom of doubt.

'Twas but a paper, sent by hands
Of tireless love, from Eastern lands:
Yet on its pages pure and white,
Came the glad rescue from black night.

It told the story of wondrous faith
Of one who stood on the shore of death;
Of answers to the prayers of those
Who turn to God with all earth's woes.

I read with eyes by tears made dim,
And heart o'erburdened with its guilt.
Then cried with the fervent cry,
"O Lord, do with me as thou will."

I prayed for pardon, and there came
A glow of love throughout my soul:
I'll doubt no more, steadfast I stand,
However loud the breakers roll.

No more I walk earth's ways alone;
A still, sweet voice breathes in my ear,
"Rebel no more, but ever trust,
Lo, I am with thee, do not fear."

O falter not, dear Christian friends,
Whose thoughts are rent, the world to cheer,
Ye little know how oft your words
May dry the sad, despairing tear,

—Mrs. J. C. Voss.

Communicated.

Zacharias.—Chapter 11.

1. Open thy doors, O Libanos, and let fire devour thy cedars.

2. Let pitch-tree ololu because the cedar hath fallen. For great ones have been exceedingly humbled. Ololu, ye oaks of the Basanitis, because the thickly planted forest hath been dragged down.

3. A voice of shepherds threwing because their majesty hath been laid low. A sound of lions roaring because the neighing of the Jordan hath been stilled.

4. Thus saith the All-controlling Lord shepherd the sheep for slaughter, which those who have acquired have been devouring and not curing for, and of which those who are selling them have said, The Lord be praised, and we have been made rich: and their shepherds have suffered naught for them.

6. Therefore I shall no longer be sparing of those who inhabit the land, saith the Lord; and lo, I am giving the men each one into the hand of his neighbor and into the hand of his king, and they will chop down the land and I shall not deliver them out of their hand.

7. And I am going to shepherd the sheep for slaughter in the Chananites, and I am going to take for myself two sceptres, the one I have called beauty and the other allotment, and I am going to shepherd the sheep.

8. And I am going to take away the three shepherds in one month, and my soul will have become heavy upon them: for their souls have also become hardened toward me.

9. And I have said, I will not shepherd you; let that which is about to die, die and that which is failing fail, and as for the rest, let each one devour the flesh of his neighbor.

10. And I shall take my beautiful sceptre and cast it away and annul my covenant, which I made with all the Inities;

11. And it will have been annulled in that day, and the Chananites will know the sheep that are being guarded by me, because it is the Lord's word.

12. And I shall say unto them, give my wages or refuse; and they stood my wages thirty of silver.

13. And the Lord said unto me, Put them in the furnace and I will see whether they are of approved value in the way I was tested for their sakes. And I took the thirty of silver and I cast them into the furnace in the house of the Lord.

14. And I cast away the second sceptre, the allotment, to scatter the possession in the midst of Jouda and in the midst of Israel.

15. And the Lord said unto me, Yet again take for thyself untried shepherd's shepherding utensils.

16. For lo, I am raising up a shepherd over the land: that which is failing shall not receive attention, and that which hath been scattered shall not be sought, and which hath been broken shall not be healed, and that which is whole shall not be made upright, and the flesh of the elect ones shall be devoured, and their vertebrae will be rejects.

17. Alas, ye who shepherd vanities, forsaking the sheep. A sword will there be against your arms and against your right eye. Your arm will have withered and your right eye will have become blind.

Chapter 12.

1. A burden of the Lord's word unto Israel, saith the Lord, who stretcheth out a heavenly canopy and foundeth an earth, and formeth man's spirit in him.

2. Lo, I am making Hierousaleem to be a front-door, as it were, that is being shaken by all the Inities round about, and in Jouda there will be an outer-wall against Hierousaleem.

3. And it will be in that day I shall make Hierousaleem a stone trodden down by all nations; every one who treadeth her down will mock at her, and all the nations of the earth will be gathered together against her.

4. In that day, saith the All-controlling Lord, I shall smite every horse with a craze and his rider with delusion, and I shall open mine eyes upon the house of Jouda, and all the horses of the Inities I shall smite with blindness.

5. And the chiliarchs of Jouda will find in their hearts those who are dwelling for themselves in Hierousaleem in the All-controlling Lord their God.

6. In that day I shall make the chiliarchs of Jouda a torch of fire in wood and a lamp of fire as it were in stubble, and they will devour on the right hand and on the left all the Inities round about, and Hierousaleem will be inhabited yet again by itself in Hierousaleem.

7. And the Lord will save the tents of Jouda even as from the outset, that the boast of the house of David and the elevation of the inhabitants of Hierousaleem may not be magnified over Jouda.

8. And it will be in that day that the Lord will hold a shield over the inhabitants of Hierousaleem; and the one who is weak among them will in that day be like David as it were, and the house of David will be as it were the house of God, like an angel of the Lord in their sight.

9. And it will be in that day that I shall seek to take away all the nations that come against Hierousaleem.

10. And I am going to pour out upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Hierousaleem a spirit of favor and pity, and they will look unto me for having despitefully used me, and they will mourn for it as for a beloved and they will suffer woe as for their first-born.

11. In that day the mourning will have been magnified in Hierousaleem like the discomforture of a plantation of pomgranites that is being cut off on a plain;

12. And the land will mourn tribe by tribe, the tribe of the house of David by itself and their wives by themselves, the tribe of the house of Nathan by itself, and their wives by themselves; the tribe of the house of Levi by itself and their wives by themselves; the tribe of Sumeoon by itself and their wives by themselves.

13. All the rest of the tribes each tribe by itself and their wives by themselves.

Comment.

The eleventh chapter opens with a denunciation of fiery judgment upon the country of the Lebanon, upon the Basanitis and the Chananitis as here denominated, meaning "the land of the Philistines" as it is commonly designated in the C. V.

By "the three shepherds" here is meant the spiritual prophetic guides of these three provinces whom "the great Shepherd of the sheep" is taking away because of their infidelity. The new purpose and divine plan for betterment as announced under the symbolism of the two sceptres of beauty and allotment is manifestly Messianic in its import. Beauty might be rendered more properly good. I think a good that subserves its end, it being the same word rendered good at the close of the first chapter of Genesis—"and lo, they were very good" and it is the same word in "I am the good shepherd." The Lord casts away "the good sceptre" in token of his annulling his covenant with these Inities and the demand for his wages follows. The weighing out of "the thirty pieces of silver" in the light of the later bargain of Judas is very significant in its Messianic import. Such coincidences are not the work of chance I trow.

The casting away of the second sceptre, the sceptre of allotment (not bonds as in the C. V. and R. V.) is significant of abrogation of any possession these three peoples might have had in the midst of Jouda and Israel under the Old Covenant of that day. The balance of the chapter is a symbolic teaching that they will be left to their own devices and be shepherded by "an untried shepherd," given over to selfish greed until "the restoration of all things, etc." until there awakening and recall of Jouda to favor and pity and an outpouring of a spirit of repentance and sorrow upon all the tribes of Israel with which picture the chapter closes, a prophecy by the way which is still "the hope of Israel," as Paul calls it.

God's Chosen Witnesses, and Their Mission.

In John xiv. 25, 26, we find the following: "These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."

Who was he talking to? His chosen witnesses. John xv. 26, 27, "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me: and ye also shall bear witness, (why) because ye have been with me from the beginning."

Again, in John xvi. 13, "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself: but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come."

Now who are God's chosen witnesses? His twelve chosen apostles.

Acts i. 8, "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Now we have all the testimony, and their testimony reaches to the uttermost parts of the earth. That settles the witnesses.

Now read Acts x. 39–41. "And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree; him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead."

Again, Luke xxiv. 48, "And ye are witnesses of these things."

Now when did these testimonies begin? On the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 1–4, "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Now can those brethren that still have to have the Holy Spirit to make them believe God's Word, can they speak with other tongues? (Try it.)

Brethren, just listen to one of God's witnesses. Hear him in Acts ii. 22, "Ye men of Israel, hear these words." All of Peter's testimony on that day is recorded in the 2nd Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

First witness. "These signs shall follow them that believe." Mark xvi. 17. "In my name shall they cast out devils." Read on and see who the Savior sent out that he called and sent as his witnesses. "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with (them) and confirming the Word with signs following." Who went forth? His chosen twelve apostles went forth.

Now read Hebrews and find out who was the first one that preached? "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him, God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will." The first witness is Christ. "And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the begotten of the dead, and the prince of the Kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. i. 5, 18.

Read Acts v. 1, 2, 3, 12, 15, 16. "But a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession, and kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet, etc. And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them. There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits; and they were healed every one." For this good work they were put into prison.

Read Acts iii. 6. "Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." And these signs shall follow them that believe.

"Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas; this woman was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died; whom when they had washed they laid her in an upper chamber. And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay to come to them. Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber; and all the widows stood by him weeping, and shewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them. But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes; and when she saw Peter, she sat up, and he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, presented her alive, and it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord." Acts ix. 36–42. And these signs shall follow them that believe.

Next, Paul was a witness to the Gentiles. "For thou shalt be his witness unto all men, of what thou hast seen and heard." Acts xxii. 15.

"When they heard this, they were babtized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." Acts xix. 5, 6. When you lay hands on your converts, do they speak with tongues?

They shall take up serpents. "And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.... .....And he shook off the beast into the fire and felt no harm." Acts xxviii. 3, 5. Now if Kansas and Nebraska and every other state, belong to the uttermost part of the earth, then we need no separate spirit apart from the spirit of the Word, to lead us into all truth, and besides all this we dare not even to attempt to add to the gospel, which is God's power unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, (on the day of Pentecost by the mouth of Peter) and also to the Greek at the house of Cornelius, by the same witness.

I have tried the one gospel for thirty-eight years on this line, in the belief that the gospel was God's power, and the only power to draw men to Christ, and that there is only the one name that saves men, and I further believe that Paul knew what he was talking about when he said to Timothy, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. ii. 16, 17.

Paul in Gal. i. 6–8 says, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." If Paul would stop here that would leave us out, but hear him in the 9th verse, "As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received let him be accursed."

In John vi. 63, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are life."

Paul said, "Let the Words of Christ dwell in you richly." Col. iii. 16.

Yours in hope.

Answers.

The begettal for the second birth is by the gospel. "For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." 1 Cor. iv 15. "Begotten again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Peter iii. 22. "Of his own will begat he us by the Word of Truth." Jas. i. 18. A simple intellectual knowledge of the gospel will not operate in the begettal of any one See 1 John ii. 29. "Every one practicing righteousness has been begotten by him." Diaglott. The first step in "practicing righteousness" is obedience to the gospel in baptism. By obeying from the heart that form of doctrine, we are then freed from sin. Then commences the practice of righteousness. While we remain in sin, the practice of righteousness is all abortive. There is no life to the begettal until after obedience. The reception of the Word of Truth cuts no figure without baptism. Unless the begettal reaches that stage, the begettal will never show any life. W. H. Wilson.

In reply to the question that was asked through The Restitution concerning the begettal, when it takes place, I should say that it was when one was converted. There must be a conception before a birth. The language of Jesus to Nicodemus concerning the birth. Paul in 1st Corinthians says, "Though you have many instructors in Christ Jesus, I have begotten you through the gospel." In 1st Peter, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again to a living hope by a resurrection from the dead." It was not by being baptized over, it was converted to the knowledge that Jesus was alive again. Just before this Jesus told Peter that satan had desired to have that he might sift him as wheat, but said he, "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not and when you are converted strengthen thy brethren." Submitted in the love of the truth. J. W. Booth.

In answer to Brother Hudler's question, my answer is, both before and at baptism, from (genuso.)

C. P. Graham.

In reply to Brother Hudler's question, will say that spirit begettal takes place in the act of baptism. When we receive the Word, (the gospel,) begotten of the Word, growth, birth, born of water, (baptism.) Spirit, begettal, growth, birth, born of spirit at the resurrection.

S. C. Oliver.

In reply to Bro. Hudler's question, will say, Yes, before, begotten by the Word, James i. 18. In the act of baptism, begotten by the spirit, born of the spirit at resurrection.

J. R. Fisk.

I will try to answer Bro. Hudler's question. Begettal takes place before baptism with all of God's children, as it did with his only begotten Son. John iii. 16. Please read Eph. iv. 5. Gal. iii. 2. Acts ii. 41; ix. 18; x. 37–47. "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one head." 1 Cor. xii. 13. Baptism is the seal of the begettal, or the one faith. Col. ii. 12, 13. Bro. S. H. Thomas, on Matt. xxv. and A. H. Zilmer on John's baptism, Acts xix. is all right. R. A. Humphreys.

Obituary.

Ira Vernon was born in New Jersey, Nov. 30, 1824, and died at the home of his daughter, adjoining his old homestead, in Blackford Co., Ind. May 15, 1900, aged 75 years, 5 mo. and 15 days. In Feb. 1848 he was united in marriage with Emily Miles. To this union were born four sons and three daughters, four of whom survive to mourn the loss which only a child can realize.

Some three years ago his companion, who had for so many years shared his sorrows and burdens and had sweetened his life by a wife's true devotion, was taken from him by death's cruel hand, since which time life had not been so sweet. Although everything that children could do to comfort and cheer their father in his loneliness and sorrow was done, yet his heart still bled and yearned for the comforting association of his devoted wife.

They had toiled together for so many years on the old homestead, for they were pioneers in that county, and for nearly thirty years had rejoiced together in the faith of the gospel. Restitution was a household word in their home.

They lived and toiled together in life, and they now sleep side by side in death, resting from their labors, and waiting for the Life-giver's return, to bring them their well earned reward.

Memorial services were held by the writer, and the esteem in which Brother Vernon was held by his neighbors and friends was evidenced by the large numbers that assembled to pay their tribute of respect to their departed friend and neighbor. The little church of Dundee has sustained a great loss in the death of Brother Vernon, and we pray that the Deliverer may soon return to redeem our loved ones and heal our broken hearts.

Bell Allard, wife of O. J. Allard, died March 8th, 1900, aged 30 years, of Lung fever, at her home, Eagle Grove, Iowa. She leaves a husband, one son, father, mother, three sisters, one brother and a host of friends to mourn her loss.

To the Brethren of Kansas and Missouri.

We pitched the Conference tent in the park here at Morrill, Kan., May 21, and will commence meeting at Severance, Kansas, June 1st. Then to Connor, Kan., June 16th, to Pleasanton, Kan., July 7th, and Prescott, Kansas July 28. These points are all close to the line between the two states. We would like to have as many brethren as can, attend these meetings. The annual meeting will be held in Kansas City about Sep. 1st, but a more definite notice will be given later. Some of the points we want to visit this season are not able to meet the expense of a meeting, therefore we depend upon the brethren at large to contribute to the work to enable us to meet these points. Send all contributions to P. H. Oatman, 2711 Olive St. St. Joseph. Mo. Any letter intended for me should be sent to the above place of meeting.

Brother Underwood:

Please say to the Household of Faith, that I am now at Santa Ana, California, and the Lord willing, will respond to calls to preach the Word, the Truth, Sound Doctrine, without making any charge, believing that the whole earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and if I am his servant I shall not want. With David I can say, "I was once young but now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." He is ever merciful and lendeth, and his seed is blessed.

Yours in hope of the kingdom.

Russia's Seizure of Masampo.

The action of Russia in securing possession of the fine harbor of Masampo in southern Corea undoubtedly increases the possibility of war with Japan. This new port, with its valuable harbor, lies opposite the Japanese coast and is almost as near as Calais is to Dover. If Russia carries out its project of using Masampo as a winter harbor for its war fleet it will not only be a serious menace to Japan but will be a breach of the protocol of 1898, by which Japan and Russia mutually agreed to take no measure of military significance without the consent of the other. The independence of Corea agreed upon in this protocol has been steadily encroached upon by Russia, and the war spirit in Japan has been growing at an equal rate. While Russia has been filling Manchuria and eastern Siberia with soldiers, now estimated at 110,000 in all, Japan has been pouring its surplus population into Corea as settlers and possible soldiers. At the same time it has been increasing its navy and equipping it for action.

Ever since Russia wrested Port Arthur and the Liaotung Peninsula from the Japanese after the China-Japan war, the Japanese have naturally had a grievance. This has steadily grown with the aggressions of Russia in Corea, whose independence Japan had gone to war to secure. Not long ago there was a good deal of excitement over the purchase of a large tract of land by Russians near the magnificent harbor of Masampo, and a number of Japanese immediately sought to checkmate this move by purchasing the water front of the Russian lots. It now transpires that the Russian purchase was made for the government, as suspected, and the rivalry at once enters upon a more acute stage.

Corea presents the only available outlet for Japan's overpopulated districts. If Russia gains possession of that peninsula it will also have Japan practically under its guns and there will be no future security against Russian annexation of Japan itself. This danger will increase each year with Russia's rapid concentration of men and ships in Asia and Asiatic waters. How much longer Japan will remain passive in the presence of this menace remains to be seen. It is not fully prepared for war, but it may decide that Russia is still less in a condition to fight. Not only is the Trans-siberian railway incomplete, but the Russian navy is at a great disadvantage. While Japan has its coaling stations and repair plants close at hand, Russia must do its fighting at an immense distance from its real bases—Odessa and St. Petersburg. Not only has it no adequate dockyards in Asiatic waters, but after the outbreak of war no Russian warship may be able to reach the far East from Europe because the coaling stations on the way are owned by Great Britain and these would be closed to the belligerents. It is this tremendous disadvantage of distance that tends to counterbalance the disparity in size between the two nations. To offset this advantage, however, there is the fact that Great Britain's hands are tied at present by the South African war, and Japan could scarcely hope to gain any permanent success against Russia without British aid.—Tribune.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference.

The time will soon be here for tent work, and as the tent needs some repairs, we ask all that have subscribed to the work to send in the amount of your subscription, and all others who will help in the work send in what you can.

The work this year, with the possible exception of one meeting will be down the state line, south from Kansas City.

We want to get into the field at the earliest possible moment.

I think the reason the brethren do not receive greater blessings in their work is that they have gone out of the way. I would recommend that all the brethren read Malachi iii. 7-12, if the Lord would bless the united effort and obedience in that day, will he not do it now?

Brethren, let us lay aside our differences and enter the work with the "Gospel of the Kingdom," as our cry. Let us support the work with our best energies, our prayers and substance and the Lord will certainly bless our labors.

Send all money to P. H. Oatman, 2711 Olive St., St. Joseph, Mo.

EARLY LESSONS, suitable for young or old, 30 pages, sold formerly for 10 cts a copy.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 30 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses. A Volume of 283 pages, cloth 25 cents, leather bound, embossed, and gilt edges, $1.00. By Wiley Jones. This book is so well known that it is only necessary to announce that it is for sale, to insure a market for it. We have undertaken to dispose of these books for the Widow of our lamented Brother Jones, and while getting them at this low price, you at the same time will help Sister Jones to much-needed money.

The Patriarch's Hope.

I know that my Redeemer lives—and at
The latter day—in person of his Christ,
His well-beloved and everblessed Son
From heaven returned—whose feet, those
"blessed feet"
Shall stand upon this veritable earth,
On Olives' mount near Salem's sacred shrine.
And though this mortal frame through sin condemned
Back to its native dust, and rot and ashes
My skin—this loathsome thing—shall soon become
The food of pestilence worms—yet in my flesh
Shall I see God—my God that doth me save.
I say not mortal flesh, for none so born
Can look on God and live. But fashioned like
The glorious body of God's Anointed Son,
Of which he is—in part—a member all alike.
Yea, even of his flesh and of his bones.
In glorious body thus, no more by blood
But then by Spirit filled shall I see God:
His face I for myself, and not another.
In righteousness shall my resplendent in
His beauty shall mine eyes behold the King.
The Sovereign Judge and Ruler of the earth.
And with his likeness when I wake I shall Be satisfied. O blessed Hope and sure.

The Chinese Question.

China is the home of secret rebellious societies, but it has remained for the "Boxers" to bring the great, indolent, half-asleep celestial empire to the verge of disintegration.

The crisis in the Orient, dreaded and avoided by Europe for half a century, seems to have come at last. As long as England, Russia, France and Germany could adjust their own quarrels over the partition of China by diplomatic bakeshifts the "Eastern question" slumbered. But at a moment when the powers interested in China seem to have been resting in self satisfied complacency, the "Boxers" suddenly spring into existence, declare their purpose to sweep the foreigners into the sea, start a reign of terror, compel the powers to land a handful of sailors and marines—and the crisis is on.

What or who are the "Boxers"? Who organized them? Who is their leader? What is their mission? These are questions asked all around the globe. The "Boxers" is the youngest of the great family of secret revolutionary societies that have menaced European enterprise in the last quarter of a century. It was organized in the Province of Shan-Tung to oppose German aggression. The society grew rapidly in numbers and its influence spread until today the great and densely populated Provinces of Shan-Tung, Honan, and Pe-Chi-Li are completely under its control. Not only are these provinces in northern China practically under the control and at the mercy of the "Boxers" but the society is rapidly spreading southward. It has already crossed the Yang-tse-Kiang River, and outrages in the southern provinces, where French interests now predominate, may be heard from any day.

But it is in the Province of Pe-Chi-Li or Chili, as it is frequently written, the greatest danger exists, for in this province is located Peking, the capital and center of Chinese administration.

The membership of the "Boxers" society is made up of coolies, river men, idlers, pirates, bandits, and criminals of all classes. But their leaders, although unknown to the European authorities in the far East, are unquestionably men of ability and shrewdness.

The "Boxers" may be considered as simply a part and parcel of the revolutionary propaganda in China. The society differs little from other societies known at different times as the "Society of Heaven," the "Heaven and Earth society," the "Triads," the "Black Flags," the "Peace Brotherhood," the "Tea society," the "Water Lilies," the "Floods," or the "Vegetarians."

These societies and others with different names but similar purposes, have waged constant war against the foreigners. They resent the presence of Christian missions and commercial enterprises alike. To them the engineer who surveys a railroad, the physician who comes to end an epidemic, and the missionary are equally the objects of aversion, and the secret society will murder the one as cheerfully as the other.

The Chinese do not want the foreigner for a neighbor. They do not want the newer civilization. They care not for railroads, commerce, or religion. They want to be left alone.

Thus, seemingly, the sole purpose of the Boxers is to drive out the foreigners and to destroy the missionary stations. Back of this purpose, however, it is believed, that the "Boxers" like all the secret societies in China in the past, hope to expel the Manchu dynasty from the throne and restore the great Ch'ing-ly dynasty. But for the present, at least, there is no indication that the "Boxers" are hostile to the Manchu dynasty, for all the news from the far East goes to confirm the suspicion that the Dowager Empress, for reasons of her own, is not only fully in sympathy with the society but is actually assisting them in their purpose to expel the foreigners. It is asserted, and not disproved, that the Empress has given orders that the Chinese army is not to resist the "Boxers," but that, on the contrary, the imperial troops have been instructed to prevent the further landing of foreign troops.

Within the last two weeks the "Boxers" have created a reign of terror throughout the Province of Shan-Tung and Pe-Chi-Li. Missionaries have been murdered, mission houses destroyed, and the foreigners residing there compelled to flee either to Peking or Tien Tsin. Engineering parties engaged in surveying new railroads have been driven away. The railroad between Tien Tsin and Peking has been practically destroyed. The bridges and stations burned, and the attendants either murdered or put to flight. In every case, in which Chinese troops have been ordered to protect lives and property they have not only failed but, refusing to fire on the "Boxers," have themselves been shot down by the fanatics. Even the foreign legations at Peking have been threatened.

This state of affairs compelled the powers to take steps, first to protect their own legations. Warships representing the United States, Great Britain, Russia, Germany, France, Italy, Austria, and Japan are at the port of Taku, near the City of Tien Tsin, and all have landed small parties of marines. These small bodies of troops, numbering less than 400 in all, are now at Peking, simply to prevent the mobs from attacking the foreign legations. Their number is pitifully small in the event of serious trouble, and if the Dowager Empress, carried away by the excitement of the moment, should order her troops to drive out the foreigners, their situation would be dangerous in the extreme.

But the question has already grown more serious than a mere proposition to protect the lives of foreigners. The political phase has loomed into view and within a day or two has assumed international importance.

Russia has made a direct offer to the Tsung-li-Yamen (Chinese Foreign office) to furnish an army to occupy Peking, and to put down the disturbance raised by the "Boxers" and to restore order. This offer, while not accepted, was not declined.

The day after Russia offered troops to China three Cossacks were murdered near Peking by the "Boxers" and that night a dispatch from Shanghai stated that Russia had decided to land an army and march it to Peking.

This news might not be disquieting were China and Russia alone interested in the affair. But the interests of the other European powers and Japan are so closely interwoven in the far East that independent action by Russia would produce complications which might involve all Europe.

But the complications which threaten to bring on a war murderously concern Russia and Japan. Between these two powers there is a quarrel, dating from the close of the Chinese-Japanese war, when Russia by show of force practically robbed Japan of the fruits of her victory.

Briefly stated, that quarrel is this: Japan went to war with China to secure the independence of Corea. China was defeated. The Japanese fleet and army captured and occupied Port Arthur and Wei-Hai-Wei, the two strongest harbors on the northern Chinese coast. Japan proposed to keep Port Arthur. Russia, with the assistance of Germany and France, compelled Japan to restore Port Arthur to China. Afterwards Russia took Port Arthur herself, and proceeded to make it the strongest military and naval base in the Pacific.

From the day that Russia took possession of Port Arthur Japan has been preparing night and day for war with the Czar. The work of creating a navy has been carried on with extraordinary vigor, both in dockyards at home and abroad. The army has been reorganized, thoroughly equipped, and brought to a high standard of efficiency. It is believed that today Japan is ready for any diplomatic crisis that might lead to hostilities.

On the other hand, Russia has been equally energetic in preparing for a conflict which all Europe believes to be inevitable. Port Arthur has been made as impregnable as fortifications and modern guns can make it. Immense quantities of ammunition and provisions have been stored. Medical supplies have not been forgotten, and a complete medical staff of surgeons and nurses, with every modern hospital facility, has been sent to Port Arthur. Troopship after troopship, loaded with soldiers, guns, small artillery, and supplies, have been shipped from Odessa, and, while Russia's secretiveness prevents accurate information, it is generally believed that the Czar has waiting at Port Arthur, Talien-Wan, New-Chwang, and other cities in his newly acquired Chinese possession—the Manchurian peninsula—not fewer than 75,000 men, all equipped for the field of battle.

It would not be surprising, however, if it should be discovered, once war with Japan is certain, that Russia has more than 75,000 men under arms in Manchuria. The resources of the Czar in men, and horses, and guns are enormous, and he could easily accumulate an army of 300,000 in the far East without the world being any the wiser. At present troops and supplies can be transported over the Siberian railway to Irkutsk, half the way to the Pacific coast, and down the Amoor River in steamers the rest of the way; and in all the region from the Ural Mountains to the Pacific coast there is not a newspaper correspondent who can divulge the news. The Czar keeps his secrets well.

Other events in the diplomatic world bear out the theory that Japan will resent the landing of Russian troops to restore order in China, even to the extreme of declaring war.

In November, 1898, Field Marshall Yamagata, the leader of the Japanese army and one of the ablest soldiers of the old world, temporarily assumed the Premiership of the Japanese Cabinet. It was soon learned in Europe that Yamagata had taken the position solely to place Japan in complete readiness for war. In writing of contemporaneous events in the Orient a well-known historian whose knowledge of Japanese politics makes him a recognized authority in Oriental affairs stated that war between Japan and Russia was only a question of time, and he predicted that on the eve of the struggle Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador at Washington, would be called to St. Petersburg, that Yamagata would resign his place as Premier of the Japanese Cabinet in order to again place himself at the head of the army; and that the Marquis Ito, the Bismarck of Japan, would be installed as the Premier of the Japanese Cabinet.

This prediction was made six months ago, when the present necessity for foreign intervention in China was undreamed of in Europe or America. And yet, within the last ten days, Russia has prepared to land an army in China, Japan has fled an angry protest at Peking, Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador to the United States, has sailed for home, Yamagata has resigned, the Marquis Ito is again Premier of the Japanese Cabinet and the Japanese fleet has been mobilized.

The events of the next few days may make up the issues of war between Russia and Japan.

At any rate, whether Czar and Mikado come to blows, or whether the "Boxers" are exterminated or triumphant, the events of the last two weeks have brought the final breakup of the Chinese Empire nearer to actual realization. And when the final breakup comes all the greater powers of Europe will be at hand to seize their respective parts in the spoils.

There is not likely, however, to be more than mere diplomatic friction in the division of China. The larger portion of the old empire has already been "staked out" by the European powers. Great Britain, Russia, France, Germany, and Italy all have their "spheres of influence" tolerably well defined, and there is little left to quarrel over.

A brief history of Europe's scramble for Chinese soil is important at this moment to all who are keeping in touch with the history making events in the Orient.

Portugal was the first nation of Europe to infringe upon the territorial integrity of the Chinese Empire. As long ago as 1586 Portugal leased the Island of Macao, near Hongkong, holding possession continuously until 1853, when the port and settlement were finally ceded in full sovereignty. In 1841 Great Britain took possession of Hongkong. France secured a cession of Cochin China in 1862, increasing her territory from time to time by wars of aggression against the natives.

But the great scramble for Chinese territory did not begin until immediately after the conclusion of the China-Japanese war. Russia and Germany led in international looting expeditions. Russia had long wanted a naval base on the Pacific open to her warships the year around. Her only base in the Orient was at Vladivostok, a harbor ice-bound eight months in every year. When Japan had whipped China into submission Japanese troops held Port Arthur, an ideal harbor, open the year around. Russia and Germany came to the rescue of China, and on plea of defending the territorial integrity of the Chinese Empire compelled Japan to give up Port Arthur.

The motive of the Czar became apparent when on March 27, 1898, it was announced at St. Petersburg and thus throughout all Europe that China had "leased" Port Arthur and Talien-Wan to Russia for twenty-five years. Needless to say, a Russian fleet occupied both harbors simultaneously with the announcement. On May 7 of the same year no additional agreement was signed between China and Russia, by which the latter secured a "sphere of influence" in the entire Manchurian Peninsula, one of the richest provinces of the empire. Under this agreement it was arranged that a branch of the Siberian railway should be constructed to Port Arthur and Talien-Wan. China also agreed that no railway concessions in Manchuria should be given to any other power; that no foreign concessions at all should be given in the zone north of the Russian "sphere of influence," and that no fresh ports should be opened to trade in that territory.

This agreement with China gave to Russia the Manchurian Province, embracing an area of 360,000 square miles, equal in size to the States of Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio. No one dreams that Russia will ever give up Manchuria. It is today treated and governed by the Czar as a part of his empire, just as much as Poland.

The acquisition by Russia of so important a naval base as Port Arthur naturally alarmed Great Britain and she immediately knocked at the gates of Peking, demanding "compensation." The Chinese government was powerless, and as a result of British importunity, backed by a fleet of warships within convenient reach, China "leased" to England the port of Wei-Hai-Wei, opposite Port Arthur. Great Britain has been busy ever since the date of the "lease," June 1, 1898, in planting heavy guns at Wei-Hai-Wei, much to the discomfort of the Russian invite officers at Port Arthur.

But Great Britain was not satisfied with a mere fort for a naval station. She wanted a sphere of influence commensurate with her importance as a great commercial power, and she wanted not only China but all Europe to recognize that sphere of influence as distinctively British. China by solemn agreement pledged itself "never to alienate any territory in the provinces adjoining the Yang-tse-Kiang River to any other power, whether under lease, mortgage, or any other designation." Thus a British sphere of influence was legally established. By the treaty Great Britain was able to say to the rest of Europe, "When the disintegration of China takes place, this much is mine."

Great Britain's sphere of influence was afterwards formally recognized by the other powers interested in China as legal and binding upon themselves. It includes the Yang-tse Kiang River and the rich Provinces of Kiang-Su, Ngan-Whei, Kiang-Si, Hu-Peh, Honan, and Sechuan. The extent, fertility, wealth, and population of the vast sphere of influence may be better understood by a comparison. If Great Britain, secure in the possession of Canada, were to secure from the United States a "sphere of influence" including the Mississippi River from its source to its mouth, with all the territory between the Rocky and Allegheny Mountains, she would have just about what she has secured in the provinces of the Yang-tse Valley. The Yang-tse River is one of the great water highways of the earth and the valley it waters extends from British territory in Burmah to the Pacific Ocean. When the partition of China becomes a reality, the British Empire in Asia will stretch from Persia on the east, across India, Burmah, the Yang-tse Valley, to the waters of the Pacific and the Yellow Sea, and it will be, next to Russia, the greatest empire in the world in respect to area.

But while Russia and Great Britain had been acquiring large slices of Chinese territory Germany was not idle. The Kaiser wanted a Chinese province, and he sent his navy to take one by force. In retaliation for the murder of certain German missionaries in Shan-Tung Province, a German force was landed at Kiao Chau early in the year 1898. Germany immediately notified the Chinese government of its intention to hold the port as a guarantee of Chinese good behavior. China could do nothing but submit to the inevitable. So, accordingly, in March, 1898, another "treaty" was solemnly signed at Peking, this particular one "leasing" Kiao Chau Harbor to Germany for ninety-nine years, and granting Germany an exclusive "sphere of influence" over the entire Province of Shan Tung. Germany was granted a sole right of railway construction in Shang-Tung, and a preference in all works for the development of the province, and for the supply of machines and material required for such development.

No sooner had China settled with Russia, England and Germany than France was ready with a demand for territory. This time France wanted the Island of Hainan and a coaling station at Kwang-Chow-Wan, on the mainland opposite the island. This was granted, as well as a "sphere of influence" in the Provinces of Kwang-Tung, Kwang-Si, and Yunnan, all bordering on the frontier of French Tonquin.

This sphere of influence, however, intrenched on British rights, and Lord Salisbury filed an energetic protest at Peking. China could only do one thing. In order to placate both France and England she gave the former the sphere of influence demanded, and to the latter "leased" Kow-Lung hinterland, a piece of territory embracing 200 square miles, on the mainland opposite Hongkong.

While these transactions were in progress Japan also took measures to secure her own interests. She did not apply for any lease-hold, but, owing to the proximity of the Japanese Island of Formosa to the Chinese Province of Fu-Kien, she demanded and obtained a pledge that no portion of that province should ever be alienated to any nation but Japan.

Italy undertook to obtain a footing in China, but did not meet with the success attained by the other powers. A strong naval force appeared at San-Mun Bay early in 1899 and demanded the cession of that harbor, three islands, a railway concession to the Lake of Po-Yang, and a sphere of influence in Che-Kiang Province. Although the demand was favored by Great Britain, China has so far completely ignored it.

As a result of this scramble between the greater powers of Europe thirteen of the nineteen provinces of China have been "staked out." Of the remaining six it is interesting to note that the province of Pe-Chi-Li, in which is situated Peking the capital of the empire, has always been tacitly regarded by Europe as belonging to the United States. This country has never indicated any purpose to secure a portion of the Chinese territory. But Europe has taken it for granted that in the partition of China the interests of the great American republic could not be overlooked or ignored. If the United States should today demand of the Chinese government a sphere of influence in Pe-Chi-Li province, it is doubtful whether any power in Europe would object, and Russia and England would probably watch the disembarkation of an American army, without a protest.

But in the final dismemberment of the Chinese Empire and the distribution of its rich provinces among the powers of Europe, Japan must first be recognized as an all important factor. If Russia defeats Japan in the war which all Europe deems inevitable, the disintegration of the Chinese empire will be rapid. If, on the other hand, Japan is the victor, the Chinese Empire may be preserved intact. For Japan is the natural ally of China, in spite of their recent war, and of all the powers of Europe Great Britain alone prefers the integrity of China to its partition. And between them Great Britain and Japan would be in a position to defy all Europe.—Chicago Tribune.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Scriptural restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. If your time is back you certainly can know it, and as you understand that we must have money to pay for paper, etc., you surely will be considerate enough to at once send in your renewals. We do not wish to "dun" any one, only to notify you concerning your account, and you will know what your duty is, and certainly attend to it.

THE Bible is both a defensive and offensive weapon.

IT was Longfellow, we think, who said, "Believe me, the talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well."

"If thou would'st read a lesson that will keep
Thy heart from fainting and thy soul from sleep,
Go to the woods and hills! No tears
Dim the sweet look that Nature wears."

IN the partial excavation of Babylon, near the Euphrates, a coin was found on which were engraved three figures of men in a burning furnace. A gigantic is placed opposite the furnace, and two or three people paying homage to it.

THE following paragraph from an unknown writer is worth preserving:—"Daily and hourly do your duty; do it patiently and thoroughly. Do it at the moment, and let it be its own reward. Never mind whether it is known and acknowledged or not, but do not fail to do it."

A SPECIAL from Berlin on the 11th of June says a drama is being played in Kronts, West Prussia, that would do credit to the Chinese Boxers. The Jewish synagogue of that place has been demolished, and great excesses against Jewish citizens have been committed, and martial law has been proclaimed.

AFTER we have heard the voice of Jesus calling to us through the gospel, we have something else to do besides merely believing the things that he taught. Concerning his sheep, Christ says, "They FOLLOW me. That is the most difficult part of the matter, but it is the test of our sincerity."

EVERY few days workers in the vineyard bear the same excuse from different people, "Oh, I have no time to go all over the Book to see whether you are teaching the truth or not." But we may be quite sure that in the day when the Lord makes up his jewels, Mal. iii. 17, He will have no time to gather these busy people."

Principles of Interpretation.

Luther, in his "Pope Confounded," says, "You say it may be interpreted thus. It may also be understood thus, —it may also be literally interpreted thus,—it may be mystically interpreted thus." Away with all these may be's. These, my friend Catharinus, are all refuges of lies,—mere loop-holes of escape, and evidently go to confirm the truth I maintain. Speak thus:—"This is the meaning of the passage, and it cannot be understood otherwise." You will then keep to one simple and uniform sense of Scripture, as I always do, and I always have done. This way of proceeding is to be a divine (?); the former a sophist. For you know that in every controverted subject we must abide by the literal sense, which is uniform throughout the Scriptures."

BISHOP LOWTH says a parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narration of fictitious events, or accommodate events applied to the illustration of some important truth.

"IT is in the struggle with difficulties that our best powers are developed and our strength increased. Take away all need for hard uphill toil, make life a flowery field of ease, and true manhood and womanhood will be spoiled. Just as the muscles of the body cannot become firm and tough without much physical exercise, so the muscles of the mind will remain forever feeble and flabby if no difficulties spur them on to exertion."

REUTER'S correspondent at Constantinople says regarding the important step recently taken by Russia concerning Armenian affairs:—"Following on the verbal representations, the Russian Embassy has presented at the Portea note of a serious and important character. The note sets forth the precarious position of affairs in Armenia. Attention is also called to various incidents already reported, and the Porte is called upon to remedy the present state of affairs."

As we go to press word comes of the opening of hostilities in China. The Chinese forts at Taku opened fire on the combined fleets, and as a result 21 Europeans were killed and 57 wounded. A Russian gun-boat was blown up, a British and a German gun-boat badly damaged, and two British Merchant vessels sunk on the one side. In return two of the forts were blown up, the rest captured by landing parties at the point of the bayonet, many hundreds of Chinese were killed. The relief party going to Peking was forced to return to the ships. All the nations interested are hurrying troops to the scene of trouble.

WE give in this paper an article on the Chinese question, and one on the North African situation. These articles are not merely to show our readers the horrors of possible war, but rather as pointing out the existing conditions that are working by perfectly natural and selfish means,—but under God's hand—toward the final conflict of armed men that is surely coming. The Chinese situation is worse than when this article was written, as the combined forces of the European nations approach the gates of Peking they are confronted by the Chinese army and denied admittance. Should this be enforced it is almost certain to lead to the killing of the foreign ministry, and all with them, as mobs numbering thousands occupy the streets. Russia is sending troops to the scene, and acting independently as was expected she would do, and now the powers are working to induce the United States to take the lead, and send a strong force to the place of disturbance. It is well to take note of the fact that this trouble lies largely in the section of China that has been set aside to be dominated by this country. Our interests are there, and we must perforce protect our interests. Naturally, quite naturally, our nation is led into the thick of it, even against our will. It only shows that One who is stronger is pushing forward his unwilling subjects. Let us watch.

Wisdom.

"Human wisdom is good—but good for nothing if it displaces the wisdom from above. God's work cannot be done in human wisdom. Christ must be made unto us wisdom. Man's teachings are a failure, the Spirit's leadings are a necessity. He does not qualify from without—he must dwell within and destroy selfishness."

Self-Sufficiency.

"Self-sufficiency ends in trouble. No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. We are placed in this world to be helpful to each other; and if men have a heart to be helpful, there should also be a willingness on the part of others to be helped. The boy who knows it all, and who cannot be taught, until with knocks and ruined health, broken constitution and empty pocket, he finds himself among criminals, learns when it is too late, how much he needed advice and counsel, and direction. The girl who cannot be advised, who knows her own business, and who in defiance of the wishes of true friends and wise counselors makes her bed in sorrow and links herself to life-long pain, and wretchedness and misery, she finds at last that the flowery path she marked out for herself is full of thorns, and that her life which might have bloomed in beauty and brightness has been blasted and blighted through her own self-sufficiency."

ALL God's arrangements agree perfectly. Darkness and sorrow go together. Brightness and joy are fit companions, and God intends to bless his faithful ones with unalloyed joy. And the sure Word of prophecy and the spirit of thankfulness unite with the words of the Psalmist, "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness." Psa. xcvii. 11, 12.

Salisbury on the Signs of the Times.

At the annual gathering of the members of the Primrose League, held recently in London, Lord Salisbury made a speech almost as alarmist as Lord Rosebery's a few months ago. He said, says the editor of Glad Tidings, "The elements and causes of menace and of peril, though slowly accumulating, may do so to an extent which would require all our effort to repel them." He advocated the training of large bodies of civilians to the use of arms. The general feeling seems to be that every able bodied man throughout Britain should be taught to handle the rifle and the spade. Evidently the Czar's proposals are not influencing the nations, and the time has not yet come for the beating of swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks."

And at a meeting of the British Empire League held lately in London, in recognition of the services of the colonial troops in South Africa, and to welcome the Australian Federation delegates, the Premier said, "The concurrence of the world's causes—to use a modern phrase—what I should prefer to call causes of Providence, have brought together the parts of this Empire in a wonderful concurrence—have given them a force which all the world can recognize, and which, if you will only allow it to grow by its own laws, and according to the impulse of its own vitality, will undoubtedly exercise an influence over the character and the progress, and the habits of the world, such as has never been exercised by an Empire before."

In the light of what we perceive to be the prophetic forecast of England's part in the closing drama of this age, these are very remarkable utterances from the man at the helm of the ship of state, and can but confirm us in the belief that she is certainly the latter-day Tarshish.

Selections.

For Next War: North Africa.

Many years have elapsed since Lord Salisbury, who at the present moment is the dean of all European statesmen in his wide experience and profound knowledge of diplomacy and foreign affairs, declared in one of those odd bursts of confidence which are denounced by his foes as "blazing indiscretions" that the question which would bring on the long expected and much dreaded outbreak of a war between the great powers of the old world would be in connection neither with China, nor yet with Egypt, nor the Balkans, nor yet Asia Minor, but Morocco. Of far graver import than the much discussed Eastern question was the Moorish problem, so he declared. And it would seem that now, when his public career is drawing to a close, the predictions which he made a quarter of a century ago are on the eve of realization.

There is no doubt that the English Premier had this in his mind when at the annual congress of the Primrose league he referred to the necessity of Great Britain being prepared for a conflict of far greater magnitude than the Boer war. All sorts of speculations were indulged in at the time by the press as to the nature of the peril that threatened the British Empire. Some expressed the opinion that he had in view the troubles in China, others that it was Russia's movements in Persia which alarmed him, while some even went so far as to insist that he was haunted by the dread of what the United States might do if Bryan were elected President, and called upon to put into execution his menaces against England. It now turns out that it was the Moorish crisis that he had in his mind, and that he regarded the death of the powerful Premier of Morocco occurring at a time when the present French government is in a tottering condition and destined ere long to be succeeded by an administration committed to a warlike policy, as entailing serious danger. For I have excellent authority of an official origin from London for stating that a "vigorous correspondence" is proceeding between the British and the French governments concerning the affairs in Morocco.

It is a fact well known, not only in the official world in London but likewise in foreign capitals, that England has determined upon occupying Tangiers in the event of France carrying out her intentions of seizing Tafilet. There is no doubt that this action on the part of the one nation as of the other would bring them face to face in such a manner that it would be impossible to avert war—a war which the German, the Spanish, and the Italian governments have had in contemplation for some time past.

In the case of most great international conflicts there is usually a possibility of averting actual hostilities by means of mediation, of negotiation, and of arbitration. In fact, when the Muscovite army was at San Stefano, in sight of Stamboul, and was only kept from entering the Turkish capital by a threat on the part of England to move up her fleet to the Bosphorus, war between Russia and Great Britain was avoided solely by means of arbitration at the Berlin congress of 1878. But in the case of the Moorish problem there can be no question of an international conference, for the only practical proposal to submit to a congress of this kind would be the neutralization of the Straits of Gibraltar, a matter which it would be preposterous even to consider unless England consented to relinquish her rocky stronghold of Gibraltar. That is why an international conference on the Moorish issue is so impracticable that the idea thereof is being scoffed at by old world statesmen.

If England is so determined that France should not seize Tafilet without such drastic action on her own part at Tangiers as would involve the two nations in war, it is because the possession of Tafilet, commanding as it does all the great trade and caravan routes of the Moorish empire, would place the latter at the mercy of the French and would entail either its occupation in the same manner as in Tunis, or else its annexation pure and simple to Algeria. The British commercial interest in Morocco surpass in importance those of all other nations. Moreover, the Sultanate constitutes a valuable market for English manufactures and exports a large quantity of grain and other produce to Great Britain. Yet the latter sooner than embark upon a war with France—so serious to both nations from an economic point of view—would prefer to have Moorish markets closed to her trade in the same way as those of Madagascar and of Tunis, were it not for the fact that her supremacy at sea is a stake in the matter. France's possession of Tangiers and of the coast line at that northernmost point of Africa, which almost directly faces Gibraltar, would almost, if not entirely, destroy the strategic value of Gibraltar, which is one of the principal links of that remarkable chain of naval stations and strongholds by means of which Great Britain retains control of India, and in fact of the whole of her vast transpontine empire. France possessed of Tangiers would have virtually realized that fantastic dream which is the theme of so many French writers and public speakers—namely: the conversion of the Mediterranean into a great French lake. The powerful colonial movement at Paris makes no secret of its object to secure possession of Morocco, and its leaders, several of whom belong to the Nationalist party in France, have been reviling the present Cabinet for not having already turned to better advantage, in the Moorish empire, the difficulties of England in south Africa. Some day or another there is to be a submarine tunnel connected in southern Europe with the northernmost point of Africa, and the French are resolved that the African end of this tunnel, at any rate, shall be in French hands.—Chicago Tribune.

Communicated.

Respected Friend:

Your letter of April 18th was found a few days since and reread, and in its perusal I find some thoughts that I fear have not been fully answered. You speak of the woman of Rev. xii., and claim that the child that the woman brought forth was Constantine. There are but two promises to any that are to rule all nations with a rod of iron. To the Son of God (Psa. ii. 9) this promise is given, also to the son that the woman was to bring forth. I cannot place Constantine in juxtaposition with Jesus Christ the Son of God, in the fulfilment of this promise. It can be only those redeemed by the blood of Christ out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, who are to rule all nations with a rod of iron. Again was Constantine caught up to God and to his throne? To intimate that Constantine ruled all nations by means of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is to strain the vision to its utmost tension. Your view of this vision makes too much imagery of it. Indeed you make it all imagery, and leave nothing for reality, except in regard to the dragon and I am thinking that there will be dragon enough found in the future to answer every purpose of a dragon. The great tribulation is certainly in the future, and whatever causes the great tribulation will develop dragon enough for all practical purposes.

As to what is called "Fair Chance," I have no confidence in it, it is a delusion. You say in regard to the heathen: that you cannot see why the living heathen are any more worthy of having the gospel than were their ancestors who are dead and gone. But I would say,—the gospel is not given them on account of their worthiness, but on account of their being of the great family of humanity. You say, also, "either we must deny that Christ died for all, or we must concede that all must be raised and given a chance to hear." We answer, not necessarily. Evidently, the plaster is as large as the sore. But if through inattention or neglect the plaster fails to cover the sore, who is accountable but the nurse? You acknowledge that the "Fair Chance" theory has had a pernicious influence in the world; then, why believe it? If it is a part of the gospel that Christ sent out his disciples to preach, (Mark xvi. 15), it should be preached everywhere, but if it is not gospel, it should be denounced.

Again—You say—"Jesus says—there will be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." You are a little mistaken in this: it was not Jesus that said this, but Paul in speaking of the Jews said, he had "hope toward" God which they themselves also allow that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust. But, admitting such a resurrection to be true, who are the just and who are the unjust? We understand that the just are the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. They are caught away in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air at his thief like coming. 1 Thes. iv. 17. But who are the unjust? They are all believers in Christ who have a character in some respects in harmony with the character of Christ and are brought to view in Rev. vii. 9. These are not kept from the hour of temptation, Rev. iii. 10, but go into the great tribulation where they wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb. This hour of temptation or great tribulation will be grievous and bitter "such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be." Matt. xxiv. 21. This will be the day of Anti-christ's rule.

You say the unjust will never see, nor taste the endless life, when the second death cuts them off, they are gone forever. You speak of the second second death as if a man must die the time in order to constitute the second death. I think this is a mistake. Let us examine the first death, and then we will be better able to understand what the second death is. The first account of death we find in Gen. ii. 17. "Dying thou shalt die." This penalty was denounced upon Adam in consequence of his disobedience, and this penalty Adam transmitted to all his posterity. This is the first death. The innocent infant and the righteous are under this sentence. All must die in consequence of Adam's disobedience. But Ezekiel xviii. brings the time to view when this law of life will be changed. He says—"What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel saying, the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge?" "As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel. Thus the prophet goes on to show that "If a man be just and do that which is lawful and right," he shall live and not die. We know that this law of life and death, does not and cannot obtain in the present dispensation. But when the restitution is complete, and Paradise restored, then Ezekiel's law of life and death will come into action, and this law of death is what is called the second death.

But many are horrified when we tell them that there shall be death or sin in the new earth state. See Isa. lxv. 17, 18, 19, 20. Here it is clearly shown that there will be sin and sinners and death in the new earth, and 1 Cor. xv. 26 and Rev. xxi. 4 are quoted to prove that there shall be no more death after a certain time. But in referring to the Greek I find that death in each of these quotations is preceded by a definite article, ho thanatos, the death. What death? Ans., the Adamic death. None will die in consequence of Adam's transgression and only each for his own sin. See also Rev. xx. 14, "And the death and the hades were cast into the lake of fire, this is the second death. In verse 8 of the 21st chapter, the definite article is placed before death and second making them to read the death the second.

In connection with the Adamic sin, see John i. 29, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Jesus the Lamb of God is appointed to remove the curse and take away the sin and death that Adam entailed upon his posterity and bring mankind back to the position that was occupied before the fall; under law, the breaking of which will result in death. This is restitution and nothing short of this is restitution.

Submitted in love,

D. HOWARD.

Obituary.

On October 20, 1899, James Monroe Olmstead fell asleep in Jesus, at his home in Oakland, Cal. after a few days illness, aged 76 years. Brother Olmstead came to California from Eastport, Me., in 1850, and being a Baptist, he was identified with that denomination as a charter member of the first church built in San Francisco. About 20 years since, however, he received farther light through the ministrations of Brother Benjamin Wilson, and was baptized by him at that time. He has been ever since a constant subscriber to THE RESTITUTION, and his walk as a Christian has been known as true and faithful. He was remarkably even tempered, and whenever opportunity offered, he presented the truth to others which was so dear to him. He was never ashamed of the gospel of Christ. For about ten years he met with the little band at San Diego, Cal., among whom Sister Carrie Williams is well known. He left a loving wife to mourn his loss to whom his death was a severe blow. Brother Thomas Wilson conducted the funeral services, assisted by Rev. Mr. Hill, Baptist minister. We believe the deceased brother could say "Thou wilt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands."

The heart can become habitually pure, and it can become gradually more hard. A man can harden so that he might yield to evil acts to which he at one time would have thought it impossible for himself to be influenced. Our natures can develop in two widely divergent directions, toward life or toward death.

Though we are not to despise the day of small things, we are not to be satisfied with it.

Earn sweet sleep at night by sweet and pure acts during the day.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

An Empty Seat.

(The following lines to the memory of our beloved Brother Mitchell, who fell asleep in Christ, March 6th, 1900, who was an honored member of the Church of the Blessed Hope, Cleveland, Ohio, from its organization in 1853.)

A seat once filled is empty now!
It's occupant has gone
To sleep in Jesus in the tomb,
Till resurrection morn.

His hope was placed in Christ the Lord,
Who suffered here and died
For sinners who believed his Word.
The Lamb, the Crucified.

Anxious for others to embrace
The faith he loved so well;
His anger did the people to trace,
And where he loved to dwell.

His Lord instructed him to search
The Scriptures for the truth;
Though while at home he loved the church,
Church of the Blessed Hope.

A strong belief did he maintain
His Lord would soon return,
To raise dead saints to life again,
For this his heart did burn.

Quiet and meek his daily life,
Yet, earnest for the truth
But he contends was free from strife,
From manhood hoed to youth.

He's waiting now in death's embrace,
To hear the trumpet sound
The call to stand and take his place,
With first raised from the ground.

To be eternal with his Lord,
To reign through endless days,
According to the written Word.
Through mercy and through grace.

A loved companion he has left,
A little while to mourn
Our loss of him, now so bereft,
Till for dear Lord's return.

To raise the dead and give them life,
His kingdom to possess:
To reign with Jesus, put down strife
Throughout this wilderness.

Then peace, good will to every man.
To earth's remotest bound;
And lion down lie with the lamb,
Wherever man is found.

Then sleep dear saint, where Jesus lay,
As he has blessed thy bed,
For soon he comes and then will say,
Now join thy living head.

The Regeneration.

"Then answered Peter and said unto him, behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto them, verily I say unto you that ye which have followed me in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 27, 28.

The regeneration here spoken of was apparently a familiar subject to our Lord's hearers, and embracing as it does the restoration and government of the twelve tribes, it seems highly probable that it is either identical with or will be included in what the Apostle Peter afterward calls, "The times of restitution of all things." Acts iii. 19–21.

We know that our Lord and his disciples, as well as the Jews in general, were deeply interested in the promised kingdom of Messiah, of which so much has been written in the prophets or prophetic Scriptures. It was by far the most prominent subject in their public discourses of our Lord, and his private instructions to his disciples. It was the topic of conversation at some of the most sublime moments of his life, and many of his most valued promises are associated with it. At the last supper he said, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until the day that I drink it anew with you in my Father's kingdom. And after his resurrection, when he was seen of them forty days he spoke of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God."

This subject of the kingdom was always uppermost in the minds of the disciples, so much so that on one occasion our Lord spoke a parable because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. We are in no uncertainty, moreover, as to the manner in which they always understood the promises concerning this kingdom and their own position in it. Their expectations are clearly indicated in the request of the mother of James and John, "Grant that these, my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom," (or in thy glory.) Mark x. 37.

Seeing how their minds were occupied with expectations of a glorious kingdom and an exalted position therein, we may safely conclude that when our Lord spoke of the regeneration, when he himself would sit on the throne of his glory and they also would occupy thrones, they would at once understand him to be speaking of his kingdom, and that the regeneration would be one of its characteristics or accompaniments, a conclusion that is greatly strengthened by what he afterward said to them on this subject, "I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke xxii. 29, 30.

It is often said that at this time the apostles misunderstood the nature of the kingdom of heaven, that they were carnal, and looked for an earthly kingdom. It does not appear however, that our Lord ever corrected what are supposed to be their erroneous views, neither is there evidence that their expectations were afterward changed or even modified. They were in error respecting the time of its manifestation, but as to the nature of the kingdom itself, they were evidently well instructed: for our Lord himself said to them, "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven," and when he had in parables unfolded to them some of the characteristics of it, in reply to his questions, "Have ye not understood all these things? they said unto him, Yea Lord." After his passion he was seen of them forty days, and spoke of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, but their question, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" shows us that their expectations were unchanged. Nor does the Lord's answer in the least indicate that they were wrong in the views they held. He told them plainly that it was not for them to know the times or the seasons, but he did not warn them that they were cherishing false hopes and expectations, which he surely would have done, had they really been doing so.

The writings of the apostles show that to the last, the kingdom of God was the object of their most ardent hopes, to which they constantly directed the minds of others. The following are examples of the teaching of the apostle Paul, concerning the souls of the disciples and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through tribulation enter into the kingdom of God, Acts xiv. 22. "And now, behold, I know that ye all among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God shall see my face no more." Acts xx. 25. "And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." Acts xxviii. 30, 31. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?" 1 Cor. vi. 9. "And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom." 2 Tim. iv. 18. At the close of the apostle Peter's life, when his end was near, he wrote, "For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Peter i. 11, and the apostle James asks, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" James ii. 5.

There is no truth in the whole Bible more clearly and emphatically stated than that the Lord Jesus Christ, who was taken up into heaven, shall come again in like manner as he was seen to go into heaven. His coming again is repeatedly referred to as the "blessed hope" of his followers, for then they also shall appear with him in glory. But it is quite as clearly revealed that the object of his coming is to establish his kingdom on the earth and reign over it with his chosen ones, and very much is said concerning the nature of this kingdom, its extent, its rulers, its subjects, its duration and its issues. In our Lord's day this subject was doubtless much better understood than it is in the present day. The great error of the Jews appears to have been in thinking that the kingdom was there on mere national grounds, because they were the children of Abraham, but our Savior taught them, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," and that many shall "come from the east and west, and north and south, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God, (or heaven,) but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

In the Sermon on the Mount there is much said to correct the prevailing error respecting those who are to inherit the kingdom; but there is nothing to show that the nature, dignity, and glory of the kingdom itself was not rightly apprehended. "The poor in spirit," "They which are persecuted for righteousness sake," "Those who do the commandments of Christ and teach them." "He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." These are the ones, these are the persons who are to inherit the kingdom, to the exclusion of the Scribes and Pharisees who sought glory of men.

In our own day the kingdom of heaven is understood to mean something so vague and indefinite that it takes innumerable forms and definitions, according to the teaching of different persons, but nearly all agree in rejecting the Jewish idea, without inquiring whether it is Scriptural or not; and whether it was condemned or countenanced by our Lord and his apostles.

The more this subject is looked at in the light of both the Old and the New Testaments, the deeper will become the conviction of its importance. Perhaps it is not going too far to say that Messiah's kingdom is the subject of the prophetic Scriptures; and that the regeneration and times of restitution of all things, are included in it. All the prophets speak of a glorious time, when the great King shall reign in righteousness and have dominion over all the earth: when men shall be blessed in him, and all nations shall call him blessed. One dwells upon the benificent character of the government of the King and its results: another states that the saints of the Most High shall possess the kingdom when the ancient world kingdoms represented by the head, breast belly and feet of the great image Nebuchadnezzar's vision, Dan. ii. are all broken in pieces and consumed by it, while another writes, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it, and many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem; and he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Micah iv. 1-8.

That this is the same great and glorious kingdom that is spoken of by all the prophets, though in a [redacted] ways, can scarcely be doubted. The whole being comprehended in the good tidings first announced by John the Baptist, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," Matt. iii. 2. Our Lord himself went everywhere preaching the good tidings of the kingdom, and at the close of his ministry he said to his disciples, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." The apostles never lost faith in the good news of the kingdom so emphatically announced by our Lord. They diligently strove to be themselves, and desired that others too might be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which they also suffered; and they exhorted to diligence and holiness, so that an abundant entrance into it might be obtained.

The Apostle Paul went about preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching that it is through much tribulation we must enter into it; and warning us that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance therein.

The importance of a subject so largely dwelt upon in both the Old and New Testament can hardly be exaggerated, and it seems strange that that which is so manifestly a future thing to be inherited by the righteous only, should ever have been misunderstood and confounded with the present dispensation, in which the righteous are led to expect sharp discipline, severe trials and sore chastisements, in order that in their Father's house they may be vessels unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work. Their present lot of trial and suffering is repeatedly placed in sharp contrast with their future. Paul says, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us; for our light afflictions, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." Trial and suffering in some form or other is still the lot of all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus; "for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." But, although often severely tried and chastened, the children of God ought to know that their Father in heaven is seeking their profit, that they may be partakers of his holiness, and they are exhorted and encouraged by their Lord himself. "But rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." "Fear not, Little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Still Preparing for War.

Every turn of the wheel of the different nations of the world seems to be made with one and only one object in view, that of strengthening her navies and armies. Prepare for war, increase the navies and muster the armies, seems to be the supreme thought of the hour.

The German government has just passed a bill to exclude the meat and meat products of the United States from the markets of that empire. The German people want our meats for food. They are cheap and have been proven healthful. The commercial interests of Germany have protested against the passage of this law, claiming that it will have the effect of stopping trade with this country, which would be a hard blow to the commercial interests of Germany. It is insisted, by those opposing the law, that if Germany excludes our meats from her markets, we will refuse to deal in their products, which will be greatly to their detriment. It is said the Emperor of Germany takes this view of the matter.

Our Minister to Germany protested vigorously on behalf of this nation against the enactment of the law, still it was passed. Why was it passed? The farmers in Germany wanted to exclude our meats from their markets because they want to shut off competition. The imperial government, including the Emperor, want to secure the passage of a bill appropriating a very large amount to build more warships and otherwise improve the army. The farmers are opposed to making this large appropriation. The government, in order to secure the passage of the bill making the appropriation for the navy, entered into an agreement with the farmers that if they would give them their support in passing the navy appropriation bill they would pass the bill excluding American meats and therefore the [redacted] it bill is passed.

The German people may go hungry because they are deprived of cheap food. The business of the German merchant and manufacturer may be ruined, no matter, everything must give way that the preparation for war shall go on.

When the navies are built and the armies of the world are mustered, then war must come. These great armies will not be permitted to rust out. God has caused the nations to arm until the time of the conflict was ripe. Can there be any doubt that we are now in the time of the end. Let us be sober. Let us be ready. "Watch for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

R. S. DOWNING.

P. S. The situation in China is indeed critical. The present crisis will pass, but it shows how acute the present situation is. Think of it, in this enlightened age of the world. Nearly all the great nations of the world combining their armed forces to prevent the barbarians from murdering people whose only offence is that they profess the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Truly we are in the time of the "distress of nations." The end draweth nigh. R. S. D.

To Brother Hudler's question as to when begettal takes place, I would say, In nature it is always before birth, and as baptism is a symbolic birth, Jno. iii. 5, begettal must necessarily precede baptism. The reception of the gospel—the good seed—the word of the kingdom into an honest and good heart, is the way and time of begettal while baptism is the initiatory act between the two stages or conditions—a fruit and a proof of our having been begotten by the Word of God. Editor Restitution:

Our tent meetings with the Missouri-Kansas Conference work are progressing satisfactorily, and a fair hearing.

I wish to congratulate Bro. W. H. Wilson on his successful handling of the discussion with Mr. Browning.

In answer to Brother Hudler's question will say:—Jesus said to Nicodemus that "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." To explain this for Nicodemus he said, "Except a man be born out of the water and out of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Here are two births, one out of water, and one out of the spirit. The one out of the water at baptism, a symbol of the one out of the spirit at resurrection. As these are based on, as a figure of the natural birth, there must be a similarity. And in all our readings on physiology and observations as to the natural we never read of nor heard of a begettal, conception, quickening and birth all at one and the same time, as would have to be in baptism.

In further explanation to Nicodemus as to the begettal, as Greenfield says of ginomai when used as to the work of the male parent should be rendered begotten, and when used as to the work of the female should be rendered born. Jesus said, John iii. 8, "The Spirit speaks where it sees fit; you hear his voice. So—in this way—is every one begotten of the Spirit." This is by hearing the glad tidings, as the Word is the Sword of the Spirit.

Following the begettal by the Spirit through the Word is the change of the affections—change of the mind,—change of the heart. This is followed by the assertion of the will—"I will arise and go to my father's house." Here is an assertion of life. And as in the natural, life always precedes birth, so this must precede baptism, for baptism to be of any avail. If this begettal and life is not there first it will be—if birth at all—a still birth.

Strange to me that Brother Hudler, or any other man among us, capable of dividing the Word rightly would ever have trouble over the questions as to the when, and the how, of the begettal. G. M. MYERS

Conference Report.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, convened as per announcement. All the officers were present. Bro. F. L. Austin came Thursday evening. It is indeed a great pleasure to chronicle another good and profitable conference meeting at Dutton. The brethren were all so cordial and all received such a hearty welcome, that we all felt that it was good for us to be there. The attendance was small the first evening and Friday was a rainy day, but it did not prevent the dear ones from coming, and by Saturday evening the attendance was large.

Ministers present were Elder L. C. Chase, Raisin, Michigan, Brother F. L. Austin, Argos, Ind., Brother Winchester, Byron, Michigan, B. W. and M. A. Woodward, Dutton, Michigan.

Business meeting Saturday, 1:00 P. M. Minutes of the last meeting read and accepted. All the officers were re-elected. H. C. Hammond, President; L. C. Chase, Vice President; E. Jackman, Secretary; A. K. Richardson, Treasurer; B. W. and M. A. Woodward, Evangelists.

Treasurer's report: Received with the amount on hand $329.58; paid to the evangelist $273.00; money paid for conference work was $31.50; paid out in all $304.50. Balance in the treasury $25.08. Moved and carried that the treasurer's report be accepted.

Evangelist's report: B. W. Woodward preached 115 sermons, funerals 7, married 3 couples, baptized 49. M. A. Woodward preached 108 sermons, funerals 5. Number of sermons for B. W. and M. A. Woodward 223. Moved and carried that our evangelist's report be accepted. Brother and Sister Woodward have done a good work the past year. May the Lord be with them and crown their efforts with success.

"Resolved that we favor a general conference to be called at the earliest convenience, and that our treasurer be instructed to appropriate the sum of $10.00, if necessary, to co-operate with the conference of any State or States (as the case may be to that end) to forward the aforesaid work.

L. C. CHASE."

"Resolved that Sister M. A. Woodward be constituted corresponding secretary, and is hereby empowered to co-operate with the secretary of any other State conferences.

L. C. CHASE."

"LADIES' TITHING SOCIETY."

Money received for the year (with what was in the treasury) $107.79 $40.50 was appropriated to send The Restitution to 7 different names. The good work is prospering and from a small beginning much good has and will be accomplished.

Solicitors were appointed from each church, viz., Dutton and Fisher, Sister Brewer, Watson, Sister Martha Pike, Brady, Bro. Worthington, Grand Rapids, Sister Ella Shults; Hillbrook, Sister A. Lake; Raisin, Sister E. West; Coats Grove, Sister Nora Coats; Byron Center, Sister Mapes. All the social meetings were good and a great deal of interest was shown by all the brethren and sisters that their faith was still strong in the coming of our Lord and Master. The singing was much enjoyed, especially the song service by Sister M. M. Nichols. Sister Woodward wrote to Brother Fred Greiner of Niagara Falls, New York, asking him if he could meet with us, if he could not, would he arrange a Bible reading for our conference. Being unable to come Brother Greiner sent the following subject. St. John v. 39, "Search the Scriptures." The Bible reading was well rendered by Sister M. A. Woodward and interesting and instructive to all.

Sunday morning, social meeting by B. W. Woodward, lesson Rom. xii. After the social meeting a poem was recited by Sister Pearl Stickler, "Something Strange," which was published in The Restitution of April 18, 1900. 10:30 A. M., sermon by Elder L. C. Chase, Luke i. 3, 4, subject, "Certainty of Things." After our Bible reading Sunday afternoon, the Lord's Supper was administered by Brothers Woodward and Hammond. Brother Chase is a man who is earnest and zealous. He delivered the Word very impressively, yet he does it in all kindness, and in a spirit of Christian love. He is indeed one of God's faithful watchmen, proclaiming God's message in all of its purity. Bro. Austin preached 3 able sermons during the conference, and at a request from brethren he was to remain a day or two longer. Bro. Austin's sermon of Sunday evening was especially interesting. Subject, "The Kingdom of God." May God sustain his gospel workers, that much good may be done before the Master comes. Though no one came out openly on the Lord's side, yet we feel sure that in many cases the seed was sown in good ground, and in due time will bring forth fruit meet for repentance.

Editor Restitution:

In your paper of March 14th I read words that do my soul good and should be of great encouragement for those who are waiting for our coming King, and I take courage and I am going now to do more for the cause. I wish you to reprint those beautiful lines, for in these days it is so natural to see people drift with the current, or in other words seek popularity; for instance when they go in a community they generally seek the most popular church. I now give you the words which I hope the dear brothers and sisters may place in their scrap book.

"Alone with Jesus; it is human to stand with the crowd; it is divine to stand alone. It is man-like to follow the people, to drift with the tide; it is God-like to follow a principle, to stem the tide. It is natural to compromise conscience and follow the social and religious fashions for the sake of gain or pleasure. It is divine to sacrifice both on the altar of truth and duty. Then the people go on in the same style to tell how the Apostle, in his first appearance before Nero, to answer for his life for teaching contrary to the accepted views of the Roman world. How Noah stood alone for prophesying the flood. Abraham wandered and worshiped alone. Daniel died and prayed alone. The church praised Abraham and persecuted Moses. How they praised the prophets and persecuted Jesus. The church and popes praised the Savior and persecuted the saints. Wanted today, men and women who will obey their convictions of truth and duty at the cost of fortune and friends and life itself."

In comment on the above: Are we steming the tide? For instance, Are we striving to lead some one out of the way of darkness? How many seeds Satan is sowing. Thou shalt not surely die, and man is possessed with an immortal soul that cannot die. Did the serpent not tell Eve this in the garden, and is not this proclaimed from the pulpit today; and millions believe it, and among them are there not some that are dear to us? Some are friends and others nearer ties. Are they not going down to eternal death, and are we in any way trying to uproot the mistake and in its stead give them wholesome food? Or are we just thinking, oh! It is no use, just let them alone. If this is the case, we have not the love in our hearts we should have; and in that day of his glorious appearing, when the Gentiles say, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies and vanities wherein there is no truth;" Jer. xvi. 19. Then no doubt our friends will turn on us and tell us, why did we not show them the way? When they see all and their doom is eternal death: when God told the Israelites that, this day choose life or death. See Deut. xxx. 15 and 19. So we see the two were placed before them (not going to heaven or hell, but life or death). Isa. xxxviii. Hezekiah was told he should die, and he turned and prayed and what were his words? For the grave cannot celebrate thee, they that go down to the pit cannot hope for thy truth. But the living will praise thee as I do this day, and God lengthened his life fifteen years. How different from modern death-beds, as they say the dead know more than the living. I would like to go on and say words of encouragement to the household, but know this, that to those who look for him will he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Yours waiting for Christ,

MRS. LOU GREER BUTLER.

To the Brethren of Kansas and Missouri.

We pitched the Conference tent in the park here at Morrill, Kan., May 21, and will commence meeting at Severance, Kansas, June 1st. Then to Connor, Kan., June 10th, to Pleasanton, Kan., July 7th, and Prescott, Kansas July 28. These points are all close to the line between the two states. We would like to have as many brethren as can, attend these meetings. The annual meeting will be held in Kansas City about Sep. 1st, but a more definite notice will be given later. Some of the points we want to visit this season are not able to meet the expense of a meeting, therefore we depend upon the brethren at large to contribute to the work to enable us to meet these points. Brother Underwood:

Please say to the Household of Faith, that I am now at Santa Ana, California, and the Lord willing, will respond to calls to preach the Word, the Truth, Sound Doctrine, without making any charge, believing that the whole earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and if I am his servant I shall not want. With David I can say, "I was once young but now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." He is ever merciful and lendeth, and his seed is blessed.

Yours in hope of the kingdom.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Brother Underwood:

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 27, 1900. NUMBER 24.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

A Kind Word When You Can.

Do you know a heart that hungers
For a word of love and cheer?
There are many such about us;
It may be that one is near.
Look around you. If you find it,
Speak the word that's needed so
And your own heart may be strengthened
By the help that you bestow.

It may be that some one falters
On the brink of sin and wrong
And a word from you might save him—
Help to make the tempted strong.
Look about you, O my brother,
What a sin is yours and mine
If we see that help is needed
And we give no friendly sign.

Never think kind words are wasted
Bread on waters cast are they:
And it may be we shall find them
Coming back to us, some day.
Coming back when sorely needed,
In a time of sharp distress,
So, my friend, let's give them freely,
Gift and giver God will bless.

Communicated.

Signs of the Second Advent.

Dear Restitution:

When restitution shall be fully completed, nothing that God made at the time of creation, will need to be destroyed, in order that either man or beasts may have all they may need for every purpose whatever. No, until after the flood man was permitted to use any living thing for food. God told Noah that he might eat meat. He at the same time made the animals, birds, fishes, etc., wild and afraid of man. But for this warning to the animals, man would have killed all of them and they would have become extinct.

The skins of animals were not used for clothing, for boots or shoes, or for any other purpose before the flood. Neither was the wool cut off of the sheep's back and made into clothing for man. Neither was the fur of animal or his pelt used to make robes for the first pair. Neither were the birds destroyed to decorate mother Eve's hat.

The prophets tell us that in the restitution age the animals, including all manner of reptiles, will become tame, gentle and kind. Isa. ii. 6. This cannot take place until the reason for the animals being made wild shall be removed. When man's desire to kill the animals shall cease then will the animals become tame and not before. Man is a fruigiverous animal. He was given the fruits of the field and the herbs bearing seed for food.

Man now cuts down the forest and burns the timber for fuel. He also mines the coal, bores for the oil and gas, and uses all of them for fuel, for light, etc. Will it always be so? No, it will not. I have said nothing will be destroyed to supply the wants of man. I am asked, how can we cook our food, warm our houses, make steam to propel our railroad trains, steam boats, etc., without wood, coal, oil or gas? We have already found a substitute in electrity. We are using it to light our houses, or towns and cities. It is also being used to propel street cars, operate cotton mills and all kinds of machinery. It was used at the Chicago Exposition, seven years ago, to propel boats, for cooking and for various purposes. It would be in general use now for heating, cooking and for propelling all kinds of machinery were it not so expensive. Where the trolly can be used, it is very cheap. Some day, ere long, a cheap process will be invented and then it will come into general use. The poor tired horse and ox will be turned out upon the plains and the mountains to graze and take a long and happy rest.

Electricity can be used over and over again and again, and still it goes back into its original element. Nothing is destroyed or in any way diminished. But some one will say, we have got to have wood, coal, oil or gas to make steam to run the dynamo to generate the electricity. In South Carolina I followed a small mountain stream for several miles and saw dam after dam across it, raised to the height of twenty to thirty feet. The water power thus created, was used to run dynamos to generate electricity which was conducted by wires to cotton mills and used to run the machinery in those various mills. Not an ounce of fuel was used. The mills were located on the railroad and the power was carried to them.

I have already said that electricity can be used to generate heat, as was done at the Chicago exposition to cook with. That being true it can be used to generate steam if necessary. Compressed air is also being largely used as a motive power, and liquid air, will ere long, come into use. Compressed air does more than simply furnish power to run the machinery, it ventilates as well, as the air is used and escapes from the machinery, it returns to its natural condition. No matter where it escapes it creates a current and thus ventilates the building or place where it escapes. To illustrate; the most difficult thing to contend with in deep mines is to keep sufficient pure air in them to enable the men to work. To remedy this, compressed air is used to run the drills. When it escapes at the bottom of the mine it fills the mine with pure air and creates a current of air which escapes at the opening of the mine at the top, and carries with it all the gases and other impurities and thus makes the mine habitable. I have no doubt that in time, compressed air will be used for ventilating purposes as water is used for irrigating purposes. The air will be compressed and carried to the place where it is to be used either in pipes or in vessels, and be there allowed to escape, as it may be needed, and thus thoroughly ventilate rooms and places where people live, that are now very unhealthy for want of pure air. What a great boon this would be to people who live in the crowded districts in the large cities, only those who have witnessed the terrible distress and sickness brought about by lack of ventilation and pure air, can appreciate. Those dark gloomy dungeons where poor people are compelled to live and where their children make a puny, weak growth, most of them dying in childhood, will with plenty of pure air and plenty of electric light and electric heat, become pleasant, healthful, happy homes. The time will come when landlords will be compelled by law to furnish all their tenants a full and ample supply of compressed air and electric light and heat, and thus make their homes healthful and comfortable. This can be required by the authorities as a sanitary measure. How much the different boards of health in this country are aiding in getting the people ready for a reign of cleanliness as well as godliness, which must come when King Jesus takes the throne.

But what has all this got to do with the second advent of our Savior? If we can find out what is to be accomplished during the millennial age, and can also learn that the very things to be done in that age are now beginning to be accomplished, or the world is preparing and getting ready to do those things, we may very properly conclude, that we are rapidly approaching the time of the end. We must remember that this age will, in some respects, lap over onto the next. The Jewish age laped over onto the Christian age. Jesus preached three years and a half. During all that time the temple service was observed.

No close student of the Bible can come to the conclusion that it was God's original plan and purpose that part of the things which he created should be destroyed that the remainder of his creatures might be supplied with the necessities of life. O, that cannot be. When the curse is removed we will get back to where the world was before the fall. Are we beginning to get ready for such a condition of things. Is electricity the coming motive power. Intelligent people believe it is. It is already the medium for lighting.

Timber is becoming scarce. Scientists tell us the coal measures are being worked out. They also tell us that the oil and gas fields are being worked out, and that ere long will fail. The Creator of heaven and earth made enough of these things to supply all the needs of the human family. If these things are beginning to fail, is it not evidence that we are approaching an age in the world's history when they will not be needed? No one doubts that there is an abundant supply of electricity for all purposes and it will never grow less by use. May it not be true that we are getting ready for the millennial age with much more rapidity than we realize. God rules in the affairs of men and is ruling and over-ruling all things for the accomplishment of his divine purposes. By means of electricity we can and do talk around the world. What may we not be able to do, when we become masters of this wonderful force. Do we realize the grandeur of the things that are just ahead of us? Are we prepared to act well our part?

"We are living we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
Ages and ages telling
To be living is sublime."

"The entrance of thy Word giveth light."

Mack. Friend B, in our investigation of this subject of eternal torment, if we go back to the Old Testament and examine the application of the word hell, we will find that it does not mean a lake of fire and brimstone, nor anything resembling that thought in the remotest degree. The word hell occurs thirty-one times in the Old Testament and is from the Hebrew word sheol in every instance. Instead of being described as a place of conscious torment in a lake of blazing fire, it is described in the context as a place of darkness (Job x. 21). Instead of a place where shrieks and groans are heard, it is described as a place of silence. Psa. cxv. 17. Instead of it in any sense being a place of pain or remorse, the context describes it as place or condition of forgetfulness. Psa. lxxxiii. 11-12. There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest (Eccl. ix. 10). His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish. Isa. cxlvi. 4. The meaning of sheol, the hell of the Old Testament, is the grave or condition of death. All go to that hell, both righteous and wicked. See Gen. xlvi. 29-31. That "Jacob's gray hairs would be brought down in sorrow to the grave," (sheol, hell). This same word sheol is rendered grave thirty-one times and pit three times in our common version by the same translators. This shows that they put their own construction on its meaning. The Greek writers of the New Testament render the Hebrew word sheol by the Greek word hades. See Acts ii. 27. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hades," is a quotation from Psa. xvi. 10. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol." The revisers of the new version did not change the Greek hades but carried it over. They had been preaching a hell of eternal torment from that word so long that they were ashamed to give it the correct translation (the grave), that would have opened the people's eyes to the humbug that they had been palming off on them. There are two other Greek words rendered hell in the common version, the word Gehenna meaning a place of utter destruction, and Tartaros. See 2 Pet. ii. 4, which reads "God spared not the angels who sinned, but cast them down to hell (Tartaroo) and delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment. It appears that when our translators came to the word Tartaroo, they were uncertain as to its meaning, but they thought they knew where those angels who sinned, ought to be, so they sent them to hell, but this certainly cannot be the lake of fire and brimstone, for it is stated to be a place of darkness. And it is not their finale condition for they are "to be reserved unto judgment." See Jude 6.

Rev. B. We read in Rev. xiv. 10-11. That the wicked "shall be tormented with fire and brimstone." "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever." We also read in Rev. xx. 15, that "Whosoever was not found written in the Book of life was cast into the lake of fire." It appears to me, Mr. Mack, that these statements, should forever settle the question of a lake of fire and brimstone, in which the wicked are tormented forever and ever.

Mack. We must remember, friend B, that the statements on which you found your belief are all symbolic.

In Rev. xx. we have the vision of the beast John saw rising out of the sea. This beast according to the leading Protestant expositors represents the Catholic power, inculcating a false system of religion. That church is said to be the mother of harlots, and if she is the mother, I think the daughters will be found among the degenerate Protestant churches. The whole system symbolically called "Babylon that great city," in chap. xiv. 8. Then the third angel's denunciation in ver. 9-11, would appear to be not against the wicked in general, but against those who worshiped these false systems, which is only a small portion of earth's teeming millions. This statement does not appear to refer to the future state, for in ver. 11, they are said to "have no rest day nor night;" we are taught that there will be no night there. "The smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever. Cruden's Concordance says, "forever, everlasting, and eternal are sometimes taken for a long period of time, and are not always to be understood strictly." Adam Clark says, "Forever and forever and ever are to be taken to mean as long as a thing, considering the surrounding circumstances can exist." Now, friend B, we must not take Scriptures of doubtful interpretation, such as visions, symbols, and parables, as a foundation for our faith, and ignore the great mass of positive, plain statements of the Scriptures that the wicked shall be utterly destroyed. In Psa. xlix. 20, they are likened to "the beasts that perish." lxviii. 2, "As smoke that is driven away, as wax that melteth before the fire." xxxvii. 20, they are compared to the fat of lambs, consumed into smoke. Isa. ii. 8, compares them to garments to be eaten by the moth. To "burn like tow," Isa. i. 31, "Consume like thorns," xxxiv. 12. "As though they had not been." Obed xvi.; chaff, Matt. iii. 12; tares, xiii. 40, any branches to burn," John xv. 6. As "natural brute beasts to be destroyed," 2 Pet. ii. 12. They are likened to the most perishable substances. If the wicked are to be tormented forever and ever, then these comparisons are all false, for these things all lose their forms and substance, which the wicked never do if the popular theory is true. Paul in 2 Thes. i. 9, tells us plainly what the doom of the wicked shall be. "They shall be punished with everlasting destruction. See also Phil. iii. 19; 1 Thes. v. 3; 1 Tim. vi. 9; iii. 16. Now friend B, can we ignore all these plain statements of the Scriptures, and take up parables, symbols and visions and build up a hell of eternal torment for the wicked? That appears to be wresting the Scriptures to our own destruction.

In Rev. xx. 11-15, we have the vision of the general judgment, at the end of the millennial reign. The books were opened, "and the dead were judged out of those things written in books, according to their works. The sea gave up its dead, and death and hell delivered up their dead, "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Here we have the symbol lake of fire, declared to be the second death. In Gen. iii. 17-19, God in passing sentence on Adam explains what he means by death, "Unto dust shalt thou return." It is that condition which causes man to return unto dust. All are subject to the penalty pronounced on Adam, and all have the promise of a release through Christ from that penalty. "There shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust. After the final judgment, when the dead are all brought up and judged, then those who are found unworthy of eternal life will go into the symbolical lake of fire, the second death, they will be returned to dust again, and "Be as though they had not been." That will be their everlasting punishment. It will be everlasting, for from that death there will be no release, "There will be no more sacrifice for sin." Heb. x. xxi. 1-7, we have the vision of God's government under the symbol of the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, and God promises to dwell with men, and they shall be his people, and he will be their God. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away. And he that sat on the throne said, Behold I make all things new, and he said unto me write, for these words are true and faithful." Now, friend B, if these words are true and faithful, then God at that time has a clean universe, there is no place in all of God's domain for a place to torment the wicked in, there is no place for pain and crying, no place for tears and groans. At that time "Every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, Blessings and honor, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Rev. v. 13. Listen, friend B, can you hear any wails of damned mingled with that glad anthem. No, friend B, there will be no creature suffer pain in all God's universe, but those who obey not the gospel of God will receive as their reward everlasting destruction.

Seeing Bro. Hudler's communication in THE RESTITUTION some time ago, calling for a "yes or no" answer to his question, I cannot see where that should do Bro. Hudler or any one else any good, more than to gratify a curiosity, as that would be only a matter of opinion unsupported by evidence. I have waited some time to see what would be the outcome of the question, thinking that some of our able teachers or writers would add some knowledge to the subject that would be acceptable to the readers of THE RESTITUTION. Would it not be well to include the different begettals and births, that occur to mankind, so we may get a clear understanding of the subject? Nearly all the teachings of our Savior consist in types and shadows, and things spiritual were analagous to the natural. Let us then take the words begotten and born and keep true to this thought.

I notice that some of the brethren that have expressed their ideas speak of two births; I infer from that, that the natural and spiritual is meant. I have waited some time to see what would be the outcome of the question, thinking that some of our able teachers or writers would add some knowledge to the subject that would be acceptable to the readers of THE RESTITUTION. Would it not be well to include the different begettals and births, that occur to mankind, so we may get a clear understanding of the subject? Nearly all the teachings of our Savior consist in types and shadows, and things spiritual were analagous to the natural. Let us then take the words begotten and born and keep true to this thought.

I notice that some of the brethren that have expressed their ideas speak of two births; I infer from that, that the natural and spiritual is meant. I see, too, that some claim that being born of or out one element, begets for another; or in other words, being born and begotten at the same time. Let us be careful brethren, that we do not teach Campbellism, and like a prominent member of the Christian church a few days ago denied that the resurrection was a birth, was rather nonplussed when I read positive testimony that it was a birth, but is still preaching spiritual birth at baptism. I therefore conclude that to

"You know a man against his will,
He holds the same opinion still."

But let us take up the question of births, and examine them in the light of God's Word, taking the reasonable position that there can be no birth without there being first a begettal; and as all are based upon the natural there must of necessity be a duration of time between begettal and birth.

In the first or natural birth we are begotten by the will of man; born of woman, a natural condition. This was the situation of Nicodemus at the time of his conversation with Jesus, as recorded in John iii. 5. He had experienced one birth, but Jesus holds two more up to his view, viz: of water and of the Spirit. Possibly my brother will say, baptism of water is not a birth; has not my Christian friend just as good a right to say the resurrection is not a birth? But James says, "Of his own will, begat he us by the Word of truth." This begettal brings us to the necessity of a birth of water, where we are (born) raised up to walk in newness of life. But of what will it avail us if we stop there; if we do not walk after his will? But you may say that Jesus being our ensample had but two births. I reply neither was he begotten by the will of man, nor had he any sin of his own to answer for. Many men have been begotten by the gospel, and have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine that made them free from sin, and yet have gone back to the beggarly elements of the world, and went down into the valley of death, without hope and without God, as sure as there is any truth in the great volume of inspiration.

Peter says, "Blessed be that Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again, unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." To whom was Peter speaking? To the "elect." To those who first had been begotten by the "will of man." Second, these same ones had been begotten by the Word of truth, and had been born of water: and now being again begotten by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, thus proving, confirming that he was indeed the divine Son of God, the Savior of the world, as assumed by himself: and all those who in the dim and misty past had been divinely inspired, and commissioned to speak of him to a doubting world.

Here then comes the trial of our faith. The test us to whether his quickening Spirit abides with us and being manifested day by day. Have we the strength and vigor to bear the cross, to endure the taunts, the reproaches, the scorn of false friends, and honestly say we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ? Can we turn from the glittering allurements of the world, and faithfully continue in good works for the Master until the end, and thus come out victorious, and receive that spiritual birth, that crown of life, when the Life-giver shall appear. Or shall we enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, and not come into life? Let us work earnestly for the One who has given all to us, that our calling and election may be sure.

Submitted in love of the truth,
MERRITT ELLIOTT.

Editor Restitution:

I would just say that we continue our weekly meetings at Foothill as usual. We have just enjoyed a visit from Bro. Mason of Toronto, Ont., who preached for us twice last Sunday. We had friends with us from Salamanca, N. Y., also from Troy, Pa., and Selkirk, Ont., and I think all enjoyed the meetings, and I hope a favorable impression was made upon the minds of those who heard. Comparatively speaking there are but few who are really interested enough in religious truth to induce them to search the Scriptures in order to learn the truth. People do not generally read and act for their own particular benefit. They are lead and influenced more or less by others. Oh, that they might be led to receive the truth as it is in Jesus and be benefitted thereby. I am a little surprised to see so much difference between the views of some of our preaching brethren on the subject of begettal. Christ said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God." The birth of water I understand to be baptism. There must be a begettal before a birth. This being the case the begettal takes place before baptism. James says, "Of his own will God begat us with the Word of truth." Peter says, "This Word is the gospel." And Paul says, "I have begotten you (the Corinthians) through the gospel." Baptism is not the gospel, but the first act of obedience to the gospel. With these few thoughts I will close with love to all.

Never pun or parody the Scriptures. It is a sign of an uncircumcised heart, and a case of foolish jesting that is not convenient.

The Chicago Tribune of a late date contained a letter written in England, May 22nd which said. "The Second Adventists of England are busy at present making preparations for an early translation of the faithful to heaven; and adds that a year ago the members of the Russian wing of the church sat up many nights in white raiment and waited for the founder of the Christian religion."

The war in South Africa is almost lost sight of by the greater events in China. However it seems that the British forces are gradually working with a definite purpose in view, though no heavy fighting is reported. There is a quiet drawing in of the lines that will result in crushing the Boer forces or scattering them into small bands. Already there is talk of drawing off some British regiments for service in China.

It will be remembered that early in the year Brother J. H. Willey, one of the members of our Board, and his wife, left San Francisco for Australia to be gone some time on business. Mrs. Willey has consented to write a few letters concerning places and things they see and we give our readers the first one this week. While necessarily not strictly of a religious nature, still we trust they will be interesting as showing the condition of the other side of the world.

Self Importance.

It would do us all good to remember that the world carries us, and that we do not carry the world. With all our self-importance it would be easy for great God to show us that we were not at all necessary. The poet's question should be remembered, who, to the man who is thinking only of his own "individuality," as lost to the earth if he should die—answers:—

> "Good soul, suppose I grant it thus,
> Who'll weep for thy deficiency?
> Or will one beam be less intense,
> When thy peculiar difference,
> Is cancelled in the world of zones?"

Some people seem to think that the light would fail altogether if their influence were to decline; but this is not the humility of the truth, nor the estimate of an enlightened reason. The only source of real living influence is God; the only light of men is Jesus Christ. The only permanent foundation for the truth is the Word of God." The fathers, where are they? And the prophets, Do they live forever? From Abraham to the present day the heroic defenders of the truth are as unconscious in the dust of death as if they had never been. They were champions in their day,—they fought the battle well, but the law of sin and death prevails for a while and so they sleep. What then? God does not sleep. The Truth is not dead. Let us put our poor fluttering hearts against the bosom of eternal calmness, and learn patience and hope under the shadow of the great Rock."

The United States has made another demand on Turkey for payment of the claim on account of the murder of some missionaries and destruction of property. It is not likely the Porte will pay any more attention to this than to former demands, and possibly our nation may have to enforce the claim.

To attempt to give an outline of the situation in the Orient would require more time and space than is at our command, and to presume to say what the outcome will be would require one endowed with a prophet's mantle. In understanding the condition one should get the map of China and surrounding countries, and mark the position held by the different European nations, outline of which was given in our issue last week. The northern part is really in the hands of the Russians—all the province of Manchuria. It is well to bear in mind that Russia does not really claim more than the socalled "sphere of influence" in this section, yet she does control it as much as if it were actually a part of her empire. The British "Sphere of Influence" takes in the Yang-tse-kiang river territory, but it should be remembered that England has no such a hold on this portion that Russia has in her part. The tribes of the Russian section are so near like her own people that they are easily assimilated. For England to exercise sovereign rule in her sphere would require many years of labor and an army of hundreds of thousands of men. Inasmuch as these two powers are by consent of all nations and peoples pitted against each other, we should watch carefully their movements. Notice and locate Port Arthur held by Russia, Wei-hai-wei held by England, and their close proximity to the present scene of conflict. The warships can go to Taku, there land their forces and proceed overland to Tien-Tsin, and on to Pekin the capital. The present situation is discouraging to all interested. In Pekin a few hundred European troops with the representatives of the various governments, our own included, are gathered, and it has been over two weeks since direct word has come from any of them. Meanwhile rumors are current that all are safe, again that all are murdered. A force that started under Admiral Seymore and were known to be half way from Tien-Tsin to Pekin, it is thought, must be in almost hopeless condition. At Tien-Tsin the foreign troops are surrounded, and have been subject to bombardment for some days, and are surely short of ammunition and food. At Taku while the foreigners have taken possession of the forts it has been only after severe loss. A relief column of American and Russian troops that started to relieve Tien-Tsin were compelled to return or suffer annihilation. The Empress Dowager has apparently let loose the Chinese army to unite with the Boxers in expelling the foreigners, for it is no longer a fight with a mob, but with trained soldiers armed with the best modern weapons. We can only wait and watch the development of the "Eastern Question," and in this country we will especially note the part our nation is to take in it. Some months ago, when England and Japan wished the United States to unite with them in an effort, by show of force, to maintain the "open door" in China, the answer given was to the effect that when our "interests" were interfered with we would take steps to protect them. Will our government consider the destruction of the property of her subjects, and their murder finally, as sufficient pretext to warrant her invading the land of the "heathen Chinee" and getting judgment? Students of the prophetic Word will keep close watch of the movements of these powers.

The Day is at Hand.

More emphatically than ever before may we say, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand." The age of the kingdom cannot be very far away. The many-sided and all-converging evidence forbid any other conclusion. That line, which is now like a haze upon the sea, will soon shape itself into the cliffs of the land of promise. We can almost feel the ground-swell of the vessel now. The swallows are lighting upon our mast-head. The perfume of Lebanon and Gilead come to us on the breeze from the land." We must be nearing home. Courage, then, brethren,—let us keep our hearts filled with reverence to God; let us be ever loyal to his Christ. Let us keep to the doctrine, the fellowship, the breaking of bread and the prayers. Let us hold fast the form of sound words, and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and then we shall be able to stand through any and every evil day."

The Outlook says [illegible] Maine has 282 pas[illegible]. Some of those once s[illegible] serve as cheese factor[illegible]ills, and road-houses. Th[illegible] sections of the agricultu[illegible] produce renowned for piety. th[illegible] attitude toward religion [illegible] solid indifference. And so the [illegible] is being piled up day by, day that the glorious Lord will find the field just as he predicted. One of the gravest things to be found will be, The faith once delivered to the saints. Brethren and sisters of the Church scattered abroad, let us keep on the watch-tower; let us take heed lest the things we have heard leak out, and after all our amazing privileges leave us Christless, godless, hopeless.

Jewish Intelligence.

The Volks Advocate [illegible]: "The Prussian [illegible]ceed to expel from [illegible] Jews, without making any [illegible]ce between rich or poor, who may have been inhabitants of Prussia for a long time, or only lately arrived. When it is known that a Jew has come from Galitzia he must leave the country. Two hundred Galitzian Jews from Dortmund must leave the country in a little while.

The American Hebrew says the emigration of Russian Jews still continues. In one town, Zaslavi, forty families leave every day. Altogether, since 1892, 5000 Jewish families from that place alone have gone to America. We do not know whether or not the above facts have had anything to do with the change that has been made in the policy of the Russian government,—at any rate, the Jewish Gazette brings the unexpected announcement that the Imperial Councillor of Russia has given Jews the privilege of living anywhere they please in Russia. But it adds: "It is hard to tell whether this project will go through altogether, but it is hoped that the Jews will not be as restricted as heretofore in choosing their residence.

The Volks Advocate also says the laws prohibiting the immigration of Jews to Palestine have come in Turkey very severe, not also against foreign Jews, but also against Turkish Jews. The latter are only [illegible] passports for three months, [illegible] this law in force [illegible] will assure itself that Jews will not be in power in Palestine."

The Die Welt says Dr. Geasman, the representative in the Austrian Parliament has made a proposition to forbid Jews dealing in Christian prayer books and devotionals. If this should be passed the Jewish manufactures will be forbidden to manufacture rosaries. This article is solely manufactured by Jews in Austria and Germany.

In spite of their adverse circumstances word comes to us that the Jews of the Caucasus are now becoming adherents of the Zionist movement. In the town of Vladi-Caucas, there are 160 Jewish families, and two Zionist societies have been formed, one for males, both number 150 members each, and that Zionism is becoming more popular every day.

Progressive Methodism.

The Advent Review says that in December last, nine students of the Boston University School of Theology, a Methodist Episcopal institution protested against the infidelity that was being taught them. As stated by one of the students, the case was as follows:

"Coming from the West to Boston University School of Theology a year ago, I was shocked to find the most rabid rationalism taught as Old Testament exegesis, under cover of a leading Methodist School. Coming to Messianic prophecy, only half a truth was taught. Further on, Jesus Christ was no authority on Old Testament Scripture. The miraculous conception was set aside, and the atoning blood made non-essential. The president and faculty sustained the professor who so taught; the president remarking that these were only eight or nine out of an aggregate of one hundred and seventy-eight students."

The students appealed to the Board of Bishops; but these supported the president and faculty, and advised the students to keep quiet on the subject. Then the nine students withdrew entirely from the school.

This was rather more than we were prepared to hear respecting the Methodists,—but they seem to have ranged themselves with the rankest gospel nullifiers of this progressive age. Evidently they did not wish the truth to be noised abroad just yet. They would like to have turned out one hundred and sixty-eight men thoroughly equipped to undermine the faith of others in the Divine authority of the Bible as a whole before the facts leaked out. Keep quiet is the injunction of the Bishops.

Talk Happiness.

Joan Somerset in the "Christian Messenger" gives the following sensible advice in rhyme:—

> "Grumble? No: what's the good?
> If it availed, I would:
> But it doesn't a bit.—
> Not it.
>
> Laugh? Yes; Why not?
> 'Tis better than crying, a lot:
> We were made to be glad,
> Not sad.
>
> Sing? Why yes, to be sure:
> We shall better endure
> If the heart's full of song
> All day long.
>
> Love?—Yes! unceasingly,
> Ever increasingly,
> Friend's burdens bearing,
> Their sorrows sharing,
> Their happiness making;
> For pattern taking
> The One above
> Who is love."

Communicated.

Report of Meeting.

In accord with previous notice, Bro. W. L. Skeels, evangelist of the Church of God for the States of Oregon and Washington, began a series of lectures at Central Point, May 5th, 1900, closing Sunday night, May 20th, with six additions, four to be immersed.

From here he went to Eagle Point, a distance of ten miles, and gave five discourses, leaving a good impression, but no practical results. The time employed was not sufficient to eradicate the determined prejudice against the truth established by long secular teaching.

Having received a warm invitation to meet the people at Dewey school house, three miles from Central Point, he gave five discourses. The audiences were large, the attention perfect, and as the people were unbiased by any unscriptural theory, their minds were in a very receptive condition. It was with extreme regret that Bro. Skeels was compelled to close on account of the other appointments previously made. There was never a people [illegible] hear more of the [illegible] They are hungry, starving for it and none to hear their Macedonian cry; verily the harvest is great in Rogue River valley, and the laborers few. It is true that in many places there is determined opposition, but a great good might be accomplished by persistent effort. We think the meetings have been eminently successful, and know that they were exceptionally enjoyable; not only to our own little flock of 21 believers, but to many others, judging the reception accorded at the close of the last discourse here on Sunday night, June 3rd, almost every one of the audience of over 200 persons, pressed forward to grasp Bro. Skeels by the hand, wishing him God speed and an early return.

For ourselves, we have listened at intervals for 40 years (and been an obedient believer for 30 years) to such brilliant and eloquent speakers as Reed, Stephenson, Craton, Wilson, Chase, and many others I could name, but as a teacher I never saw one that excelled W. L. Skeels. His method of arrangement of the ages leads his hearers into an easy understanding of gospel truths, and God's redemptive plan to his people. Shows man his nature, what the promises are, how to obtain them, and when rewards are to be given, and the work to be performed, after the kingdom is set up.

At the business meeting Bro. Daley was re-elected elder, Sister Ellen Burnell, delegate to general conference, with instructions to cast the vote of this body for Bro. Skeels for evangelist the coming year.

Dear brothers and sisters of the household of faith:

How it rejoices me to read your loving words of cheer in our Love Feast. To know that the Lord's work is going on in some places. How I would love to be in a good meeting, such as I see reports of in The Restitution. Lord help us to do more in thy vineyard.

Yours in hope of life when Jesus comes.

Kittie Humphreys.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

While our beloved brother R. C. Railsback was with us we had the pleasure of seeing our youngest sister buried with our Lord in baptism. May the Lord bless her in the greatest of all undertakings, is our prayer.

Yours in hope.

God's Gracious Plan.—No. 1.

A Bible summary in brief, of God's merciful arrangement for the salvation of fallen man, through Christ Jesus as Mediator, after 50 years of private study for Bible truth.

We find the essential foundation truths in the Word of God concerning the creation of man—his fall and the gospel hope through Christ are all plain and literal in their teaching, and a safe standard to build our hopes upon.

Many parable and figurers of speech are given, not as a basis, but to illustrate the truth; consequently we shall take the literal Word as a safe guide and standard to build on, knowing that all Scriptures of doubtful meaning must, and will harmonize with the literal when understood.

MAN AS CREATED.

"In the beginning God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, male and female."

This image must have been man's literal form, as Christ had, who was in the express image of his Father's person. It could not have been a moral image as some claim, for man when created had no moral nor immoral image.

Character was yet to be formed. God told them to "multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over every living thing; and God saw every living thing he had made, and behold it was very good."

Then he recapitulates his work and speaks more definitely of the way man was formed and made to live, saying, "God made man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." It was not the breath of life given to Adam that was made a living soul, but the breath made the dust-made man a living soul, or creature, as the same word is previously rendered for beasts.

There is a mysterious unconscious life principle that pervades all nature, —marvelous as electrical phenomenon in its works and ways, giving life and power to all created things, both animate and inanimate.

Conscious life exists only in material forms, wonderfully designed and fashioned by an All-Wise Creator, for life and generation of thought, that the organization may have will-power and freedom to choose and refuse, without which there could be no voluntary action or personal responsibility.

The personality is the responsible man, to whom all promises are made, and on whom all penalties fall. It is the material man that does the thinking and the willing, the choosing and refusing, the hearing and the talking, the eating and the living, and the sleeping and the waking. It was the dust made man that was to replenish and subdue the earth, to have dominion and control,—and that was put into the garden of Eden to dress and to keep it, and that partook of the forbidden fruit, and brought sin and death into the world, and it was the same responsible dust made man that God caused to live by the breath of life, that was driven from the garden lest he should eat of the tree of life and live forever.

From these God given truths, we see that by obedience and the tree of life, the existence of man might have been prolonged forever, but when Adam disobeyed he was separated from the tree of life, and his days were numbered being 930 years, and he died.

But is there nothing to show in all this record of creation that man does not die? Yes. After God had forbidden Adam to eat of the tree of good and evil, saying in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die (or in dying thou shalt die, margin) a satanic theory was presented, saying thou shalt not surely die but become as gods. One of these sayings is from the Creator of all things, who cannot lie, and the other is from one who was a liar from the beginning. He gave this first lie, and is the father of lies. Which should be believed and taught?

The satanic promise that they should not die was one of the most pleasing and welcome announcements that could fall on the ear of a dying man, and it has been and now is largely taught as a fundamental Bible truth. But to die and not live is the penalty for transgression, not endless deathlessness.

The creature was made subject to vanity (death) though not willingly on his part, but God in his purpose subjected them to death in hope through Christ the promised seed that is to bruise the serpent's head, and who is manifested to destroy the works of the devil.

After Adam had eaten of the forbidden fruit, God explained to him more definitely the penalty for his offence, saying, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake. In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee, and thou shalt eat the herb of the field, by the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return to the ground, for out of it wast thou taken. Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

God has here literally and definitely explained his penalty, for it is not only a death penalty for Adam, but for all his posterity, and notwithstanding the satanic promise, all generations of men thus far have fallen under death's power, and as David says of man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish."

THE BREATH OF THE SPIRIT OF LIFE.

After the flood God said, "All in the dry land in whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life (margin) died, both of man and of beast." Here the spirit and breath were in both man and beast, used as interchangeable terms, as in Job xxvii. 3. "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils. My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit."

Also in Job xxxiv. 14, 15, "If he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust."

Psalm civ. 29, "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."

Solomon says, Eccl. xii. 7, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it."

That was what God gave to Adam to give him life. Solomon also says in Eccl. iii. 19, 20, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; (Ruac, breath,) all go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Thus we see the Word agrees with the record of man's creation, that he lives by breathing, and when his breath ceases his life and thoughts cease.

THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING.

This the wise man says, Eccl. ix. "And their love, and their hatred, and their envy are perished; for there is no knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither (the thinking, responsible personality) thou goest. Man's breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish."

Psa. cxlvi. 4, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. 17.

God said to good Hezekiah, "Thou shalt die and not live. Then he wept sore and said the grave cannot praise thee, nor death celebrate thee."

Would he have wept thus if death was the gate to endless joy? No. But he was glad to have his soul kept out of the pit of corruption 15 years more.

Christ said to the Jews, "Your fathers that did eat manna in the wilderness are dead."

Paul in Heb. xi. said "the ancient worthies all died in faith, not receiving the promises, but see them far-off, being persecuted, they did not accept deliverance that they might obtain the better resurrection."

Peter said, Acts ii. that "David was both dead and buried. David has not ascended into the heavens." He will be satisfied when he awakes in Christ's likeness, Psa. xvii.

Christ said, "No man hath ascended up to heaven," and in John vii. 34; xiii. 35, he said, "Where I go ye cannot come."

When Christ was going to the City of Nain he met a dead man being carried out, the only son of a widow, he touched the bier and said to the young man, Arise, and he that was dead sat up and began to speak. And so it was with Lazarus whom Jesus said plainly was dead. He came to the spot where he lay and said "Lazarus, Come forth, and he that was dead came forth."

The Consecrated Will.

"Laid on thine altar, O my Lord divine,
Accept my gift this day for Jesus' sake;
I have no jewels to adorn thy shrine,
Nor any world-famed sacrifice to make,
But here I bring within my trembling hand
This will of mine—a thing that seemeth small,
And only thou, Lord, can'st understand
How, when I yield this, I yield mine all.

Hidden therein, thy searching eye can see
Struggles of passion, visions of delight,
All that I love, or am, or hope to be—
Deep loves, fond hopes, and longings infinite.
It hath been wet with tears and dimmed with sighs,
Clenched in my grasp till beauty it hath none.
Now from thy footstool, where it vanished lies,
The peace transcendeth, "May thy will be done."

Take it, O Father, ere my courage fail,
And merge it so in thine own will that e'en
If in some desperate hour my cries prevail,
And thou give back my gift, it may have been
So changed, so purified, so fair have grown,
So one with thee, so filled with peace divine,
I may not know or feel it as my own,
But gaining back my will may find it thine."

Australian Letter. No. 1.

To one always accustomed to inland experiences, the starting for the first time upon an ocean voyage is fraught with many conflicting emotions.

As we stand on deck in the evening hours and see the shores of our native land slowly and silently fade into the darkness and the night, thoughts of home and those we leave behind are mingled with the curious attention we give to the busy sounds of land preparation and the unintelligible commands which are in accord with the new world into which we are entering.

But there is no time for sadness and melancholy. The beauty of the night, the excitement of the hour claim full attention.

For many days we have seen the good ship in the harbor, getting in readiness for her long voyage. We have peered with curiosity into the little homes where we are to be ensconced for so long.

Now the time for starting has arrived, the ropes are loosened one by one from the moorings until but one remains as a connecting link between land and sea. The anchor is hauled up. From the bridge above the sonorous voice of the Captain is heard: "All ready at the bow?" "All ready, Sir," comes ringing back from the mate. Then the last order is given, "Haul in the bow-line," and we are afloat on the quiet waters of the bay. With the sound of music and laughter the last farewells come wafted to us on the gentle night air as it fans the lapping water on which we drop out to Sea.

The sounds grow dimmer and the lights grow fainter. The circling wing of the sea gull is no longer heard above our head. He has gone back to richer booty nearer the shore. We peer into the distance and struggle to discern the lights on shore from the stars above. All sounds of land are drowned in the increasing roar of the ocean as we pass the Golden Gate, and feel by the rolling of the waves that we are indeed upon the Peaceful Pacific. Peaceful Pacific! We decide before morning that to poor sailors like ourselves it is a misnomer, for we soon encounter a "Nasty sea," and are obliged to stay inside for several days. When we feel sufficiently seaworthy to come on deck we find a gay and motly crowd enjoying the life aboard.

The days pass in social intercourse; the evenings are enchanting. Games and music, while away the otherwise tedious hours for the majority. The majesty of the ocean is of itself variety enough for the sober few, who steal into quiet corners and watch its changeful face, ever the same and still ever new in its moving shadows of light and darkness, color and motion.

On the Fo'castle a group of Hawaiians are singing native airs. The soft liquid notes rise and fall in regular cadence, a rich product like all others of their billowy green island home.

Eight bells ring out on the air and the watch is changed. Soon a merry group of British tars are seated sailor fashion to spin a yarn. Then follow rollicking sea songs, in which many lusty voices join in the choruses. Then the impromptu concert ends with more serious songs, and the tars "turn in."

In the saloon a concert of the more stately kind is in progress, so that all sorts and conditions of men may be amused, while the engine never tires in her onward march. We are borne on rapidly and steadily day by day until we awaken to the fact that San Francisco chilliness has been left behind and we adjust our clothing to suit a milder climate. Furs and wraps disappear and the sailor hat and shirt waist reign.

Coming on deck one morning we find we have blossomed into summer. The officers and crew have laid aside the nobby blue and appear in uniforms of spotless white. Muslin dresses and gay ribbons adorn the ladies. The deck is a gala scene, for at daybreak we have heard the welcome signal, "Land ahead."

We are nearing the Sandwich Islands. The recent adoption of this Gem of the Pacific by Brother Jonathan has brought to life a new impetus to trade and development. Orientals and Occidentals are joining hands in peopling its shores.

Notwithstanding the plague prevented our vessel from touching dock, ninety passengers were sent ashore by means of lighters.

As soon as the whistle announced our arrival in port, as if by magic we were surrounded by boats rowed by the natives. The Caucasians as usual assigning the place of menials to the less favored complexions of the human race. The Hawiians are no longer even picturesque, having donned the garb of civilization.

The vast harbor was crowded with vessels unable to land or leave with clearance papers owing to the quarantine caused by the bubonic plague. We picked our way carefully, winding in and out among ships from all quarters of the globe.

While we lay at anchor, two thousand Japanese emigrants were removed from quarantine and taken to adjacent islands. These diminutive people, active and vigilant, carrying their worldly possessions in two hampers, one at each end of a pole, thrown in easy balance over the shoulder are interesting objects of study. The tide of emigration is turning Eastward.

Though greatly disappointed that we were not allowed to step foot on shore, still we viewed with much delight the enchanting scene from the deck.

We could sympathize with the dethroned queen in her efforts to regain the possessions of her ancestors. By the aid of imagination and a good marine glass we were able to locate many of the objects and places of interest with which we were familiar through reading.

The smoking remains of Chinatown could be seen in the distance; a thousand houses having been burned the day before. A heroic but effective antidote against the plague.

As we drew very near the dock we caught a glimpse of the famous Cocoanut Row and Palm Avenue; the Queen's Palace and the Government building.

The capacious Punch Bowl, grim and silent, looking down from the background told of the mighty upheavals of bygone ages. While to the right Diamond Head reared its majestic height, a watchful sentinal and implacable barrier against foreign invasion.

We feasted our eyes on the luxuriant verdure of the islands as they rose out of the ocean in the rosy richness of the morning dawn and regretfully watched them sink back into a watery grave glorified by the gorgeous colors of sunset.

The run from Honolulu to Apia is the longest as well as the most monotonous of the voyage. For seven long days not a glimpse of land, not a sail, not even a whale gladdens the sight. We have two thousand miles of old ocean entirely to ourselves. We have left the merry, frolicksome party of passengers behind and we settle down to enjoy the more solid comfort afforded by more room on deck and better service throughout.

The through passengers soon become one family. They have time and inclination to become acquainted with each other. No place is better suited to uninterrupted conversation. There is plenty of time and to spare.

Among the passengers we found many missionaries. Most noted perhaps being Dr. Frederick Ball, the Singing Evangelist, who in connection with Harriet Beecher Stowe, Elizabeth Whittier and others, did such efficient work in the slums of New York. He is now by invitation extending the rescue work in Australia. There were Christian, Seventh Day Advents, Mormons, Church of England and Disciples of Alexander Dowie, all bent on carrying their peculiar messages to the poor islanders. The victims are making a doubtful exchange in abandoning their simple code of morals well suited to their climate and mode of life, for the objectionable practices thrust upon them by some of these would be reformers.

Sunday is not forgotten on board the ship. However slack in other religious observance, Jack stoutly adheres to keeping the Sabbath. Not a brass plate nor door-knob will be polish. Sunday can never be dropped at the ante-meridian.

Nowhere is a religious service more impressive than on mid-ocean. Our own helplessness and dependence upon a high r power is ever present to the thoughtful mind.

In the morning the formal Church of England Service is held in the Saloon. In the afternoon an impromptu song service is held on deck.

The latter service is the more popular, the sailors often hovering around the outskirts and joining in the choruses.

The days are so much alike that we recall the quaint language of Genesis, the evening and the morning were the next day until the seventh was accomplished.

Three events of paramount interest each twenty-four hours, sunrise, sunset and noting the bulletin at midday. On looking around at the watery waste, it was difficult to believe that we had compassed hundreds of miles in the intervals between marking. But the ever increasing heat made us feel that we were entering the tropical seas.

The strange and fantastic appearance of the Heavenly Bodies lured us on deck until late hours. The faint outline of the Southern Cross peered above the horizon as the Great Bear retired to his lair beneath the opposite pole. At the same time the reckless Hunter plunged head downward in his mad pursuit westward. We aroused from our lethargy to find ourselves in a new world.

A faint shining line of light is discernible in the distance, behind and above it a broader dark line. As we draw nearer the white line dissolves into the sandy beach of Swains Island and the dark land melts into a rich profusion of tropical verdure. We come to anchor outside the rock-bound coast. A long narrow boat manned by natives, shoots out from the shore. Boat and crew are alike savage in appearance, both being adorned with sharks teeth and ocean shells. The boat is skillfully kept off the breakers by the wild looking natives while they gracefully toss cocoanuts on deck in exchange for the letters to the Master of the Island.

At daybreak the next morning we awake suddenly at the unusual sensation of the ship at rest. We dress hastily in anticipation of going on shore for the first time in a fortnight.

Zacharias. Chap. 13.

1. In that day every place shall be opened for the House of David and for those who inhabit Hierousalem for removal and to give room.

2. And it will be in that day, saith the Lord of Sabaoth, that I shall utterly destroy the names of the idols from off the land and there will no longer be any remembrance of them; and the false-prophets and unclean spirit I shall take away from the land.

3. And it will be that if a man shall prophesy any more, his father and mother who begot him will also say, Thou shalt not live, because thou hast talked lies in the name of the Lord; and his mother and father who begot him will bind him hand and foot when he prophesieth.

4. And it will be in that day that the prophets will have been put to shame, each one when he prophesieth for his vision, and they will clothe themselves with an undressed hairy skin because they have lied.

5. And one will say, I am not a prophet; for a man who tilleth the earth am I. For a mere man begot me from my youth.

6. And I shall say unto him, What are these blows in the midst of thy hands? And he will say, blows with which I was smitten in the house of my beloved.

7. Awake, O sword, against my shepherds and against my citizen my man of mark saith the All-controlling Lord; smite the shepherds and scatter the sheep, and I shall bring my hand upon the little ones.

8. And it will be in all the land, saith the Lord, that the two portions thereof will have been destroyed and will leave off, but the third will have been left there in.

9. And I shall lead the third through fire and I shall purify them as the silver is purified, and I shall test them as the gold is tested; he will invoke my name and I shall hearken to him, and I shall say, This is my laity, and he will say, The Lord my God.

CHAPTER 14.

1. Lo, days of the Lord are coming, and the spoils will have been divided in thee.

2. And I shall gather together all the nations against Hierousaleem in war, and the city will be taken and the houses plundered and the women ravished, and half of the city will go out in captivity, and the residue of my laity shall not be utterly destroyed from out the city.

3. And the Lord will go out and array himself among these nations even as in his battle array in a day of war.

4. And his feet will stand in that day upon the mount of the olive-orchards over opposite Hierousalem at the east: and the mount of the olive-orchards will have been split, the half of it toward the east and the half toward the west, a very great chasm; and the half of the mountain will lean toward the north and the other half toward the south.

5. And the valley of my mountains will have been made a deep chasm and a chasm of mountains will have been added unto it as far as Jasol, and will have been made a chasm even as it was made a chasm in the days of the earthquake in the days of Uzios, king of Jouda, and the Lord my God will come, and all his saints with him.

6. And it will be in that day there will not be light and cold and frost

7. Will there be for one day, and that day will be notable unto the Lord, and not a day and not a night, and at evening there will be light.

8. And in that day living water will go forth from out Hierousaleem, the half of it unto the first sea and the half of it unto the last sea, and in summer and winter will it be in this wise.

9. And the Lord will be king over all the land; in that day the Lord will be one and his name one.

10. Encompassing all the land and the wilderness from Gabe unto Hrammoon down south of Hierousaleem; and Hrama will remain in place; from the gateway of Benjamin unto the place of the first gateway unto the gateway of the corners and unto the tower of Anaineel, unto the wine-presses of the king.

11. Will they take up their abode in it, and there will be no more anathema, and Hierousaleem will dwell in confidence.

12. And this will be the plague with which the Lord will cut down all those who come armed against Hierousaleem; their flesh will melt away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes will flow out of their sockets, and their tongue will melt in their mouth.

13. And it will be in that day that a great craze from the Lord will be upon them, and they will lay hold each one of the hand of his neighbor, and his hand will be clasped to the hand of his neighbor.

14. And Joudas will array himself in Hierousaleem and he will lead together the strength of all the nations round about, gold and silver and fine under-apparel to a very great amount.

15. And this will be the plague of the horses and the mules and the camels and the asses and of all the domestic-animals in those camps, according to this plague will it be.

16. And it will be that as many as may be left of all the nations that have come against Hierousaleem, will also go up year after year to worship the king, the All-Controlling Lord and to keep the festival of the pitching of tents (or "feast of tabernacles" C. V. and R. V.)

17. And it will be that as many as do not come up of all the tribes of the earth to Hierousaleem to worship the king, the All-controling Lord, these will be added to those.

18. And if a tribe of Aiguptos doth not go up nor come, the plague will be upon these also, the plague with which the Lord will smite all the nations that do not go up to keep the festival of the pitching of tents.

19. This will be the sin of Aiguptos and the sin of all the nations, whosoever shall not go up to keep the festival of the pitching of tents.

20. In that day the bridle-rein of the horse will be sacred to the All-controlling Lord; and the caldrons in the house of the Lord will be as the libation bowls before the face of the altar.

21. And every caldron in Hierousaleem and in Jouda will be sacred to the All-controlling Lord; and all those who sacrifice will both take from out them and cook in them, and there will be no Chananite any more in the house of the All-controlling Lord in that day.

COMMENT.

The variations from the C. V. and R. V. are so many and so utterly at variance that these differences cannot possibly be all ascribed to the translator and it becomes as in so many instances a question of the validity of the Greek and Hebrew text, and as I have given my judgment so many times in favor of the Greek that I do nothing more here than repeat it, and ask the reader to compare and judge for himself. The prophecy of the chapter is evidently restricted in its import to the prophets of Israel and the chosen land, and leads up to the glorious vision of the 14th chapter. Daniel refers to the same great event of the closing of the "way of vision" and the destruction even of "the ointments" with which the prophet was anointed. This is what he says, "ointment will have been destroyed and in it there is no judgment rendered" and still further he says the revelation is "to seal up the way of vision and prophet and to anoint a saint of saints" meaning the Christ of course. The prophets and history both sacred and profane agree as to the desolation of the city and the land, and they all agree in confirming this prophecy in its details down to the coming of the Christ and the fiery purification of "the third" left in the land and the beginning of the restoration here depicted and with which the chapter closes.

In my judgment the "Lo, days are coming," is still a great future and all that is depicted in this chapter a glorious vision still unrealized. In a word if it means anything it means the ultimate restoration and glorification of Israel with the return of the Christ and realization of "the hope" of all Christianity as well as of all Israel. The great physical phenomena here recounted are also referred to in the Scriptures of other prophets notably Jezechiel (Ezekiel) and Heiemeas (Jeremiah). In the closing verses of this book we have a clear picture of the setting up of God's kingdom here on the earth, an event that has not yet been realized, or we must conclude as so many before us that it was merely a dream vision of this Hebrew poet, and without the inerrancy of divine inspiration.

CHAS. GARDNER.

"His Love Can Never Fail."

In listening to a song in which the above caption formed a part of the chorus, I was deeply impressed with the thought. Oh, how true. God's love can never fail. It is fathomless, no chain is long enough to sound the mighty depth of the mighty ocean of God's love! It is as high as heaven, and as broad as the great expanse. His great loving heart sympathizes with the sorrowful, whose tears flow like rain by reason of heartaches, sorrows and afflictions caused by sin, and he has decreed that it shall cease. Listen to the sweet message:

"GOD SHALL WIPE AWAY ALL TEARS."

The message is as broad as his love. The causes for tears are many, and he has solemnly declared that he will "Wipe away ALL tears." Joyful words! Send the glad news over sea and vale, over mountain fastnesses, the broad prairies, and the leafy forest, that the sorrowful may sing for joy, and the heart beat buoyant as the lark, as it cleaves the blue vault of heaven, and warbles forth its notes of melody.

"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted," saith the Lord. How quickly a child doth flee to his mother when in trouble, and how tenderly every true-hearted mother enters into its sorrows, and kisses them all away. Our Father's love is even more tender than that of a mother, "Shall wipe away ALL tears." There are tears of poverty and woe; tears of bereaved affection; there are sympathetic tears with the afflicted: tears, bitter tears, caused by the ravages of intemperance, and many other sinful practices. Jesus wept over Jerusalem; Mary and Martha shed tears over their deceased brother; the sin of David caused him tears of sorrow and repentance; Peter wept over the denial of his Lord; Mary bathed the feet of the Lord with tears. God's love can never fail—"ALL TEARS" shall cease.

Death is a fruitful source of tears, and God in his love has also decreed: "THERE SHALL BE NO MORE DEATH." There shall be no more farewells between the living and the dying; no more rent family home circles, because death itself shall die. God's love has declared it shall be. There will be a grand jollification then, a reunion of all the holy dead who sleep in Jesus. The heavens will then ring with shouts of victory over death and the grave, for the whole thing shall be swallowed up in immortality.

Go where we will, and do what we can to flee from sorrow, it still follows our track like a dismal shadow. There is only one thing that can let a gleam of sunshine into the heart, and that is

"THE BLESSED HOPE."

Possessing this hope, we need not sorrow as those "which have no hope," to let in a "little sunshine." There are hearts which bleed in "secret sorrow," which is not shared by fellow-sympathy, it is all alone between themselves and God, but the blessed hope can pierce the clouds, and let a gleam of sunshine in. The "Blessed Hope" points to a time when victors in the name of Jesus, will never more press to the lips the cup of sorrow. This is all planned in the heart of him whose love can never fail.

At the present time it is said, "Man comes into the world with a cry, and goes out of it with a groan." But beloved if he "sleep in Jesus," he will come into it with a shout of victory, joy and everlasting gladness.

Jesus came to us with a sweet message of God's love. In my mind I can see him upon the banks of the Galilee, or from the ship as he pulled out a little from the shore I can hear his blessed voice ringing out over vale and mountain pleading and pleading with his hearers to "repent and believe the gospel." This was all while John was suffering in prison, but rejoicing in hope.

Beloved, the above is the pure sweet message of God's love: yes, the message of him "whose love can never fail." It does seem to me that if we have love to God in our hearts, for his unchanging love toward us, we would jealously preserve and maintain from corruption and compromise with the enemy, the above message of life which God has sent to us by Jesus.

It also seems to me that the above sweet message should inspire the hearts of believers with a love akin to him who sent us the message. And I am sure it would do so were it really believed in "from the heart." In such a case, there would be no room in your assembly for the enemy who would preach "another gospel." We would love God and his Word to such an extent, that he who would "pervert the gospel," could never be received into fellowship and communion, and called a "brother." It is only possible where compromise and a lack of fidelity to the message of God's love creeps in. Where that attains the love of the message will lessen, and those who would stand true to their trust ignored and shelved.

I am so glad that God's love can never fail. It can be trusted, and if we stand true to him, he will be ever true to us, and his love will inspire our whole being, and cause us in turn to love him, but not only him but all the children of God. God's family must be both harmonious and loving for God the Father of the family "is LOVE."

"When the heavenly thanksgiving day shall come, anxieties, vexations, and tormenting fears will have passed away, hearts will no longer bleed in secret, and the cold shadows no more fall on sensitive affection, nor killing frosts destroy the flowers of human peace. The whole cup of sorrow will have passed from man, never again to be touched by his lips."

How sweet to realize that God's "love can never fail." "God is love," and all his true children who stand faithful to him, and to his sweet message life must be loving and true also, none others are his children. All such brethren will dwell together in unity. If brethren don't dwell together in unity, it is because a wolf is in the fold, which needs to be expelled.

"And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

W. H. WILSON.

Dear Restitution:

This is the second time that I have ever attempted to write to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith, and while I am reading the good letters written by others, my heart-felt thanks returns to him who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift, and I rejoice to know that the light of the glorious gospel has shined into the hearts of others as well as myself, for as our brother Paul said, "What fruit have we in those things whereof we are now ashamed." Rom. vi. 21. And as Moses, another good writer, said he had rather be a door keeper in the house of God, than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season. Why? For the ways of sin are death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Oh, how glad and thankful I am that I have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and have the happy privilege of meeting with those who have had the eyes of their understanding enlightened by the pure Word of the Lord, so that they are able to point out the dangerous errors by which we are surrounded on every hand. May God bless every effort which is put forth in the defence of the truth. I close by asking an interest in your prayers.

Your Sister in hope of eternal life,
LAURA A. SPAID.

Brother Underwood:

Please say to the Household of Faith, that I am now at Santa Ana, California, and the Lord willing, will respond to calls to preach the Word, the Truth, Sound Doctrine, without making any charge, believing that the whole earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and if I am his servant I shall not want. With David I can say, "I was once young but now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." He is ever merciful and lendeth, and his seed is blessed.

Yours in hope of the kingdom.

EARLY LESSONS, suitable for young or old, 80 pages, sold formerly for 10 cts a copy.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 30 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

This book is so well known that it is only necessary to announce that it is for sale, to insure a market for it. We have undertaken to dispose of these books for the Widow of our lamented Brother Jones, and while getting them at this low price, you at the same time will help Sister Jones to much-needed money.

Brother Underwood:

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. Yes, please send your name, request and address, and they will hasten to your home penny or no penny.

T. E. ADAMS.

"Whom Having Not Seen, Ye Love." 1 Peter I. 8.

Savior my feet have never trod with thine
The solitary place,
My eyes have never seen, in human form,
Thy manifested grace;
My hands have never touched thy garment's hem
With faith's unfettered plea,
Nor hast thou tarried, when the day was spent,
And broken bread with me.

But Lord, my rescued feet are steadfast set
Upon the King's Highway,
And though as yet I may not see thy face,
I follow on each day;
My waiting eyes are unto thee, dear Lord,
In whom I live and move,
Whose love, believed in, is the fullest joy
That earth or heaven can prove.

The needs be of thy ways may not be clear
To my imperfect sight;
Love trusts thee wholly, where it cannot trace,
And knows that all is right.
It is enough for me by faith to stay
My bidden life on thee,
And in the secret of thy covenant
To rest implicitly.

God's Gracious Plan.—No 2.

A Bible summary in brief, of God's merciful arrangement for the salvation of fallen man, through Christ Jesus as Mediator, after 50 years of private study for Bible truth.

CHRIST HIMSELF DIED, BUT IS ALIVE FOREVERMORE.

We have quoted a few of the many positive Scriptures that speak of death and its results, and they all agree with the sentence pronounced on Adam, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

The translators of the Bible have favored the undying theory wherever they could, often giving a word two renderings where it should be the same, especially where they apply to men and beasts, as soul and spirit for man and creature and breath for beast.

Death is used largely in a figurative sense, but it always carries its primitive meaning with it of a cessation, or ending of whatever applied to. The Scriptures speak of man as mortal, and death when applied to man's existence, extinction of life.

A literal understanding of the plain teaching of the Bible, is the only true foundation to build on, and that will harmonize the Scriptures.

The responsible man that does the thinking and the willing, and to whom all promises are made and on whom all penalties fall and who was the crowning work of creation, and at whose death the thoughts cease, God made of the dust of the ground, in his own image. And to make this image that is the origin of all thought an irresponsible tenant house, in which an imaginary, immaterial, immortal soul is caged as the responsible man and then attempt to harmonize the Scriptures with such a theory introduces discord from Genesis to Revelation. Its literal teaching must be largely changed to figurative. The kingdom to come on earth we daily pray for, is changed to a present mystical kingdom. The everlasting life promised through Christ is changed to one given at creation. The coming of Christ and the resurrection, are superceded by going to heaven at death. The judgment day is superceded by a judgment at death. The second death is changed to an eternal hell, by which the works of the devil that Christ was manifested to destroy, are made endless.

But we will turn from this mystical theory to the literal again. As all men have fallen and are lost in death by the transgression of the first Adam, so all men will be restored to a savable condition by the second Adam.

"It is appointed unto men once to die but after that the judgment. As in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Christ has abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. "By the offence of one judgment came upon all, so by One righteousness the free gift came upon all men to the justification of life." "Christ tasted death for every man. He gave himself a ransom for all. All shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth." "If I be lifted up I will draw all men to me." "Christ came to save that which was lost." "He is the Lamb of God that taketh away the (Adamic) sin of the world." "The earth shall cast out her dead and no more cover her slain." As many as are lost by the first Adam are restored by the second.

These positive Scriptures with many others establish beyond all contradiction this important Bible truth, that is of vital interest to all men. Thus we can see that it is in God's gracious purpose to unconditionally restore all men from their fallen and helpless condition in the first Adam, to a chance of salvation in Christ.

Not a second but their first chance. We have now found by the literality of the gospel plan of salvation one prominent fundamental foundation stone that is immovable, being founded on Christ, which floods of theories can never undermine.

Then as the foundation is laid for the restoration of all men to have a gospel chance of salvation, are all to have a gospel enlightenment?

As we advance in this investigation the answer to this question will be found to hold in the Scriptures a place of thrilling importance to every human being. Its acceptance gives life eternal, and its rejection brings eternal death.

The Abrahamic promise, that his seed should possess the gate of his enemies, and bless all nations of the earth, is an oath-clad promise, Gen. xxii., and Paul says it is the gospel, and Christ, and those in him are the seed. This is a great central truth, and a key that will unlock the whole plan of redemption, a literal reality.

God says by Isaiah, "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."

Christ's command is to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This is the way God has arranged to fulfill his oath-clad promise to bless all nations. It is through the Seed as a means, that the great object of the promise is to be obtained. "Christ the Seed is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, that they may believe." John i. 7, 9.

Paul says, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared," referring to Christ the Seed. He also says in 1 Tim. ii. 4, "God will have all men to be saved (from the Adamic curse,) and come to a knowledge of the truth."

The above Scriptures are all positive in their teaching, and on the part of God are unconditional and universal including all generations of men.

When the gospel shall have been preached to every creature as Christ commanded, and every man that cometh into the world has been truly enlightened, and all men have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, and Christ has become good tidings of great joy to all people, then the oath-clad promise which is father of all promises will be fulfilled, and all the nations and families of the earth will have had the promised gospel blessing. In God's own due time all future preditions will have as literal fulfillment as past prophecies have had.

There are many explanatory Scriptures on this subject, some of which we will quote farther on where they will come in place and be better understood.

All this enlightenment is that men may have a righteous gospel judgment and be saved. Men are saved only by accepting Christ and his gospel.

There is no other name nor way whereby we must be saved. Christ is the door, the way, the truth and the life. "He that believeth the gospel shall be saved." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Acts xvi. 31. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved." Rom. x. "Whosoever calleth on the name of the Lord shall be saved, but how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed, and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent. So faith comes by hearing and hearing by the Word of God."

In order to confess Christ, and call on the name of the Lord, and believe on him, and be saved by him, all must have a knowledge of Christ as Paul has shown For there can be no faith where there is no knowledge. It is only by the gospel of the coming kingdom through faith in Christ and the resurrection that men can have hope and be saved. The carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Self and self-righteousness must be crucified, and the heart regenerated and filled with the spirit and love of God, and Christ's righteousness imputed in order to be saved.

As salvation comes only by accepting Christ, so final condemnation comes only by rejecting Christ. Men must have the gospel before it can be accepted or rejected. He that believeth not is condemned, and why? because he hath not believed on the only begotten Son of God. John iii. 18. They that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ shall be punished with everlasting destruction. Men must first know Christ and the gospel before they can be rejected.

The soul that will not hear that prophet, (Christ) shall be destroyed from among the people, Acts iii. 23. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against those who hold the truth in unrighteousness." Rom. i. 18. Here the condemnation is for rejecting the truth when they have it. If we sin wilfully after we have had a knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin. Christ has made one sacrifice for sin, if that is rejected the end is death. It is by wilfully rejecting the truth that men are lost. 1 John 5. 18, says "There is a sin unto death," that we need not pray for.

In Matt. xiv. 31, it says, "all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, never hath forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come."

Conference Report.

As per announcement the third quarterly Conference of the Church of God convened at Antioch meeting house, Friday 2 P. M. and continued over the following Sunday. The attendance was not so large as usual; but there was a good audience Saturday evening and on Sunday the attendance was quite large. All the officers were present except Bro. Wince who could not attend on account of sickness. Bro. Wagoner's name was on the programme and he too failed to come, for what reason we did not learn.

The business meeting was called Saturday 2 P. M. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and accepted. On roll call five of the churches responded by delegates. The subject of evangelization being presented it was unanimously carried that the evangelistic work be placed under the control of the executive board. It was also suggested that there be one person appointed, whose duty would be to visit each church organization, to solicit and collect means to defray the expense of an evangelist. After some debating pro and con, it was moved and carried that the executive board be empowered to act as they saw fit in regard to the appointment of such an one, and to draw on the treasurer to defray expense of same. The matter of a general State Conference was presented for consideration and a motion was made that we favor such an organization, but owing to the fact, we think, that the matter had not been previously considered and a more thorough understanding arrived at the motion was lost. The board decided to hire a tent for a few weeks and place Bros. Zilmer and Smith in the field at an early date. Bro. D. T. Halstead was appointed to visit the different churches in the interest of the evangelical work.

Through the instigation of Bro. G. W. Smith the Conference voted to hold meeting one day at the Maxenkuckee Assembly grounds to be held sometime in August, notice of which will appear later.

The ministers present were Bros. D. T. Halstead, and A. H. Zilmer from Rensselaer, F. L. Austin and D. E. VanVactor of Argos, and G. W. Smith, Culver. Others present from abroad were Sisters Ettu Frye of Huntington and Kitty McDonald of Marion. The papers and letters which were all good will be presented to the readers of THE RESTITUTION. The preaching was excellent, and was listened to by an attentive audience and although none made the goodly confession yet we hope the effort was not in vain, but will result in much good in the end. It was a good meeting and we think we can all say it was good to be there. The spirit of kindness, charity and love was present throughout the entire session. May we not hope the Spirit of him who said: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name there will I be in their midst," was present to bless our efforts. Oh, that it might abide with us more and more.

"Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening power:
Kindle thy love in all our hearts,
And that shall kindle ours."

F. L. AUSTIN, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS, Sec.

To the Church of God in Conference assembled at Antioch, Marshall Co., Indiana, Greeting:

As I cannot be present with you personally, may I be represented by a short letter?

This I believe is the 35th Annual Meeting at this place which has been and is yet very dear to me. A feeling of sadness comes unbidden, when I think of the devoted brethren and sisters who loved so dearly to attend those meetings in years gone by; whose faces will not be seen at this meeting. They—many of them have gone into the dark domain of the enemy—death, there to await the coming of the Lord to awaken them from their dreamless sleep, to enter into a life of bliss that will have no end. Some others have removed from that locality and are living far removed from where they were living at the time this house was dedicated. Some are yet living there whose familiar faces have been seen these many years at the Annual meetings. One by one they will pass to rest with the silent ones until called by the Life Giver, if found worthy.

I am glad to know that the meetings here are kept up, showing as it does that the former days, and people who so dearly loved to meet there are not forgotten. It would afford my wife and I great pleasure to meet with you at this time and worship with you, renewing old acquaintances and forming new ones. We desired you should know that we have not forgotten you or the place where you are.

We desire that you remember us in your devotions. Our interest in Christianity has not abated. We have been doing work in the Master's cause when and where we found opportunity, and the great day will determine the results of labor. To God be all the praise. We do hope and pray that your meeting may result in much good. Some day, perhaps in the near future your last annual meeting will be held there. May we live with reference to a more grand and sublime meeting.

If you have any private opinions, will it not be well to let them remain private? Preach, believe and obey the gospel and all will be well.

The Church of God in Waterville meets every Sunday for preaching.

In conclusion we desire to say, Peace be with you. We send Christian greeting to all the brethren and sisters.

RICHARD & JANE CORNALEY.

Eden Home.

PAPER READ AT ANTIOCH CONFERENCE.

"Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." This beautiful sentence suggests to us that God, the great Architect and Creator of all things, started out with a plan or purpose in view; that he not only had one work to perform—that of creation—but that he had many works to accomplish pertaining to the destiny of that which he created. By studying his revealed Word and profane history we learn that many of his plans and promises have been fulfilled, and that there are many yet to be carried out, and that his hand is the guiding one of all theages. And what a blessing and satisfaction to us to know that the heavenly Father is willing to share with us a part of the knowledge of his great plan, and more than that, he has invited us to assist in this great work of restitution—"the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

Now, let us see what God has revealed to us concerning this earth, upon which we live, and what we rightly call home. Home, one of the dearest possessions we have. The Psalmist says, "The heavens, even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men."

The study of the earth in all its many phases is a most interesting, profitable and grand one. We have students innumerable who are deeply interested and fascinated in the study of different forms of nature. The trees, birds, flowers, the minerals and precious stones and stars of heaven have been studied and appreciated throughout the world. Think of the morals and spiritual truths taught us through these objects of nature around us! These things were created for a purpose, not simply to fill space. Scientists, botanists and geologists are busily engaged in searching for undiscovered truths and more light on their respective lines. Many, I say, are interested in the study of the earth in its present physical or temporal form, why are there not more interested in it because of its future state, for the beauty and grandeur of that will far excel this.

The sample of which in the beginning was called Eden, meaning pleasantness. God gave our fore-parents a home in the garden which he planted eastward in Eden. A graphic description of this Garden and surrounding Eden is not given in the history of the creation, but we are left to picture it out in our own minds, by the revealed glimpses we have of it in its restored state. We know, too, it could not be otherwise than perfect, since Jehovah himself pronounced it "very good."

How happy this pair must have been, surrounded with such beauty and free access to all the trees that were good for food and pleasant to look upon, except the tree of "the knowledge of good and evil." Yet they were not completely satisfied, their desire for more knowledge was too great for them to resist the temptation of partaking of the forbidden fruit. This single, sinful act cast a gloom over the entire earth, that has not yet been removed, and will not be removed before Christ, "who was offered for the sins of many, comes the second time without sin unto salvation," for "when Christ, who is our life shall appear then shall we appear with him in glory." Then are we freed from death, our greatest enemy, which was brought into the world by Adam's transgression. The earth was cursed. God said to them, "In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." This is the source of all our tears and pain. Thorns and thistles are now growing where there was once beautiful flowers.

But lest Adam and Eve should partake of the tree of life and live forever, God drove them out of the garden and guarded the tree by a flaming sword. With repentant tears they must have left this blissful spot. Milton lets his imagination run thus:—

"Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wiped them soon;
The world was all before them, where to choose

Their place of rest, and Providence their guide.
They, hand in hand, with wand'ring steps and slow,
Through Eden took their solitary way.

Although thorns and thistles grow, although there is sin and wickedness in the land, sorrow and disappointments, yet these do not reign supreme by any means. They are only scattered about us with the good, in order that we may more fully appreciate the true and best, and also to help us form such characters that will fit us for this righteous kingdom.

Peter in speaking of Christ's coming and the different periods of time says, "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; but the heavens and earth that are now, by the same Word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "Nevertheless, we according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." This promise which Peter referred to is found in Isa. lxv. "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come in mind. But be glad and rejoice in that which I create; for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." What a glorious promise for Jerusalem and God's chosen people, who are now scattered but will be regathered and restored to their old home. Jerusalem of old has been besieged and overturned more times than any other city that ever existed. The new Jerusalem arrayed in all its bridal beauty will be no more molested, but will stand forever. "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." The wilderness he will make like Eden, and "the desert shall blossom as the rose." This happy condition of affairs will be brought about through the righteous rule of Christ and his saints. When this is accomplished, when the last enemy death is destroyed, then will he "deliver up the kingdom to God, even the Father that he may be all in all."

Is it not worth our while to strive for eternal life in this heavenly Eden home? "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." Oh, that we might have more of the happy spirit of the Psalmist, who was ever rejoicing in anticipation of this glad time coming.

"Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, sometime, we'll understand.

Then trust in God through all thy days;
Fear not, for he doth hold thy hand;
Tho' dark thy way, still sing and praise;
Sometime—sometime—we'll understand."

MISS FLORA HARRIS.

A novel way to indicate acceptance of a call to a pastorate was illustrated in the case of a local church, the chairman of whose supply committee received a telegram with the words—Ruth I. 16, "Thy people shall be my people." The reply which went back over the wire was, "All of the people said Amen."

Notice.

I wish to say to the isolated brothers and sisters, in central Illinois, that I have so arranged my affairs that I can devote most of my time to the Master's service, and will try to call on and hold meetings with any who wish my services. I will be pleased to hear from any of like precious faith, whether they wish my services or not. My address is in column of addresses.

C. P. GRAHAM.

Brother Underwood:

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. Yes, please send your name, request and address, and they will hasten to your home penny or no penny.

T. E. ADAMS.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

IF you follow the Lord, and keep his company, he will always bear your expenses; if you run ahead of him, or go alone, he leaves you to bear your own. •

THOSE who think they only have to believe the gospel, you are mistaken; they must also live the gospel—be living epistles of Christ known and read of all men. •

IT is only the indolent and the selfish and the unbelieving to whom life seems a weariness. A man who is making others better and happier never doubts whether life is worth living, or not. •

SINCE our last issue no reliable news has been received from Pekin. The latest dispatches seem to indicate that the foreign representatives are shut up in the British buildings, and are being defended as best they can. This purports to be of date June 26. It is now taken for truth that the German ambassador, Baron Ketteler, was murdered in the streets of Pekin. The foreign troops have occupied Tein Tsin, and succeeded in fighting their way to Admiral Seymour and rescuing him and his forces. He had 62 killed and 312 wounded. All the foreign nations are hurrying troops to China, and relief columns are on the way to Pekin. There is much jealousy as to the nation that shall be leader. All seem resolved that Russia shall not be given a chance to take possession even to put down the Boxers, as it is too well known that once there she will stay. Each profess to be willing for the United States to be leader, but she does not wish to become entangled in the affair only to the extent of protecting her interests. Let us watch all the "signs" as they all point us to the time when he only who can settle these disputes will come and take the reins of government. May that time soon come.

THE American Battleship Oregon, that played such an important part in the Spanish War, and which was lately sent to the Philippines, was on June 23 ordered to proceed to Taku, while on its way struck a rock north of Chefoo, and is badly damaged, it indeed she be not completely wrecked.

ONE of the worst disasters of the century occurred Saturday afternoon in the burning of the piers of the North German Loyd Steamship Co. at Hoboken just across from New York City. The loss includes three of the big ocean liners, and damage to another. The property loss is estimated to be near $15,000,000, but this is nothing compared with the 300 people who were burned or drowned.

Men Who are to be Pitied.

The Safeguard says, "The man who has to walk, in order that the whiskey-seller may ride in a carriage. The man who has to go blear-eyed, red-nosed, in order that the bar-keeper may wear good clothes and sport diamonds. The man who has to take the very blood out of his veins to help keep in motion the machinery that grinds up good corn and makes it into bad whiskey. The man who has to go without butter and live on dry bread and cold liver, in order that the beer-peddler may have porter-house steak and hot coffee. The man who has to take bread out of his mouth to help put a grand piano into the home of the devil's adjutant-general, who supplies him with bitters. The man who has to steal from his own wife and children in order that the family of the political philanthropist who puts parties in power and men in the ditch, may continue to fare sumptuously every day." •

A Mother's Comfort.

Dr. C. S. Robinson writes:—"Two texts of Scripture there are, which, put together, I think are the most wonderful in the Bible. They suggest a child lying in a cradle, and a loving face bent over it and a sweet voice is murmuring above its head. But I marvel with inexpressible surprise and adoration when I find who the singer is, and who is the child. The first verse is found in Isa. lxvi. 13, and reads as follows:—"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." [Read the connection and make sure who the subjects of these comforting caresses are.] The other verse may be found in Zephaniah iii. 17, where it says:—"The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save; he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with singing." Oh, I have thought again and again in my history, of this picture, and I am not too proud to say my eyes have filled with tears of emotion as I have tried to comprehend how the eternal Jehovah seems to sing beside one who loves him, as I remember my mother used to sing restful songs of comfort beside our bed." •

Babes.

Babes in Christ, if you fall into temptation, do not be discouraged when you realize what has happened. The Apostle includes you when he says WE have a great high Priest; and that he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin;" that being so, then, certainly, he includes you when he adds the injunction naturally growing out of the above two facts:—"Let US, therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, (favor) that WE may obtain mercy;" and that's just what you need, if you have fallen into temptation,—or yielded to temptation. Confess at once, and forsake the sin, and then, by virtue of your childhood you can come boldly and obtain mercy for the past, and help in time of need. Not to accept this gracious invitation would seem to heighten the guilt greatly. Certainly circumstances may have had much to do with the first offence, but what is there to mitigate the second? Think of a child that has no confidence in God his Father when he makes such lovely overtures to disobedient children! Does he deserve to have such a Father? Does not the non-acceptance of the gracious offer of mercy prove that he is still ruled by the spirit of disobedience? We would affectionately warn you that if you do not promptly confess and forsake any sinful act or habit when it is discovered, it will be easy to repeat,—the conscience will grow less and less sensitive,—a hardening process will set in through the deceitfulness of sin, and you will lose the great salvation, and your portion be, to be destroyed, and that without remedy. We entreat you to heed the Spirit's injunction in Hebrews vi. 15, 16. •

STRICTLY speaking, there can be no secrets among men, for God will bring every work into judgment. •

WHAT is man,—any man, every man? Dust vanity, less than nothing. Shall I, then, fear dust, be alarmed at vanity, or be terrified at less than nothing? This were to dishonor God and bring discomfort to himself. •

"Be Anxious for Nothing."

Oh, if we could but reach the point where we could with alacrity obey this injunction, what a serene front we would present to the world's troubled sea! But the injunction does not end there. We are first told not to do something,—not to be anxious; and then we are told what we should do,—we, instead of being anxious should in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let our requests be made known to God: this being done, the assurance is given that the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus; but the conditions must be complied with, —this is the basis of the assurance.

From these and numerous other conditions, it may be clearly seen that the religion of Jesus touches the whole life. "In everything" we are to let our requests be made known to God. We are to "pray without ceasing," and "in everything give thanks." Whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do we are to do all to the glory of God."

Clearly, then, no matter how small or how large, how trivial or how important the matters may be, it is our gracious privilege to "carry every thing to God in prayer;" and if we do this our hearts will be kept in peace, and our minds will have rest. And if storms beat upon us there will be calm and sunshine beyond the clouds and gloom.

There is nothing too great for the Lord to do. There is nothing too small for him to notice, and if we rest in him, and wait patiently for him, we shall find him an ever present help in time of trouble. •

"Inheriting the Promise."

"And we desire that every one of you, do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end, that ye be followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises." Heb. vi. 12. Now, the party who seems to have stumbled over these words will please read this passage over carefully a few times, and we think the difficulty,—the illusion, we may say—will vanish. One in search of truth must travel slowly, and be very careful not to take things for granted. "Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good," is an injunction that should be always in mind. Evidently you take it for granted that the promises are those relating to life and glory in the kingdom of God,—but does the context warrant such conclusion? Let us see:—we read, "For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swears by himself,—saying,—Here follows the blessing promised—"Surely, blessing I will bless thee," but how? "And multiplying, I will multiply thee;" and what now, in regard to this promised blessing,—this multiplication of Abraham? Has any further information respecting it been granted? Why, certainly. It reads straight along, as follows,—"And so, after he had patiently endured, waited for the fulfilment of it, he obtained the promise. He was not patiently waiting for God to promise him something. He HAD promised him something. He was waiting for what was promised, and the apostolic word for it, he obtained it; the promise related to a posterity,—a wonderful posterity, including the Seed in whom all the families of the earth shall be blessed; and this, too, under apparently impossible circumstances. Sarah was past age, and barren. A moment's reflection here will show how well, "Father of all them that believe," becomes him. We do not allow for one moment that the full measure of that far-reaching promise was obtained,—but he obtained the son promised, and he was absolutely a son of promise, and from whom was to proceed him through whom all Jehovah's beneficent purposes were to be executed. But why all this? Why not read Hebrews xi. 13 and believe it. It says:—"Those all, Abraham, Isaac Jacob, etc.) died in faith, not having received the promises (relating to eternal life beyond the grave) but having seen them afar off." Following this is the assurance that this great crowd of witnesses in past ages will not be made perfect till we are, and that at the resurrection. Heb. xi. 35-40. •

IMPENDENCY.

"Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." 2 Thes. ii. 3.

How careful that the church and each individual shall have the exact truth. Thinking we are right will not do. It is duty to be right, when Jesus has spoken. The notion that the second coming has always been impending since the Lord's ascension, is a fallacy. It confuses and weakens confidence in his ever coming. It ignores consecutiveness in prophecy and the orderly arrangement of divine providence. It obscures Jesus' personality, exposing it to fanciful substitutions, as the destruction of Jerusalem, death, any great blessing or calamity, and confounds his personal coming with his providential presence by his representatives, as the Holy Spirit, his angels, human agencies, etc.

Paul evidently thought that believing in perpetual impendency disqualified for Christian duty; hence he took great care to guard the Thessalonian Church against it. Yet most of the brightest witnesses after the first three centuries were confused on this point. So in their enthusiasm they expected the Lord's second coming in every century of Papal dominance; although Paul had plainly said that the Lord would not come till he came to destroy the Man of Sin with the brightness of his coming; and Daniel and John had several times over given the duration of that dominance as 1260 years. For instance, John Wickliff (A. D. 1350)—"that with the fourteenth century the world would come to an end."

Luther (A. D. 1517) "At one time fancying it might be less than twenty years; at another time deprecating the extension of the interval to fifty years, and at another maintaining 800 as the furthest limit that entered his imagination, to the consummation—the judgment, the end of time"—Elliott, in Voice of the Church, p. p. 133, 140.

Better—far better—so far as we can place in our conception every item in the prophetic programme where the divine Architect placed it. Misplacing defeats in a measure the object of giving the prophecy. There is much force in their logical sequence. Their order on the prophetic page the same as on the historic page. In both the statement and fact agree; and that makes the truth. "Thy Word is truth." That is, things are as the Word says they are.

THAT MAN OF SIN HAS BEEN REVEALED.

The Thessalonians had recently been converted from heathenism to Christianity. They were but lately worshipers of dumb idols, and had as yet only learned Christian doctrine and duty from the brief teaching of Paul and his helpers. After leaving them Paul had promptly written them a faithful letter of encouragement and instruction, referring chiefly to what he had taught them and how, and to what he had suffered for their sake while with them and afterward, and crowning every thought with glowing reference to the second coming of Christ and our gathering unto him at his coming; and they inferred—Paul did not say so—that the Lord might come at any moment; and they were so much absorbed in that joyful idea that they neglected ordinary and necessary duties. Hence his second letter to them the same year (A. D. 54) and from the same place (Athens) to correct that mistake. And so it happened that we are indebted to that beautiful gush of young convert zeal for one of the sweetest of Paul's letters—the brightest gem in the fourteen—and for one of the neatest and most important prophecies in the Bible, describing, locating, and bounding the Man of Sin.

Three short chapters—the first a most loving salutation; the third a most affectionate Christian good bye; and the second (sandwiched so tenderly between the other two), the caution, the correction, and the careful instruction in regard to the great event in question, and also that most awful and supremely wicked combination of the deepest depravity of human nature and boldest conceptions of Satanic ingenuity—the masculine mate of the harlot of the Apocalypse —the cloud of blood and fire that should spread over the Christian horizon for 1260 years. That terrible struggle between good and evil had to come. Jesus had been victorious alone. But he was only part human. His success might be due to his higher divine nature. Could simple human nature be victorious against all possible machinations of evils, Jesus being away? That would test the skill and resources of the Creator and his providence, whether the product would equal the purpose, and be proof against every means to deceive.

THEY WERE FAITHFUL.

Fifty millions proved their fidelity at the stake. Satan lied when he said, "All that a man hath will he given for his life." They would not give up their faith in Christ to save their lives.

HIS DOMINION HAS BEEN TAKEN AWAY.

The figures 538 plus 1260 equals 1798: Napoleon took away the Pope's estates, made him prisoner and took him to France where died. No pope has ruled kings since. The pope is a subject of the king of Italy. The Pagan and the Papal hindrances in the past, we may now say

THE DAY OF CHRIST IS AT HAND.

Now the Second Coming of the Lord IS IMPENDING.

Already we have been 102 years in "the Time of the End."

THE TWIN ADVENTS.....THE SUFFERING, AND THE GLORY.

How beautifully these are set forth in their relation to each other in those two charming letters of Paul to the Thessalonians, the first written by him, both from Athens and in the same year, and 18 years after his conversion. In those years he had planted the cross in many conspicuous places along the great Roman road between Italy and the East, and in no place had the gospel seed found better soil than at Thessalonica. There the converts "Turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even that Jesus who is delivering us from that wrath that is coming."—Bingloft.

Maxim Predicts Great War.

"We are positively upon the eve of the greatest war the world has ever seen. It will be a war between giants, fought to a finish. It will be replete with horrors; it will wipe out nations, and it will be short, bloody, and decisive." So says Hudson Maxim, the well known dealer in death-dealing machinery, in an illustrated article in the forthcoming July number of the Home Magazine.

The introduction to this article, entitled "The Coming War," says: "What is the meaning of the enormous standing armies of continental Europe? For what reason is England straining every nerve for the increase and improvement of her already gigantic navy? What meaning was there in Lord Salisbury's appeal to the people of England a few days ago to form rifle clubs and to go out into the fields and learn to shoot? Why is Lord Roberts asked to send home 100,000 of his South African army by Oct. 1? Why is Russia working night and day to complete the Transcaspian and Transsiberian railroads?

"An outbreak is at hand. The United States War department has already ordered military representatives to Pekin and Tokio to watch proceedings. General Sakorov, Chief of the Russian General Staff, has started for Manchuria, where six forts will be immediately erected. Russia is seizing the excuse offered by the Boxers against Pekin to rush every available man on to the disputed ground. From the foothold thus obtained it will be difficult to dislodge her, unless steps are taken at once to block her game. Japan seems ready and anxious to do this thing. And from the conflict thus begun may arise the world war so long threatened and so long feared."

To Mecca by Rail.

Vienna, June 27.—Turkey seems to have entered seriously into the question of the construction of a railway from Damascus to Mecca, a route which, owing to the immense pilgrimages, promises to be productive of good revenue and which, if built, will mean the opening of an important trade artery through the center of Asia Minor. It is reported that the government is already negotiating with Krupp for rails.

The Sultan has just announced officially that he will give one-twelfth of his civil income this year for the benefit of the new road, and by imperial irade has ordered an advance of 100,000 Turkish pounds by the Agricultural Bank for purchasing cars and locomotives. One million pounds are expected to be raised by placing a 10 per cent tax on the salaries of all officials and officers.

Such energetic measures are being taken because, as was pointed out at a recent meeting of the Sultan's Ministers, if the Porte does not complete the road after having talked so much, it will appear more ridiculous in the eyes of all Islamites.

The Jewish Terror.

The main fact about the Jews on the continent which emerges from a study of the present situation is that for some reason or other they inspire terror. Just as, on a somewhat smaller scale, Jesuits inspire terror among the extreme Protestants and Freemasons fill the minds of Roman Catholics with an unreasoning dread, so the Jew, or rather the thought of the Jew's wealth and ability, causes terror among the mass of mankind on the continent. That this terror is as absurd and as unreasonable as is the terror caused respectively by Jesuits and Freemasons, we ourselves do not doubt for a moment, but that does not alter the fact that the sense of terror exists. It is hardly too much to say that the majority of people on the continent honestly believe that unless the Jews are in some way or other curbed, controlled, and kept down something dreadful will happen. In Russia the vast Slavonic population and its leaders believe that unless the Jews are impounded in the Polish pale they will swamp the true Russian and utterly ruin and destroy the Russian nationality and the Russian ideal. In Austria it is believed that if the Jews are allowed to go on as they are going on they will get everything into their hands—the land of the peasants, the sources of public information and the press, and the nerves by which trade and commerce are moved. In Germany it is much the same story, and there the Jews are believed, unless stopped in time, to be about to monopolize the universities. In France it is thought that the Jews, if not put down with the strong hand, will rapture the whole administration, as well as "strangle commerce by their octopus grip." No one might go on to enumerate the vague but none the less real terrors which the Jews inspire.—London Spectator.

A Clipping.

"If giving were as systematic as getting, the religious and benevolent needs of the world would be readily met. The few do not give at all, the many their spare change, and the very few a specified amount. When men are putting aside a certain proportion of their incomes for food, clothing, housing, doctor's bills and other so-called necessities, how many ever pause to think of religion as one of the necessities? How many ever give it the dignity of being counted among the essentials of life and happiness? And yet people who have never had a thought of it in their minds, in the time of personal sorrow turn to it, even then without a thought of their distress, if it were not there to minister to them in the crisis. Wise business men who provide for every other emergency that may arise in their lives, who consider their children's schooling and establishment in business and social position, avoid persistently, almost obstinately, the question of religious obligation."

"What is the News?"

No question is more frequently asked than this; and it ought to be asked; for of such importance are earthly affairs, that it is evident from Holy Scripture that not only the human, but the angelic, the diabolic, and the divine are interested in them. Spiritual powers have a constant and potent instrumentality in what is going on in our midst. The venerable Dr. Bogue was accustomed to say on opening a newspaper, "Let us see how God governs the world."

So far as it goes, there is virtue in the development and use of one's power. The only thing that is void of any virtue is sheer inanition. Some persons would rather not have powers than be called upon to use them. They seem to think they cannot do anything very wrong if they never do anything worse than nothing. But one's powers unused for good is an opportunity for another's powers to be used for ill. If you can do, and won't do, doing nothing may be worse than anything you can do.

Long stories, long sermons, long exhortations, and long prayers seldom profit. Life is short, time is short, moments are precious. Learn to condense, abridge, and intensify. We can bear things that are dull if they are not too long.

Bible versus Human Opinion.

The Star of God—the Bible true,
From out its storehouse old and new
Gives out rich food, "The living bread,"
With heavenly dews, by Spirit shed.

Unchanged as God, his Word doth stand,
The Light and Life for every land;
But manish thoughts sown o'er the land,
God proves to be no "Helping Hand."

They have no wine, or oil, nor meat,
Like evil lips, not fit to eat:
Our meat, the will of God to do,
Like Christ our Head—example true.

Then Bibles husks, the fowls let eat,
Eat thou the Bible corn and wheat:
For those the husks, who wander round,
Feast thou with Christ, with him be found.

Be thou arrayed with linen fine,
The pure in heart, and wise shall shine:
Blessed are such, when called unto
The marriage feast, by God so true.

God feeds his flock with finest wheat,
Choice Bible grain, most pure and sweet:
'Tis truth divine, 'tis heavenly light,
The only Star with light so bright.

Prophets and seers of old did eat
God's Word, it was their strength and meat;
Their minds were sown with heavenly seed,
They gave no place for tare or weed.

The Apostles too, with Christ our Head,
The basis and whole fall followers fed
The Word of God; his Spirit touched,
Ripened, and sealed the kingdom fruit.

Paul and Peter (we read) forbore
To countenance all human lore;
They did proclaim, and ever taught
That human dross, God scans at naught.

No pamphlets then, to set aside
The Word of God, through human pride:
None praised, or offered weed or tare,
Where Christians met for praise and prayer

Store well the wheat, store well the corn,
Of Bible truths, cast out each thorn;
Root out all tares, banish each weed,
And sow the mind with Bible seed.

Store thou the mind with Bible wheat,
The food which God prepared to eat;
Then wood, stubble and also hay,
Like summer chaff, will blow away.

Signs of the Times.

Editor of the Daily Cataract Journal:

With your permission, through the columns of your valuable paper, I would like to point out, for the benefit of your readers some of the signs of the times, which theology is failing to do. Truth is never popular, especially the divine truth of God's Word to man. Acts xiii. 41: "Behold ye despisers, and wonder and perish, for I work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." Acts xxiv. 14: "To believe the law and the prophets is to be called a heretic." To study the Bible and advocate its truths one is called crazy, crank, fanatic and what not. They so thought of the Master in his day, and a servant is not greater than the master. This is a true sign that they are truly followers of Christ. Advocate Sunday observance, which is carried to extremes, is called a zeal of God. Sunday is not from the Lord. I believe it was Father Lynch recently in your paper who truthfully stated that Sunday was appointed by man, hence is not from God. Constantine, in 321, set it apart instead of the Mosaic Sabbath. Christ advocated the nine commandments, but ignored the Sunday question. Colossians ii. 17. Mosaic law was a shadow of things to come. Christ nailed these ordinances to the cross. Rom. xiv. 5: "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord." As it is a law made by man it should be so respected and be taken as a much needed day of rest or recreation from labor. The so-called Lord's day has not yet come. Rev. i. 10: "I (John,) was in the spirit on the Lord's day." The millennial reign of Christ on earth will be the Lord's day. Luke xvi. 16: "The law and the prophets were till John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached." Do we hear anything about a kingdom? As it is close to a time for a literal kingdom to be set up in fulfilment of the people's prayer: "Thy kingdom come on earth," it would be well for all to stop, think, read and meditate upon the teachings of the prophets, our Lord and his apostles, to enable us to see what is gradually coming upon mankind "like a thief in the night." Luke xxi. 24: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled. On earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves (dissatisfied masses of people) roaring; men's hearts failing them, and for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming to the earth." Recently Lord Salisbury gave a note of warning to England. Every Briton must be a soldier, as there are turning up so many enemies against the nation. Nations are disturbed and unable to agree; men are perplexed to know how to settle so many grievances which are daily coming up. Verse 31: "When ye see these things come to pass know ye that the kingdom is nigh at hand."

Rev. xvi. 2: "Drying up of the great river Euphrates that the kings of the East might be prepared." simply means the Turkish nation, who hold the land of Palestine. Their power as a nation is gradually going down (drying up); making ready for Christ's kingdom and throne to be established at Jerusalem. The gospel age will soon close, as did the Mosaic. The signs are rapidly multiplying. Acts i. 10: "This same Jesus shall come in like manner." Read Daniel vii. 13-27 and Micah iv. Just before the restoration of Jerusalem, Zech. viii. 10: "There was no hire for man or beast, neither any peace because of the affliction, for I set all men every one against his neighbor." With bicycle, electric cars and automobiles horses are becoming useless; man to obtain labor is meeting with difficulties—unions, examinations, etc. No peace, everything in a disturbed state; man against man in many ways. Matthew xxiv. 6: "Christ pointed out to the apostles wars and rumors of wars to be in their day." Now mark the language. "But the end is not yet. Nation shall rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines, pestilences and earthquakes in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows." What is "rubbish" being collected for? Are there any famines? Do we read anything about the bubonic plague or pestilences? Isa. xxiv. 9: "When the judgments are in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." Isa. ii. 19: "They shall go into the holes of the rocks and into the caves of the earth for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his Majesty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth." Why do they build in the west caves and cyclone cellars? 2 Tim. iii. 1: "This know also in the last days, perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Ver. 13, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Next chapter, 4th verse: "They shall turn their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables." God's truths are neglected. Hab. ii. 5, gives an account of rich man gathering unto them all nations and people, but they will rise suddenly and turn upon them for booties. Emigrants are daily arriving and labor is becoming cheaper, which creates discontent and ill feeling amongst the poorer classes. James v. 1-5: "Go too now ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries shall come upon you. The hire of the laborers has been kept back by fraud." Matt. xxiv. 21: "The great day of tribulation spoken of by our Savior is gradually coming upon us." 1 Thes. iv. 16: "When Christ comes he will raise the dead and the true believers will be changed in the twinkling of an eye." Isa. xxvi. 20: "They will be hid until the indignation is passed." Zech. xiv. 1-4: "Christ will then appear and his feet will stand on the Mount of Olives, which will cleave toward the east and the west, leaving a great valley between; half of the mount will go to the south and half to the north." Ver. 9: "Christ will then be King over all the earth." Hence we read: Rev. xi. 15-17: "Seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying: 'The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.'" We are told to prepare to die. All must die. Why then prepare to die? The Word teaches prepare to live. As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. By man come death, so by man comes the resurrection of the dead. Phil. ii. 12: "Each one must work out their own salvation." We die now on account of Adam's sin. The Word calls it sleep. After the resurrection (Jer. xxxi. 30) every one will die for their own sins.

It will soon require the backbone of Martin Luther to call yourself a true follower of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Can we see anything in this: Rev. xiii. 18: "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man, and his number is 666." There is a good deal said about this man and beast in the Scriptures of truth. Look about you and ponder well over it and see the many points it covers. Jer. xxiii. 1: "Woe unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture." Ver. 28: "The prophet that hath a dream let him tell a dream; and he that hath my Word, let him speak my Word faithfully. What is chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord." Luke xxi. 28: "When these things begin to come to pass look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Ver. 36: "Watch and pray that you may be accounted worthy to escape all these things and stand before the Son of Man." Rev. xxii. 20: "He which testifieth these things saith surely I come quickly." Even so, come, Lord, Jesus. Yours for the love of truth as taught by Christ.—Fred Greiner.

The Gospel.

"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." Rom. i. 16.

It is an undoubted truth that opposite views may be taken of almost any question. Hence it is important that all inquirers after truth should see that they do not allow theories previously adopted to sway their minds, so as to make it impossible for them to abandon such, however palpably shown their errors. Some from the mere fear of being thought changeable, or bringing reproach on themselves for confessing an error, have remained fast in it all their days, thus becoming mere dwarfs in knowledge.

Let us all, then, in seeking for truth conclude that it is no worse to contradict our former selves than to contradict or controvert the theories of others. We are no more infallible than others; and why not be as willing to take shame to ourselves, if it be a shame not to know everything, for our past ignorance or errors, as to attempt to pour it on others for a similar misfortune? The first step toward advancement in knowledge is humility. The proud man is stationary and changes not. He is too wise in his own conceit to think he can be taught beyond his past or present knowledge, and he does not wish to be "given to change," oh, no, that is too mortifying.

There are certain great facts which stand out in the Bible which must and will hold their place in spite of all efforts to remove them.

In the first place: God has made of one blood all nations of men, etc., Acts xvii. 26. This includes the entire race of Adam, or all men.

Second. Jesus Christ did, by the grace of God, taste death for every man, or all. 1 Tim. ii. 5; Heb. ii. 9.

Third. He gave command that his gospel should be preached "to every creature." Mark xvi. 15. Here is no exception of any man. If there were any of the race for whom Christ did not die, then there could be no gospel for them; and to preach it to such would be proclaiming a lie. Christ who is the truth, could not have commanded the proclamation of an untruth. Hence, there is no man nor class of men, but what there is a gospel for them; a gospel that they can believe without believing a lie; else, they could not be condemned for not believing it, and this gospel would bring them salvation by faith. The race is all of one blood, and Christ partook of that; if any are by natural generation the serpent's children, Christ must have also been the same. This cannot be admitted for a moment. Hence, no man can be such a child by natural birth. Again. If Christ partook of the one blood, and tasted death for every man, then all men were in God's plan of mercy and all were given to Christ for God gave him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him. John xvii. 2. All flesh embraces all men, unless an exception is manifestly made, and Christ gave himself a ransom for all. If this proves that all men will ultimately be saved, 1 Tim. ii. 7, so be it.

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20. If all are to be raised from the dead whom the Father hath given to Christ, then no man will be left in death; but the fact that a man is raised from the dead is not proof that he cannot die again, or experience a second death. Such an assumption is contradicted by facts. A number were made alive from the dead both under the Old and New Testaments. The fact is it depends, first, on the will of God in the matter; and second, it depends whether they are raised from the dead because they are worthy of eternal life, as Christ has had power over all flesh given him by the Father. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." v. 22. This being true, we must [illegible] the law or principle by which [illegible] judgment is to be conducted. This is laid down in the commission given by Christ to his apostles, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned," (or condemned.) Mark xvi. 15, 16.

To suppose that a part of the race included in this commission, as every man is, are at the same time debarred the possibility of receiving any benefit from it, either because they never can hear the message, or are the natural seed of the serpent, though man is irreconcilable with the principles of an honest administration of government, or of truth in the offer of mercy which it was impossible ever to have secured. Will Christ as a righteous Judge, ever condemn any man to death for not being or doing that which it never was possible for him to be or do? To my mind, such a supposition is impossible. Until it can be shown that there are some of the descendants of Eve who are not called men, and that Christ did not taste death for every man, I am compelled to teach that the gospel of God's love in Christ is for every man, and is God's power unto salvation to every one that hears it, and that power will draw every one that believes the gospel to Christ, and God's only power, and that is the gospel of the kingdom of God. Mark i. 14, and that it has been or will be proclaimed to every creature in a way and manner which shall enable them to secure life everlasting, unless they knowingly and willfully reject such offer. In 1 John v. 16, I read, "There is a sin unto death. I do not pray for it." I also read in Matt. xii. 31, 32, "A sin not forgiven him neither in this world, neither in the world to come." Also in Luke xii. 10; Heb. vi. 1-6, x. 26.

May our heavenly Father keep us that none of these things may come upon us, and that we may be among the overcomers that we may be permitted to sit with Christ on his throne.

Submitted in love of the truth.

Mission of the Church of God.

The Church of God, as the gospel itself, is neither of men or by men, but an institution of God's own devising, built by the Lord Jesus himself, of which he himself is the chief Corner Stone. It belongs to him by virtue of purchase, and it is therefore proper that the church should be under his direction and power. Its object, at least one of the objects of its existence, is to set forth the great principles heralded by its great Founder. It is truthfully said concerning the Lord, that he, through the gospel, brought life and immortality to light. Repeatedly did he invite the people of Palestine to come unto him that they might have life, and have it more abundantly; and when they stubbornly refused to heed the gracious invitation, he plaintively exclaimed, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." The life, therefore, rather the power to bestow life, is in the Son of God, "and he who hath the Son hath life." It follows then that the mission of Jesus, the Christ, in this world, was to bring within reach of poor death-doomed humanity the precious boon of life. This being the case as regards the mission of the Lord himself, the same must also in a measure be true as to the mission of the church, of which he is the Founder. The Lord's intention to this effect has been indicated in the written Word. In giving directions to the brethren at Philippi as to what conduct to observe as Christians, the Apostle cautioned them to "shine as lights in the world; holding the Word of life." Now, what word could this be but the Word of life in Christ only?

In the first place, the ability to make wise unto salvation resides in the Word. "From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith in Jesus Christ." And further, "With meekness receive the engrafted, which is able to save your souls." So also Paul commended the Ephesian brethren "to God and the Word of his grace, which is able to build you up and give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified by faith in Jesus Christ." Thus has the church received word from the Head as to what to announce to a dying world. If he was so careful as to the message he entrusted the church with, how careful ought she to be as to how she receives and delivers the good news. Let her be careful in the first place that she well understands the message she is to announce. If we have not the Word, we have nothing. "Whether there be prophecies, they shall cease." And when the period for prophecies was ended, they did cease. But the Word, though subjected to various vicissitudes in the course of human history, has remained and is still with us, to enlighten, to instruct, to caution, to encourage, and to help. This is to be held forth as a banner, unfurled to the breeze, to lead God's people on to the possession and full enjoyment of the promised blessings. Let the objector say what he please; let him stigmatize the faithful proclaimer of the Word as a "crank," or a hobbyist, or a man of one idea, "hold" to the Word and hold it forth. Thus briefly outlined we see the mission of the Church of God, and we may be assured that if we faithfully set forth before our fellowmen and fellow-mortals the Word of life, that neither Paul nor ourselves shall at last have run or labored in vain; but shall have been instrumental in turning many to righteousness, and bright stars shall deck our crowns in that eventful day.

Col. i. 13 and 1 John v. 1.

I think the thanks of the readers of The Restitution are due to Bro. Wilson for his able and scholarly exposition of Col. i. 13, also his advice at the close of his article in regard to compromising our position on the kingdom. No, let us each and every one, stand firmly upon the gospel of Truth for the kingdom to be established at Christ's coming, for there can be no other safe position. If there is any one subject above another that can be supported by a multitude of statements, that subject is the kingdom. I am in full accord with Bro. Wilson in his views as set forth, and think they cannot be refuted in any manner. Yet there are some people, earnest and intelligent ones too, who stoutly maintain that we should not depart from King James' translation to establish a doctrinal point; true, they are not of those that are in full accord with the household of faith, yet they are inquiring after truth and are of a class that were they to indorse our views in full and unite with us in fellowship would materially add strength to the Body.

Col. i. 13 and 1 John v. 1, seems to be a stumbling block in the way of those people that prevents them from embracing the Truth. In reasoning with them we must be careful not to array one passage of Scripture against another. To do so would not only be unchristian like, but would destroy confidence in the inspiration of the record that God has given us concerning his Son.

I think we may treat with reason the two passages referred to above in the light of prophecy; to do so not only brings harmony with countless Scriptures on the same subject, but does no violence to the text itself.

To be translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son implies a substantive kingdom; and the obedience manifested by God's children is the earnest of an inheritance that is tangible and real; a manifestation of faith, and faith is based upon a substance yet to be realized.

To Abraham God said, "I have made thee a father of a great nation." Gen. xvii. 5; though as yet he knew he was not a father, but he staggered not through unbelief, and was fully persuaded that what God had promised he was able to perform. That the promise was so sure and immutable, that Paul says, "He calleth those things that be not as though they were." Rom. iv. 17. Again Paul says, "For one in a certain place (Job vii. 17) testified saying, What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the Son of Man that thou visiteth him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownest him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him. Heb. ii. 6-8. If not yet, when?

When the chief Shepherd shall appear, 1 Peter v. 4. When Christ shall come to be glorified in his saints. 2 Thes. i. 10. When he shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 1. When he shall come in the glory of his Father. Matt. xvi. 27. When he comes quickly and brings his reward with him, to reward every man as his works shall be. Rev. xxii. 12, etc.

Thus briefly have we brought a few witnesses in proof of our position. But we have brought the impulsive Peter, the eloquent Paul, the conservative John, and above all "He who speaketh as never man spake." Let us "Hold fast" till he comes; continually working and watching, that we may have life and that more abundantly.

Merritt Elliott.

Notice of Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Church of God, at Bush, Madison County, Mo., will be held on the 4th day of August and continue over two Sundays. The Lord willing Bro. John Foore will be with us, and while we have not a direct promise, yet we have hopes that Bro. C. P. Graham of Waynesville, Ill., will also be with us. This may be our last meeting this side of the resurrection of the just, as the present indications of a great and terrible bloody war over China with all nations involved, stands as a guide-post pointing to the prophecy of Joel iii. 9, 10, and very soon will follow that of Micah iv. 1, 2, 3. Then brethren, let us lay every weight aside and meet together with hearts overflowing with fervent love and try to make this one of the best meetings ever held in southeast Missouri. We also make a special invitation to all the brethren everywhere who can: sacrifice some of your surplus cash in the way of buying your railroad tickets, and come and make our homes your home, that we may feast together on the glorious promises and truths of the Bible. You are our brethren, and your presence will greatly encourage us to press forward and onward to the mark of our high calling.

P. J. Graham.

To the Brethren of Kansas and Missouri.

We pitched the Conference tent in the park here at Morrill, Kan., May 21, and will commence meeting at Severance, Kansas, June 1st. Then to Connor, Kan., June 16th, to Pleasanton, Kan., July 7th, and Prescott, Kansas July 28. These points are all close to the line between the two states. We would like to have as many brethren as can, attend these meetings. The annual meeting will be held in Kansas City about Sep. 1st, but a more definite notice will be given later. Some of the points we want to visit this season are not able to meet the expense of a meeting, therefore we depend upon the brethren at large to contribute to the work to enable us to meet these points. Send all contributions to P. H. Oatman, 2711 Olive St. St. Joseph, Mo. Any letter intended for me should be sent to the above place of meeting.

A. W. Dunn, Sec'y.

"There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God." How sweet the music of this first heavenly chime floating across the waters of death from the towers of the New Jerusalem. Pilgrim, faint under thy long and arduous pilgrimage, hear it! It is rest. Voyager, tossed on the waves of sin and sorrow, driven hither and thither on the world's heaving ocean of vicissitude, hear it! The haven is in sight; the very waves that are breaking on the shore seem to murmur: "So he giveth his beloved rest." It is the long-drawn sigh of existence at last answered. The toil and travail of earth's protracted week is at an end. Man, weary man, has found at last the long-sought-for rest in the bosom of God!—Macduff.

ON TRIAL

Three Months for Twenty Five Cents.

WILL YOU TRY IT?

Greeting to all in peace and love, with faith:

To all who have started in "the way of life" let me say, follow closely in the steps of the blessed Master. Note his self-sacrifice, his enduring love, his ardent zeal, his loyalty to the truth, not neglecting one iota of the Father's will, to accomplish the great purpose for which he was sent. And, too, note his forgiveness, praying even for his persecutors; and his compassion, weeping over Jerusalem. and at last, in one act of transcendant love, he lay down his life for all, enemies as well as friends. If we strive to follow closely in his steps, each day we will grow in strength and wisdom; each day we will grow purer, more loving and more forgiving; till at last we can say, with him: "I have overcome the world." O that we may be able to say these perfect words; or, like the great Apostle, be able to say: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course." Let us walk so as to win the prize. It is worth more than Golconda's purest gems, or Klondike's wealth of gold. This is the riches that will last through time and eternity.

In hope of eternal life,

E. R. BOYER.

To the scattered ones of the household of faith:

With whom I took sweet counsel so often during my last winter's tour. I often think of the many pleasant seasons we enjoyed during my short stay with you, and oh, it fills my heart with joy to look forward to the time when we will, if found faithful, hear the Master say, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Yes, it is prepared for all them that love and serve him, and look for his appearing, having such glorious promise set before us, let us not be weary in well doing, for in due time we shall reap if we faint not. Then let us lay up in store a good foundation against that day; let us have oil in our vessels so we can see the straight and narrow way that leads to life. Let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some, but let us say with David (who was a man after God's own heart), he said, "I was glad when they said, Come. let us go up to the house of God." Yes, brethren and sisters, let us come to the places appointed for worship on the first day of the week, and enjoy each others society and communion in breaking bread and drinking wine in order to show forth his death till he comes. Oh, how good and pleasant it is to see brethren and sisters dwell together in unity. Let us sing his praises and make melody in our hearts to the Lord. I take pleasure in writing to the scattered ones of the little flock. Be of good cheer, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Your Sister in hope of seeing the King in his beauty,

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations: the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Get Wisdom,—To Neva.

Pleasure is fleeting and beauty vain,
And hollow and empty is worldly fame,
The loves and friendships of earth go by,
Its glory fades and its bright things die.

Whatever we seek, be it knowledge or gold,
Though alive we hard in our hands to hold,
Must be laid at the tomb's cold brink adown,
And ourselves be lost to the world's renown.

Then Neva seek in thy youth's fair hours
To crown thy brow with the deathless flowers,
Blossoms of wisdom that upward spring
In the garden of peace where the angels sing.

No ruby brought from the distant mine
Can give such grace to that brow of thine.
Nought else so lovely on earth be found,
Of shell or pearl in the ocean's round.

Wisdom can keep from the paths of sin,
Through the gates of pearl she conducteth therein;
Exalt her now and beyond the years
She shall set thee high in the endless spheres.

Get wisdom, then, 'tis the principal thing,
Most precious strain that my pen may sing;
For life is held in her happy hand,
And a crown and a home in an Eden land.

—S. Roxana Wing.

What is Death?

A long still sleep without a dream is death:
A rest for tired souls all out of breath;
A sweet forgetfulness of all time's woes,
With every cruelty in deep repose;
An end of life's rough journey, short or long;
An end of warfare with a foe too strong;
A home-farewell, as from the outer door
One moves away to come again no more;
A quiet home owned by one's self alone,
To which no grief can come with tear or moan;
A waiting place, till death's dark night is gone,
And new life comes with the Eternal Morn.

The Vine and the Branches.

"I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the Word which I have spoken to you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." John xv. 1-11.

This Parable is intended to show the closeness of the relations that exist between Christ and his disciples and their absolute dependence upon him.

But before noticing this close relationship, we will first notice how they become attached to the Vine, as we understand that this relationship does not belong by inheritance.

In Rom. xi. 24, we find this, "For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree?"

The thought herein conveyed is, that Israel, or God's chosen people, are represented by the tame or good olive tree, and the Gentile world by the wild olive tree, and by their (Israels) fall, the Gentiles come in by grafting. Verses 17 to 21 of same chapter says: "And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in. Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear. For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee."

This relationship is also obtained by another method, viz.,—adoption. In Gal. iv. 1-7, we see by this adoption that we become heirs of God through Christ, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. Read also Rom. viii. 1-17.

How, or by what process do we obtain this relationship to Christ, this grafting, this adoption?

Please turn and read Rom. vi. 3-11; Col. xi. 12. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."

Gal. iii. 27-29, says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." We see then it is by baptism that we become attached to him, related to him by immersion if you please, for nothing but a burial in water can represent the death, burial and resurrection of Christ. Having learned then, how we become related or attached to Christ, we are then prepared to consider the parable of the vine.

In the first verse of our lesson, John xv., Jesus says: "I am the true vine and my Father is the husbandman," and the 5th verse says: "I am the vine, ye (his disciples) are the branches, he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing."

The disciples are not only to be like Christ, they are to identify themselves so thoroughly with him that they may be truly said to abide or live in him. Their connection with him is to be like that of the branch with the vine. They are to be members of his body, Eph. v. 30. All their life is to come from Christ, just as the branch gets its life from the vine.

If you cut a branch off the vine, the sap, which is absolutely necessary to its life, stops flowing into it, it leaves wither and it dies; this parable teaches that the case of a man severed from "The true vine, Christ" is similar; the man has lost connection with the only source of life-giving energy.

There is this difference, however, between the man and the branch; the latter cannot choose but be a branch, but men must link themselves to Christ by their own act before they can begin to abide in him. They must choose to accept from him the sap that will course through all their being and make them live.

The life of every great man or woman, (the life of each of us to a greater or lesser degree) is infused from outside sources. We can none of us evolve a large life from within ourselves. The more we take from outside ourselves the nobler, the fuller will our lives be. It is written that, "none of us liveth to himself, and none dieth to himself," that is, we cannot live or die without influencing other lives; and we need to receive as well as to give influence of the right kind.

Great painters, musicians, mathematicians, chemists, statesmen—all, you will find imbibed their impetus, their ambition, their inspiration very largely from studying the work of others, and still more, in many cases, from personal contact with those others. You will find too, that of these great ones, the greatest were those who were most greatly indebted to others for their inspiration, and most willing to acknowledge their indebtedness.

If you find, on the other hand, a man, who believes himself to be self-made, a man who has not received great incentives and great instruction from others, you will find a man who has very little in him. It is the man who can see all that is great and good in others, and who is inspired and instructed by it, who himself becomes great. And no man who has not the capacity to see what is great in those about him, or in the lives recorded in history, can become great himself.

Of all the great and inspiring lives that have been lived upon earth, there is none that can compare at all—either in the sublimity of its design, or in the wisdom and grace with which its design was worked out—with the life of Christ. He alone of all the human beings that have ever lived could intelligently offer his life as a perfect pattern for all human lives.

Paul—the greatest, perhaps, of all the great ones of earth—did indeed offer himself as a pattern to others; but it was in following Christ, in striving to know Christ better and be more like him, that he desired to be imitated. He made no claim to greatness or wisdom on his own account. Indeed, if Paul was really the greatest of men, it was because more than other man he had imbibed the greatness of Christ.

And this is more or less directly true of all the great lives from which we may imbibe greatness. They have been made great by the influence upon them of the life of Christ, even though the man or woman may not in all cases have been conscious of the fact. We are living in a Christian age—an age when the doctrines that Christ taught have spread themselves over a large part of the world. These doctrines are constantly making themselves felt, and all sorts and conditions of people get from them some inspiration that enlarges their lives. But many of these same people do not recognize the source from which the doctrines sprang; and many have the doctrines so mixed up with the unwisdom of other teachers that they lose much of their true life-giving force.

Many on the other hand, who know that these doctrines are the teaching of Christ are content with believing them, without living them; these cannot draw into themselves the fullness of the life of Christ: that can only come through personal fellowship with Jesus himself, and through striving to do his will and be like him.

It is never to be lost sight of that Christ's life on earth was the life of a man, as well as the life of the Son of God, and as the most perfect of all men—the only really perfect man,—we should derive incentive from his life that will enable us to live a higher and purer life. He came into the world in order that we might have life and have it more abundantly, so he said, and the saying applies not only to the effect of his death in freeing us from sin, but also the power of his example to stimulate and guide our lives: and still more fully to the power of holy living that he is always ready to bestow upon his followers by the gift of the Holy Spirit.

This is the deeper truth of the parable before us, that Christ himself, in the person of the Holy Spirit comes into and abides with every one who gives himself or herself to Christ and trusts in him for salvation from sin. The influence of the Holy Spirit in the believer, both makes the pattern life of Christ real to him as an inspiration to goodness, and also gives the ability to work out that pattern, as Paul, and Peter, and John did and multitudes of saints in all ages.

There are conditions to be fulfilled if we are to abide in Christ; they are absolutely essential conditions. One of them is that we must keep his commandments. Unless we try to do this we cannot understand him, nor be a part of him; we never ourselves from his life giving power. He himself said that the doing of his will was necessary to an understanding of his doctrines, so closely are the two bound together.

By commandments we do not mean all the ten commandments of the Mosaic law; but as mentioned by the Savior to the young man when he inquired to know what good thing he could do to inherit eternal life. Matt. xix. 16-20.

Another condition to abiding in Christ is, that we must bear fruit, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." That implies that a person may be connected with Christ as a branch with a vine and yet may bear no fruit; it also implies that if that condition continues, the branch will be severed from the vine, then all chance of life is gone. The branch wasted its opportunities, the one thing for which it existed—fruit—was not forth coming and the husbandman cut it away.

You will pardon me if I mention some things practiced among us, to a greater or lesser degree, that are calculated to produce this barrenness, this failure to bear fruit. Selfishness, unsociableness, has a chilling effect; some humble in life, and not yet strong in the faith, may feel that they are not receiving the attention they should, from warm, Christian hearts. "Forsaking the assembling of themselves together." Heb. x. 24, 25. Brother B. is to preach today and he has so little vim in his talk, that I can't take any interest in his sermons, he is a good man, I know, but then he don't interest me, so I'll not go: but next Sunday when Brother B. preaches I'll certainly go, he talks so nice. "Where the treasure is there the heart will be also."

Use, or misuse of talent, is another source of fruitfulness, or unfruitfulness as the case may be. The talent may consist in our ability to work as missionaries in the Master's cause, or it may consist of liberality or stinginess, in the use of the means God has put in our hands to help his cause financially; for the cause of Christ cannot prosper without financial aid any more than any worldly cause. The one thing for which it existed—fruit—was not forthcoming and the husbandman cut it away.

This is a very serious thought. We may be growing in Christ, but only on trial as it were; if we have "nothing but leaves," to show for the energy which the sap from the vine has given us, then we are taken away from the vine. God looks for fruitfulness, for the right use of the means he has put in our hands, and nothing short of this can keep us in connection with Christ—the vine, and severed from the vine the branches cannot live.

There are nine "abides" in our Scripture passage; let us study them in the order of the thought.

To "abide in Christ," is, it seems, to "abide in his love." What is that? It is to live as the child lives, safe and serene, encircled by the love of home. It is to live as the wife lives, surrounded by the loving strength of her husband. It is not to worry, never to be lonely, to have no fear in danger, no discouragement in failure, no shrinking before obstacles. And this abode is possible for every one; even the lonely, homeless wanderer. It must be,—we learn—a continual abiding. Our homes are valued the more, when we must be a long time absent from them; but this abode we must carry with us or it is not ours at all. No one can "abide in Christ" by fits and starts; for if we abide in him, he abides in us. His abiding is the test of our abiding. If we find him in our lives, we may be sure that we have entered into his life; and his abiding is also the power of our abiding. It is only by his grasp on us, that our grasp on him can keep from slipping. It is only by his continual indwelling, that our continual dwelling in him is assured.

His abiding in us, means also the abiding in us of his words. We are his friends if we do the things he commands us, and we shall not do them unless we know and remember them. I do not see how any but a Bible student can expect to "abide in Christ." If we "abide in Christ," we may ask what we will, and it will be done for us; let us apply this test and see how many of us are abiding in him.

"Abiding in Christ" will enable us to bear fruit. A life empty of Christ can no more have good results, than a tree can be fruitful without sap from its roots, or a body active without blood coursing its veins. If your life is aimless, profitless, discontented, barren; you may have brains and station and determination, and a thousand other advantages, but you lack Christ, and in that lack you miss everything. And the end of such a life is to be cast off, withered, burned up as "Tares" in the fire. It is dead and goes the way of all dead things.

Christ is the life, and whosoever does not abide in the life abides in death, there is no middle ground.

We conclude this with our text, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman."

"I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing."

May God add his grace, that we may abide and be fruitful branches.

Self-Denial.

One of the first requirements made by our Lord of his disciples is self-denial. Is this an unreasonable requirement? Selfishness is a term used to express that supreme self-love which leads one to seek his own interests, his own pleasure, his own honor regardless of others. Within certain limits self-love is right and good. When we are commanded to love our neighbor as ourselves, self-love is made the standard of an exalted character. Each one possesses certain noble powers which are worthy of respect and careful cultivation. Conscience and reason are not to be despised or crucified, but respected and cultivated.

There are other principles which are lower and less noble, such as passions and appetites. Love of money, love of pleasure and honor act blindly, tend to excess, and lead to destruction. These must be checked, curbed, crucified. Selfishness is the principle which clamors for the unrestrained indulgence of the lower passions of human nature, and self-denial means the restraint and mortification of these forces. Selfishness is the fountain of all sin and wickedness.

There can be no excellency without self-denial. Physical health cannot be secured without self-denial. One who will indulge his appetite for delicate food without restraint must suffer. Years ago a man entered a hospital in a Western city, saying that he was there not for treatment, but for diet. By self-indulgence he had wrecked his physical constitution, and not being able to deny himself at home he wished to place himself under the regime of that institution for protection against his own appetite. He was assigned to a ward in the hospital, ate what was prescribed, and abstained from what was prohibited. What a sad confession he made! Had he possessed self-control he might have saved himself months of agony, besides great humiliation and disgrace. Some men say, with an air of pride and superiority, that they have never had to deny themselves that luxury of the table. They can eat and drink what they like, and as much as they like. But the end is not yet. Such boasters generally have their turn of physical agony in due time. The men and women who are hale and strong at the age of eighty have learned the lesson of self-denial long before that time. This the price which the law demands for the best physical condition, and the law will not be cheated.

Intellectual development and achievement require self-denial. The heights of learning cannot be scaled by ease-loving souls. We hear much about genius, but it will usually be found that genius is the fruit of hard work and self-denial rather than an inheritance from nature. Magnificent views may be had from the summit of Mount Washington. The time was when one who would enjoy those scenes must climb the mountain, but recently a railroad has been built up the rugged steeps, and one may ride to the summit in comfort. But no railroad has been built to the summit of the mount of science. Those who will scale those heights must climb just as their ancestors before them have done. It would be a sad thing for the race if the glories of knowledge were attainable without self-denial. Professor Parkman has written a charming history of the American Indians. To acquire the ability to produce that work he lived among the Indians for many months, sharing their lodgings and food, joining in their hunting expeditions, studying their traditions and habits by personal observation and contact. Through hardship and danger he learned his lesson and wrote those pages which will be read with delight for ages to come.

Not many years ago a man of remarkable eloquence sat in the Senate chamber of the United States. Men who listened to his polished sentences said he was born an orator. They did not know how much hard work, painstaking, and self denial the attainment of his wonderful powers involved. In early life he formed a habit of reading an hour or two each day from some one of the best English authors. By reading Milton he acquired that rythmical and melodious flow of language which his hearers supposed was a natural gift. By committing to memory many passages from Macaulay's most brilliant essays he acquired a power of fascinating narration, which astonished listening thousands. He studied Byron, the book of Job, and Shakespeare's plays with untiring assiduity. He studied elocution, rhetoric; and everything pertaining to the art of public speaking with long patience and perseverance. He took as much pains with each one of his public addresses as a great musician takes with a masterpiece of music before he will venture to execute it in public. He was a great orator, but few knew through what self-denial he rose to that height of excellency in public speech.

The attainment of every manly quality is attended by self-denial. Those who read George Kennan's stories of his adventures in Siberia may imagine that nature endowed him with marvelous courage. It is not so, however. He has recently published a confession that when he was a boy he was often made ashamed by his timidity. At the age of seventeen he had become perfectly morbid on account of fear, and resolved to overcome it at all hazards. He made up his mind to go wherever danger presented itself in order to conquer his fear. He went into the dangerous streets and alleys of Cincinnati after midnight, saying to his cowardice, "Get thee behind me." By such rigid discipline he gradually gained self-respect and confidence, and at last lost all feeling of fear in the gravest of perils.

The law of self-denial runs through all business life and social life. The marriage relation involves self-denial. The husband must give up many of his personal preferences to please his wife, and she must deny herself likewise. One who cannot do this cheerfully and gladly is not fit for the marriage relation. Intense selfishness is incompatible with any satisfactory adjustment of social relations.

If self-denial is the law of physical health, intellectual development, the attainment of all manly qualities, business success, and social happiness, why should it be thought strange that Jesus should lay it down as a law of his kingdom? This precept of our Lord has been much abused. Many look upon it as an arbitrary condition without any foundation in reason or the nature of things. Some have supposed that Jesus intended to teach that the more we contradict and cross ourselves the better it will be for us. They have denied themselves all social enjoyments and all worldly good, and tortured their bodies by fastings and vigils and racks. This is all wrong.

Jesus teaches that the lower tendencies in man are so strong that they usually master and ruin the soul, and that these must be denied and crucified for the sake of the highest good. No amount of self-indulgence or worldly gain, procured at the expense of our intellectual and spiritual life, can ever make us happy; but no man who denies himself the lower pleasure for the sake of others and for the sake of righteousness can fail to be happy.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 11, 1900.

HOPE in God in the greatest extremity, and you will see by and by that you had great reason to do it.

THE programme is,—a short race, a rough pilgrimage, a dangerous voyage, a fierce combat, a hard day's work, and then a glorious prize, a happy end, a complete victory. Fear not, the scenes will soon be changed.

FOR a few weeks past we have printed at the head of this column, an explanation of our mail list markings, that all could be fully informed of their account. We trust each one has taken the pains to see that the label on his paper is as it should be. If you have done so quite a number have discovered that their time has run out. Our work is just now suffering for lack of the money you should send us. Brethren and sisters, we can make it no plainer by repetition, but for fear some may not grasp the idea fully we will repeat that our work is suffering for want of what you owe us. This means every one who has learned by examination of the label that his time is out. Please consider the situation. Were it only one, we would not say a word, but when it runs into tens, twenties, fifties, and even into hundreds, you can surely understand our position. Friends, all, suffer us to ask you, to appeal to you, to do your duty. There is yet a little work for the Church of Christ to do while we wait for his coming. The signs portend the time will be short. We believe the Lord's people still need this paper in these closing days of this dispensation. Will you do what you will ask God to approve in this matter? We trust you will, and that so quickly and promptly, that we will be able to stop our calls on delinquents because we will then have none on our list. Be prompt, be careful, be faithful.

RUSKIN says:—"If on any occasion of general intercourse, we turn to our next neighbor, and put to him some searching or testing question, we shall, in nine cases out of ten, discover him to be only a Christian in his own way, and as far as he thinks proper, and that he doubts of many things which we ourselves do not believe strongly enough to hear doubted without danger. What is in reality cowardice and faithlessness, we call charity; and consider it the part of benevolence sometimes to forgive men's evil practices for the sake of their accurate faith, and sometimes to forgive their confessed heresy for the sake of their admirable practice. And under this shelter of charity, humility and faint-heartedness, the world, unquestioned by others, or by itself mingles with and overwhelms the small body of Christians, legislates for them, moralizes for them, reasons for them; and though itself greatly influenced by the association, and held much in check by its pretence to Christianity, yet undermines, in nearly the same degree, the sincerity and practical power of Christianity itself."

Workers.

Brother, sister, the Lord is constantly calling for workers in his vineyard. In many an out-of-the-way place you may make yourself useful. He will not be unmindful of you if you labor faithfully, although unnoticed by others. In that great day, when "the first shall be last, and the last first," and when men who have held themselves high and stood at the head shall go to the foot, we anticipate that many who have shrunk from the recognition of their brethren in their works of faith and labors of love, will be brought forth into the light of heaven, and many never heard of in this age, will be heard and known in the age to come. Yes; there will surely be a thorough revision of earthly estimates in the near future; and when you are assured in Heb. vi. 10 that God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love which may be shown toward his name, it should inspire confidence and ambition to always abound "in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." 1 Cor. xv. 58. We trust you will all remember that the working time will soon have passed; and that THE REWARD IS FOR WORK.

THE War in South Africa is almost at a standstill, though the British seem to be quietly maneuvering to surround the Boers and force their surrender. The Boers got tired of feeding the large number of prisoners they held, and have released many of them.

THE tombs about Alexandria contain the remains of once proud princes, as well as the dust of plebians. This has been taken out and sold as a fertilizer, and is known in the trade as "Egyptian guano." Four thousand years ago no pains or cost was spared to honor this dust now so dishonored! What a rebuke to pride and self-esteem!

SINCE our last issue every day has but added to the conflicting reports from China. One day it is said that all the foreigners in Pekin have been killed and the property destroyed, the next that all are safe at the British buildings with plenty of provisions and ammunition. These reports all come through Chinese channels, and cannot be relied upon. It is said that Prince Tuan has usurped the crown and forced the Emperor and the Empress Dowager to take poison. The Emperor died, but the Empress was only made insane. Should this be true, the only hope for the lives of the foreigners in Pekin is for an army to go to their rescue promptly. Japan was ready some days ago to undertake the task, and had consent been given would have been near the city by now, but Russian jealousy would not permit this until the whole world was laying the blame for the loss of life on the Czar. Now when it may be too late tardy permission is given, and Japanese troops are being sent to China as fast as possible. Several regiments of United States and British troops are on the way also, and sharp action may be looked for.

Time is on the Wing.

We are all of us nearer our salvation than when we believed, if, indeed, we have been keeping the garments of righteousness put on with the saving name of Jesus, unspotted. Time is short for all,—it is surely very short for some of us, and therefore it is very precious. There is never but one moment at a time; each one passes never to return, and another comes, and hurries us along toward the cold resting place, unless the coming of the Lord supervene. These facts ought to make us heed the injunction to work while the day lasts,—redeem the time—make good use of it. The grand realities of the future for sinners saved by grace, cannot be too well prepared for. The preparation must constantly go on, or we will not be meet for the Master's use. It is a startling announcement the Apostle makes in Eph. v. 25-27, that "Christ loved the Church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Could we keep this in mind we would realize that we have not too much time to prepare for the solemn ordeal,—no time to fritter away.

Good Character.

The first step toward the formation of character is to have a clear idea of what constitutes a good character. Happily we have two things to guide us,—the example of Jesus, and the commandments he has given us. Secondly, the foundation and framework must be attended to, especially if we want to develop a Godly character. Firm and fixed principles are most essential. And those about to commence life on their own account would do well to study the life of young Daniel, the Hebrew captive in Babylon. Slave as he was, he was given the highest positions in that vast, world-wide kingdom. In the nature of things this would excite the jealousy of other courtiers. And before long they formed a conspiracy against him. Officially they could find no fault with him, so they took action against him on account of his religion. But even when he knew the writing was signed for his death, he kept up the habit of praying three times a day, just as before, with the result that the lions didn't hurt him. Although such signal interpositions do not now take place, ample provision is made for the protection, care and support of God's children in trying circumstances. Their Father has pledged that his favor shall be sufficient in all emergencies. The throne of favor is ever accessible, and the one Mediator ever liveth to make intercession for them, —and they are graciously invited to come boldly and obtain mercy for sins inadvertantly or ignorantly, or through violent temptations, committed and assistance for every time of need. Let this encourage the Lambs of the flock to aim high, keep the eye of faith fixed on the mark of the prize, —watch and pray, lest they enter into —yield—to temptations from without or within,—let the Word of Christ dwell in them richly, and so be ready for any test of faith.

Self-Examination.

It is understood in the business world that merchants and others who are afraid to examine their books are in embarrassed circumstances; and we think the rule applies also to those who dread to obey the injunction to "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."

The reason why there is so little self-condemnation, is because there is so little self-examination. For want of it many are like travelers skilled in other countries, but ignorant of their own. It is remarkable to find such words of wisdom on this subject, as the following, from Xenophon, away back in the fourth century before Christ:—"It was the manner of discreet house-keepers to place their weapons of war, utensils for the kitchen, instruments of husbandry, and furniture for religious services, each in several and proper repositories. So, every that every man that would make an exact inquiry into, and take a just account of himself, should first make a particular search into the several mischiefs that proceed from each passion within him, whether it be envy, or jealousy, or covetousness, or cowardice, or any other vicious inclinations, and then distribute and range them all (as it were) into distinct apartments. This done, make thy reviews upon them with the most accurate inspection, so that nothing may divert thee from the severest scrutiny." There is no doubt but thousands of professed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ might profit by the instructions of this heathen philosopher who without a ray of light from the revealed will of God, had such noble conceptions of moral truth and worth, and, evidently, was feeling after God. But of course, if the example and precepts of Jesus, and the exceeding riches of God's favor to be dispensed in the ages to come, fail to inspire loving obedience among his professed followers, it is useless to expect it from any other source. We would affectionately plead with all who may have been afraid to examine themselves, to be at least faithful to themselves, and in this way they might discover how unfaithful they have been with God. Brethren and sisters, scattered abroad, are any of you afraid to post your books? If so, the message from the Spirit means you, when he says, "Examine yourselves." You need to do this! It is said for your benefit. You neglect it at your peril. Attend to it at once. You may avert spiritual bankruptcy by heeding the injunction.

Everlasting Life.

"Everlasting life is a life without any death in it, and eternal death is a death without any life in it; one is the reward of the righteous, the other that of the wicked. Life as it stands alone, unqualified by the adjectives eternal, everlasting, is highly cherished, though it is freighted with sorrow, laden with affliction, burdened with care, yet we do everything to prolong it. When we speak of matters relating to taste or fancy we find that that which is desired by one is discarded by another; and this is so in important as well as trivial matters. For instance, one man will try to gain Bible knowledge, forsake sin, and try to live a Christian; another man equally intelligent pays no attention to the Bible and religion, and by a certain course of education arrives at a point where he discards the whole.

But upon the theme of life we are united; all consider it of pre-eminent importance. Short as it is we all love it; saint and sinner do all they can to prolong it. If they are sick, money is freely expended, sacrifices are made to put off the grim monster, and, like Hezekiah of old, all are desirous of adding numbers to their years. The miser must have life to hoard up his wealth, the avaricious to get gain, the saint to praise God, "for the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

Life is a "span," a "vapor," a "tale that is told." The young go forth in the morning of life; they step upon the threshold and all is fair. Fairy scenes invite them on to banquets of pleasure, but as they advance the scene narrows and death confronts them.

All this is true of temporal existence. Let us now pass to eternal existence. Eternal life is a subject of promise. 1 John ii. 25. It is one branch of the Christian's hope. Titus i. 2. This life is hid with Christ in God. Col. iii. 3. The righteous will receive it when Christ who is our life shall appear. Col. iii. 4. The wicked have not this promise; they will never receive this life. John says, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. 1 John v. 15. What is true of one class of the wicked is true of all.

Eternal life will vastly out-weigh the present in importance. It will be endless, boundless, shoreless—free from sorrow, pain and death. Its possessors will enjoy eternal happiness, and unite in celebrating the praises of God for evermore. Soon the glorious morn will dawn when life eternal will be possessed by the worthy. Yes; that day will soon come in all its splendor and loveliness. Soon, if faithful, we will unite our voices in praises with the angel hosts who will accompany the Savior to this earth, and the sweet music will roll over the bright landscape and echo back from the golden-crowned hill-tops in the land of promise. O let us wait, watch and pray for that glorious day."

Are You a Grumbler?

If you want to know whether you are a grumbler, or no, we furnish you with the following pick-up: Just try one day, one week, or one month, to get along without complaining, fault-finding, grumbling. Begin this week at home, then carry it into the church, and then into business life.

It is not necessary to wait to be told that you are a grumbler and people may not want to tell you. But in this simple way you can find out in a month whether your wife or your brethren, or business men have any right to set you down as a grumbler.

In the place of finding fault with others, let us set them a good example, and sweetly and kindly try to get them into a better way of living. A chronic grumbler is a very unhesirable companion, a troublesome church member, and an annoying business man;" the author of the above paragraphs we do not know, but he speaks as one well qualified by experience, to know.

Selections.

Mount Zion.

Comparisons or similes are sometimes used, not only to place a subject in a clearer light—which may be done by commonplace illustrations, but also to amplify and ennoble it. In this case sublime and splendid imagery must be summoned to serve. Perhaps one of the finest examples of this kind of lofty comparison is to be found in the illustration of the privileges of believers, drawn from the immutable strength and danger-defying situation of Mount Zion. It occurs in one of the songs of degrees. It was most probable that these "songs of ascendings," or "goings up," were sung in chorus by the Hebrew caravans to cheer their yearly journeys to the city of the Great King. May we not well suppose that the larger pilgrim band burst into the 121st Psalm, the second of these songs, as they first caught sight of the heights of Jerusalem, singing:

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains:
From whence shall my help come?"

Then it would seem that, halting near the gates to form the procession to the sanctuary, they pealed forth the hymn,

"I was glad when they said unto me,
Let us go to the house of Jehovah.
Our feet shall stand
Within thy gates, O Jerusalem!"

And at length arrived, as it would appear, within the Temple area and looking forth on the sacred, never-to-be-forgotten scene, full of holy joy, they celebrated their mercies and privileges in the following words:

"They that trust in Jehovah are as Mount Zion,
Which shall not be moved; it abideth forever.
The mountains are round about Jerusalem;
And Jehovah is round about his people,
Henceforth, even for evermore."

Many who repeat the soul-stirring Hebrew verses form but a faint conception of their full force. But to those who are familiar with the natural features of the districts, they possess peculiar power and beauty. Mount Zion sometime stands for the one hill on the southwestern quarter of Jerusalem, now partly within and partly without the walls, which in ancient times, however, entirely encircled its summit; and sometimes for the whole site of the city, consisting of the seven hills on which it was situated. In this latter sense Mount Zion, as the largest, most ancently inhabited, and most important part of Jerusalem, stands by a figure of speech, for the whole of the triple-walled metropolis of Palestine. Whether we confine it to the single mountain in question, or regard it as spoken of all the seven hills enclosed by the three walls of the ancient city, Mount Zion would convey to the mind of an Israelite a very grand representation.

In a glance at the spot given us in the days of David, we learn that it was regarded from time immemorial as a place of such strength, owing to its steep, precipitous, rocky sides, as to be held impregnable—the Gibraltar of Palestine fortresses. Josephus gives a detailed account of the magnificent natural position of the walls, towers and fortifications of the city of Herod at this point. His descriptions which it has been so much the fashion in modern times to decry as enthusiastic and exaggerated, have throughout the work of the Palestine Exploration Fund been for the most part minutely confirmed. This Jewish writer, who was engaged in a leading capacity in the siege of Jerusalem, under Titus, tells us that the first of the three enclosure walls ran round the summit of Mount Zion, that it was defended by sixty towers; and speaking of the three named Hippicus, Phasaelus, and Mariamne, he describes them as the wonder of all beholders on account of their great height, massive structure, and commanding position. Titus who destroyed all else, left these as trophies of his splendid victory, to show the exceeding vastness and strength of the fortifications which had been reduced by the might of Rome. Josephus speaks of them as "for largeness, beauty and strength, beyond all that were in the habitable earth."

Well might David, rejoicing in the security of God's people allude in enthusiastic language to these remarkable features as fitting symbols of the Divine protection, and to the awe with which they struck the minds of those monarchs who came to besiege the city when they first beheld them.

"Beautiful for elevation, the joy of the whole earth,
Is Mount Zion on the sides of the north;
The city of the Great King.
For lo, the kings were assembled,
They marched on together,
They beheld, and so they marvelled,
They were troubled, they hasted away;
Trembling took hold upon them there,
Pain, as of a woman in travail.

Walk about Zion, and go round about her,
Count her towers:
Mark ye well her bulwarks,
For this God is our God, forever and ever,
He will himself be our guide until death."

Not less impressive is the comparison used to set forth their eternal security as safeguarded by Jehovah himself—

"The mountains are round about Jerusalem,
And Jehovah is round about his people,
Henceforth, even for evermore."

Little Tacks and Viper Sins.

We have heard of a battle against cannibals gained by the use of tacks. They had taken possession of a whaling vessel and bound the man who was left in care of it. The crew on returning saw the situation, and scattered upon the deck of the vessel the tacks, which penetrated the bare feet of the savages and sent them howling into the sea. They were ready to meet lance and sword, but they could not overcome the tacks on the floor. We brace ourselves up against great calamities. The little tacks of life, scattered along our way, piercing our feet and giving us pain, are hard to bear. It is easier to dispose of the great questions which vex the world than it is to meet and successfully overcome the little worries which present themselves day by day. Many a brave man who has outlived storm after storm of shot and shell died at last from the ravages of things bought of his own butler, while others came home to marry death at the altars of dissipation. Hundreds of men who have borne the great trials of life with a spirit of sweetness and resignation that made their lives appear to others great Gibraltars of grace, have in the retirement of home got mad in a minute simply because the milk was sour or there was too much flour in the gravy. Multitudes of Christian women, who have passed through the deep waters of affliction with a spirit of unbroken peace and a trust in God that grew stronger as the sky became blacker and blacker, have gone down so deep into the cave of gloom that it seemed as though the very sun itself had become a great black iceberg, just because the hired girl couldn't fry potatoes to suit them, or 'that boy' wouldn't ever wipe off his muddy boots when he came into the parlor. And people who had made a solemn covenant with themselves and God that they would praise the Lord at all times though the heavens should fall, have got clear out of patience because somebody happened to talk too long or pray too loud in the prayer meeting. No, it is not the great dragon sins that come out against us and slay us, as we go marching happily on our way toward God, but the little, insignificant and contemptible viper sins that steal upon us while we sleep, and poison us with their sting. Mosquitoes drink more blood than lions.

Be Careful.

We had a class leader, a good man, ardent for the truth. Not a sheep could poke its nose through the bar but the good man would bark and drive it one way or the other. He spent much of his time on the still hunt for something wrong. He generally found what he was after. A sister came before the official board to be recommended to full membership. This brother objected. She was highly esteemed among us. We wanted to know what she had done. "On Sabbath I saw this sister kill a chicken and dig potatoes. I cannot recommend any one who does such things on the Sabbath." The case was laid over: we inquired into it. A neighbor, sick, poor, had nothing for dinner. The sister in the kindness of her heart killed one of her chickens, and cooked a dinner that the family might be fed. For this the woman was kept out of the church. She heard how unjustly she had been treated, and refused to come among us. To-day she is backslidden and away from God. It was that man's business to see that woman, and know what he was talking about, and not bring a reproach against his neighbor.

A Wrong Tendency.

There is a tendency among us to be satisfied with a shallow religious experience, and this disposition is, in a great measure, chargeable to the men commissioned of God to preach the Word. They frequently fail to emphasize the essential truths of the Bible concerning sin, repentance, faith and holy living. We do not favor sensational preaching, but we do assert that the watchman should warn the people with all the earnestness of his redeemed nature,—warn them against every form of ungodliness and worldly lust; and with a pathos and fervor born of love to God and men, he should enforce the duty of complete consecration to Christ. Formalism and indifference have in many places dried the very foundations of religious life, the fashion of the world has crept into the church, the chilly atmosphere of ungodliness has stolen into the pulpit, and we are in a pitiful plight, having the form of godliness, while we deny its power.

What is the remedy?—Let the preachers tary till they are endued with power from God; let them not go forth till they are clothed with strength of pentecostal grace; let them be filled with the Holy Ghost and with faith: then let them preach out of the fullness of a blessed experience, relying on the promise of God that his Word shall not return void, but shall accomplish that whereunto he has sent it.—Alabama Advocate.

Character.

The best thing in the world is a good man. The greatest thing in the world is a great good man. The most blessed thing in this world is a blessed good man. The first thing that a human being should recognize about himself is that his character is his distinguishing feature. It is not the amount of money, the amount of power, the amount of brains that a man has that is his distinguishing feature, but his character. Whatever a fellow-man may temporarily say or do to the contrary, this is fact, that whatever separates him from others and gives him his individuality is his goodness or lack of goodness, according to its degree. Money, power and brains have their place, and they do exert an influence in temporarily deciding a man's position and recognition. But the standard of the ages, by which any one and every one is tried, is character; and in God's sight, which is the final and determining sight, men are what they are in their wishes and purposes. It is not, then, too much to say that the supreme ambition of a person's life should be to secure a worthy character. Everything else, however important, is merely subsidiary.

Truth and Christianity need no patching.

Poetry.

"Not Always."

Not always shall the blasting breath of sin,
Cast its accursed stain on everything.
"Not always" shall the wrong o'er the right,
And light be darkness called, and darkness, light.

"Not always" shall the wicked prosperous be,
Who gain wealth through other's poverty;
"Not always" unto God ascend the cry
Of anguish, and of hopeless misery.

"Not always" shall the raging cry of "war,"
Oppress the bravest hearts with anxious fear;
"Not always" shall creation groan in pain,
And wait to see its Lord return again.

For soon, as soon, and every eye shall see
The King crowned, with shouts of victory;
The night is now far spent fast speeds that day
When Christ, from pole to pole, shall hold the sway.

Repent ye, therefore brethren—watch and wait;
The day of righteous coming, e'en though late;
"Until he comes." Oh, let us work and pray,
And wait with patience for that coming day.

Australian Letter. No. 2.

Samoa is the Paradise of the aborigines. Here is found the highest type of uncivilized people. The constant, bountiful supply of natural food products enables them to attain physical perfection. The cocoanut, orange, pineapple, banana and other tropical fruits grow in such abundance that the fortunate natives of the sunny isles, have but to put forth the hand and pluck the fruit, if a sufficient supply is not already lying at their feet. A number of these stalwart sons of the sea were ready to receive us as soon as we were safely at anchor. On account of the coral formation and shallowness of the water boats anchor at a distance of a mile and one-half from the shore. We availed ourselves of the first opportunity offered of landing, though it was not without some misgiving that we entrusted ourselves to these fantastically tattooed creatures, quarreling for precedence.

Our first thought after the excitement of getting safely landed without furnishing a breakfast for the sharks which infest this harbor in large numbers, was to procure something for ourselves to eat. Here we began an experience which has been often repeated, and we feel justified in the assertion that if you desire an early breakfast or one prepared quickly after crossing the Equator, there may be a possibility of having your desire gratified, but small probability.

We were rewarded for patient waiting, for the grilled pigeon and coffee with fresh milk were very appetizing. Here we tasted for the first time the delicious fruits of the islands, with which the table was loaded. The dining room was up-stairs, and overlooking the sea. We were deftly served by two Feejee boys. The proprietor told us the Samoans do not make good domestics. We were not sure that he was unprejudiced. Though a native of Tennessee himself he had taken a Feejee for a wife. While waiting for breakfast, he introduced his two children, with evident pride, but did not present his wife, somewhat to our disappointment.

The hotel is in the middle of the field where the battle was fought between the two contending kings for the sovereignty of the islands. Numerous bullet holes, shattered window-frames and other marks testified to the vigor of the contest. The host dryly remarked that he "was not doing business that day." He described the battle as a savage scene where the blows of the formidable war-club resounded amid the whistling of the civilized bullet; where the howls and war cries of the enraged natives were seconded by the voices of the enlightened whites who mingled in the affray.

No sooner did we emerge from the hotel, than we were surrounded by a motly crowd of natives anxious to sell their wares. This gave us a fine opportunity of noticing the different types.

The Samoan men are tall and well built, sturdy, athletic and symmetrical. They are yellowish brown in complexion, with brown hair verging towards redness. In most instances the features are comely and regular; the eyes dark and expressive, flashing with feeling and emotion, especially in anger.

The women are less pleasing in appearance. They are inclined to overfleshiness. The hair when uncut stands out in an immense bush which gives them a very uncouth appearance. When, as is often the case, a little hat is perched in the midst of this unkempt mass they become very grotesque. The elder women have a more sullen and less cheerful look than the men, as though the cares of this indolent life had fallen more heavily upon them.

The dress consists of a rectangular piece of cloth extending over the right shoulder and wound around the body somewhat in the fashion of the Roman toga.

The girls in the mission schools wear a loose robe with a draw-string at the neck, like an over-grown child. It would be difficult to invent a more unbecoming garment.

The ornaments worn are beads of shells, seeds, and nuts and finger-rings made of shell.

Some of the rings are exquisite in workmanship being made of beautifully tinted and transparent shell, delicately inlaid with gold and silver.

To be transported within a month from a mid-winter climate with the thermometer hovering about zero, to mid-summer with the temperature above a hundred in the shade, added to the weakening effect of sea-sickness, was, to put it mildly, rather enervating. To husband our strength we procured a native guide, who was of great help in showing us the people and their habits. His father was one of the chiefs of the island, as he proudly informed us. He remarked naively, "I speak English well. I have been five years in school." His laconic sentence with almost entire absence of phases reminded one forcibly of the American Indian. Our guide conducted us to the secluded spot some distance from the town where is buried the famous king who was killed in the insurrection of ninety-two. This tomb is held in great reverence by the tribe belonging to his faction. It is constructed in three terraces, of oval forms, the lower being about thirty feet in length and ten feet wide. The terraces are made of sea-washed pebbles.

On our way back we passed the government Palace, which is in reality a very ordinary cottage.

At short distances along the shore we passed groups of men and boys busily engaged in making crude baskets from the leaves of the palms under whose shade they rested. So intent were they at their task that they paused only a moment to look at us curiously or thrust before us the long stick on which their rings are placed. This silent industry was accounted for later in the day when we saw these baskets filled with shining white and beautifully tinted coral, with sea-shells or with fruits and nuts filling their boats, that swarmed around the ship. The silence was turned into a pandemonium as they vied with each other in true civilized form to underbid their neighbors. The contest grew so sharp one native passed up a beautiful ring to a heartless man on deck who tossed a sixpence into the water and the poor fellow had to dive for it.

Apia consists mainly of one long, straggling street which skirts the ocean. Our curiosity with regard to the part of the town occupied by the white inhabitants was soon satisfied. After peering into a few of the old-fashioned German boxes called shops for the purpose of making a few necessary purchases, we spent the rest of the time in the native village, which lies somewhat back of the town.

The guide conducted us to his own home which being that of the chief was the most pretentious one of the village. The others were similar in construction. The grateful sense of coolness and comfort which pervaded convinced us that the natives knew by instinct if not by science how to construct dwellings well suited to the climate. The deep, conical shaped roof, composed of thatched palm leaves is supported by a number of upright posts, about four feet high. Cross supports are placed in the hollow dome which answers the purpose of a loft where things may be stored.

The burning rays of the sun can not enter, while the absence of side walls admits of free ventilation. The floor is made of small sea-washed pebbles. There being no one at home when we entered, or more probably went under the roof, our guide went for his sweetheart to entertain us while he busied himself in getting some fruit for us to take on board. Fafai could not speak English but she made up in laughing what she could not put into words. She showed us her name tattooed on her left arm. She pulled down some beautifully woven straw mats from the beams above and hospitably asked us to be seated. After giving each of us a fan, she seated herself with her hands clasped about the knees and broke into a merry peal of laughter. Evidently we were as amusing to her as she was to us.

A smouldering fire was burning in an old iron pot. While we were wondering for what purpose, a neighbor stopped in and lighted her pipe. Seeing this Fafai took a green leaf from a convenient supply and placed it upon the fire. It emitted a pleasant, pungent odor. When sufficiently dry she rolled it into a cigarette, lighted it and after taking a few puffs herself, proffered it to one of the party to smoke. Her next act of hospitality was very thoughtful. She got a cocoanut shell, filled with some cooling drink for us. We showed our appreciation by each in turn drinking from the eyes of the cocoanut. Our awkwardness elicited another merry peal of laughter from Fafai, which wakened a little brown baby lying under a mosquito net at the farther side of the room. It crowed in sympathetic response.

We were soon surrounded by native women, who gradually drew nearer and nearer until finally the more curious ones came inside the hut and began to examine my clothing. The chief's wife learning of our presence hastened home from somewhere. She immediately sat down as close to me as possible. She was a motherly woman who showed her delight at our visit by putting her arm around me, patting me on the back and holding my hands. She expressed great sympathy for me. Rubbing my arm she said—"sick?" I said, "Yes, the water." She nodded understandingly. She took up my jacket, which the guide had carefully folded and laid aside, and wished me to put it on. She was not satisfied until I had buttoned all the buttons. After she had sufficiently approved of the fit of it by smoothing out all the wrinkles, she wanted to see the lining. I took it off, turned it inside out that she might see the bright silk lining. A little girl came up timidly and extended her hand. I allowed her to take the jacket. She passed her hand lightly and lovingly again and again over the velvet color. The women of the hut brought out a collection of beautiful shells for us to examine. To show our appreciation of their hospitality we bought so many of them as we could manage to take with us. By the time we had shown our few pieces of jewelry, pocket knives, combs and hair-pins the guide came in laden with fruit. We had a large stalk of bananas, seven large pine apples, two dozen oranges and a dozen melon pears; all for two English shillings, forty-eight cents. The pine apples were ripe and delicious, the bananas small but with a much richer flavor than those obtained in America, the small, green, sour looking oranges were the greatest surprise in their delicate sweetness, but the melon pears—the less said about them the better, unless one is fond of a mixture of pumpkin, paw paw and mandrake. They are served somewhat as a musk melon, with salt, pepper and some kind of sauce or relish; stirred up and eaten from the rind.

As we emerged from this cool retreat we looked far up the green mountain slope where nestled the abandoned home of the late Robert Louis Stephenson. Much to our regret we had not the time or a suitable conveyance to visit this spot hallowed by his genius.

Calling to mind a recent interview with Mrs. Stephenson and son in which they were represented as in favor of German rule in Samoa, I sounded the guide on the question. He stopped short in the path, and drawing himself up with dignity, said with a flash in his eye: "We no like Germans. If Germans come we fight some more. Me like English and American." To my question as to why he liked the English rule better, he looked at me intently a moment, then said: "More freedom! Do as you please! You know." While the threat was an idle one still the poor Samoans had the will to fight well knowing that with the advent of absolute German rule their life of idleness will end. Work for them means extinction. It is said they are very apt to fall into consumption when they don the white man's clothing and take to civilized habits. This may be attributed to the wearing of wet clothing, for the Samoan cannot withstand the balmy breeze of the ocean and the cooling waves which lure him far beyond the dangerous breakers. Even the small girls become expert divers and swimmers, performing marvelous feats of skill and endurance.

They stay in the water for hours at a time with no apparent effort and seemingly no evil effect, unless it be the disgusting habit of spitting constantly. This is the result of having to keep the salt out of the mouth. The glands are stimulated to over action.

As soon as a vessel is at anchor it is surrounded by these divers anxious to show their skill in catching the silver coins and small trinkets that passengers throw far out into the water. It is extremely amusing to see the heads all converge and disappear in the same spot leaving visible a circle of brown feet frantically upturned toward the surface. Sometimes the circle becomes an entangled mass of hands and feet struggling for the treasure. An article, especially if it be a coin is seldom lost, for the Samoans display a large degree of enlightenment in appreciating the value of money. While their wants are few, still avarice has a strong hold on them.

It is not uncommon to throw a coin on the opposite side of the ship; the more expert men will pass under the ship, get the coin and come to the surface on that side. Many of them will dive from the ship's bridge and bring up the shilling in triumph.

As we weighed anchor at midday we were able to get a good view of the islands. The depth of color and density of foliage excels that of the Sandwich Islands. The rich, velvety fig and orange banked against the lighter plumes of the palms; the tufts of the cocoanut waving above the pepper, red berried wood; the snowy blossoms of the acacia, overhanging a wilderness of red and yellow flowering shrubs, made a picture of surpassing beauty. Away up the defiles of the mountains an unending vista of living green; over which the cloudless sky extends its clear blue dome.

Nature has scattered her riches of verdure, fruit and flower in bountiful recklessness. In her gayest hour she has waved the wand of plenty over this favored tropical land and caused to spring up in wild profusion the rich products of her fertile soil. Every where the eye is delighted with the harmonious blending of shade and color.

No snows of winter, no frost of spring or autumn to bring the sere and yellow leaf, but one unbroken round of summer skies and smiling landscape.

The Root of the Matter.

A tree may be not only an object of beauty, but a source of profit and nourishment: but should its roots be destroyed, the tree would become an unsightly cumberer of the ground.

So in the case of a building. If it be erected upon a defective foundation it will surely come to ruin. It is always well to look carefully to the foundation of things. A person may bring us a report of good news, my question would be is it well-founded? Is it reliable? Is your information well-grounded?

It is even so with the glad message called the gospel, which is a whole bundle of gospel news. I carry it to you, and you ask a proper question, is it well-founded, and from what source does it eminate? I would reply, with a declaration from Holy Scripture: "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show the heirs of PROMISE the immutability of his counsel, that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."

CONFIRMED IT BY AN OATH

The reader will here observe that "the hope set before us," is based upon promises made by, and confirmed by the sworn oath of the eternal Jehovah. This foundation is absolutely impregnable, and as reliable as the very existence of the great Creator.

The phrase "the heirs of promise," show that the good things (glad tidings or gospel) centered in the oath-confirmed promises, constituted "the hope," to which "the heirs of promise," "fled for refuge," and is the "gospel preached before unto Abraham." Is not the gospel the place of "refuge," to which sinners must be directed to "flee for refuge?"

The foundation of the gospel, then is the "covenants of promise." Suppose a person is ignorant of the covenants of promise, what is his position? Why his position is that of a "stranger from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." Eph. ii. 11, 12.

If a man comes to you with a gospel that is not founded upon those promises you can safely lay it aside as a piece of human fiction. The "three-fact gospel" as preached by A. Campbell, divorced from the promises, is a wicked perversion, and should never be received.

Right here I wish to quote an extract from the former writings of my brother Thos. Wilson, which is right to the point along this line: "We understand that faith in the gospel is essential, as a pre-requisite of baptism, and how any one can be said to understand the gospel, and yet be ignorant of the very foundation on which it rests we cannot see. That is, a person in order to comprehend and believe from the heart the gospel, must have a knowledge of the promises on which it is based. The kingdom of Christ is the kingdom of Israel restored, and has its foundation in the covenants God made with the fathers. The very territory of the kingdom, as well as the throne, is based upon promises. If a man is ignorant of these promises how can he hope through them to become a partaker of the Divine nature. 2 Pet. i. 4. A man may be said to understand a tree who is ignorant of the fact that the tree has roots, with as much truth as a man can be said to understand the gospel who is ignorant of its roots (the promises). What is a superstructure worth, however beautiful, without a foundation? It seems to us that if a man would start on the right road, he must begin at the beginning and travel on. Again, it is impossible for us to see how a man can give a satisfactory reason for the hope that is within him, unless he can base his hope on the immutable Word of God in the great and precious promises of past dispensations. In fact, the man who is ignorant of the covenants of promise must certainly be reckoned as a "stranger" to them and an "alien to the commonwealth of Israel." What interest can he have in becoming one of Abraham's seed, unless he is acquainted with the great blessings promised to Abraham and his seed?

In furnishing instruction for the ignorant, then, let us, as skillful workmen, begin at the foundation. Do not forget the a, b, c, of the gospel, in our anxiety to reveal the beauties of advanced lessons. And, before we administer the ordinance of baptism, let us be certain that the candidate has reached a point where he may be said to believe the gospel. If not, we only deceive him, and work an injury to the church as well, by introducing into it material that is not capable of harmonious blending with the faith and hope of others. It is a sad thing when a person is led to suppose he is in a saved condition who is actually ignorant of God's covenant with Abraham and David, and whose knowledge of the future kingdom is of the Adventist type, that the saints are going to rule over each other. Yet such cases are not wanting."

And to this I might add, while carelessness may exist to some extent in examining candidates for baptism, yet those churches are at fault who receive people into fellowship and communion those who received baptism while they were believers in the pagan delusion of a sky-kingdom for immortal souls. Such people could not believe the gospel as contained in a covenant of promise. Do not on any account compromise the gospel, for in this way your church is liable to drift back into the apostasy. Look well to your foundation.

Obituary.

Bro. W. L. Winslow died at his son's (Alinson Winslow) residence 2053 North Third Street, Kansas City, Kan., of apoplexy, at 6:15 P. M., Wednesday June 27, 1900; aged 68 years, 4 months and 17 days. W. L. Winslow was born in North Carolina, Feb. 10th, 1832. He afterward moved to Berlin, Indiana, and July 17, 1853, was married to Miss Linda Mira McClelland, of Berlin. To this union there were born five children, three sons and two daughters. The sons, Hezekiah T., Alinson M., and Lenna R., all reside in Kansas City, Kansas, and were present to attend the funeral: Mrs. Retta Hayes of Minneapolis, Kansas and Mrs. Belle Smith, of Plevna, Indiana, the daughters, were unable to be in attendance.

After marriage Bro. Winslow has resided in Berlin, Frankfort, Sharpsville, and Kokomo, Indiana, removing from Kokomo in 1878 to Hutchinson, Kansas, where he resided till the fall of 1893, where he moved to Kansas City, Kansas, where he has resided, engaged in the dental work—his profession—till the date of his death as above stated.

His first attack came Thursday June 21, and as he with his companion, Sister Winslow, were residing at a hotel, his son came and removed them to his residence. Symptoms of apoplexy continued day by day till Wednesday evening, the 27th, just preceding a heavy electric and rain storm, when all vitality seemed to be absorbed from the atmosphere, a second attack came, when he died within five minutes.

Brother Winslow has been a faithful and consistent laborer in the truth, and a man of broad acquaintance, both among our brethren and the world. Our first meeting with him was at a general State Conference of our brethren at Rensselaer, Ind., Aug. 1875, where we formed a great attachment to him. Afterward the same year at Christmas we met him at Plymouth in Conference, then at his residence in Kokomo, June, 1876, then at Windfall, and from there we returned with him to Kokomo to immerse his son Alinson. Afterward we met him in Conference at old Antioch, south of Plymouth. From that date we met him no more till the past four months, we have been with him frequently in his office.

We were in the city Wednesday, June 27, the day of his death, heard of his illness, desired to visit him but was looking after the location for our Annual Conference to be held in the City, Sept. 1 to 10, and was thus prevented. Thursday A. M. we took the train for Pleasanton for our tent meeting there; and on arrival there a telegram awaited us to return to attend the funeral. The funeral took place Friday at 3:30 P. M., at his son's residence, when we spoke to the people on Resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. 35 53, after which we laid Bro. Winslow away in a vault to rest for a few weeks, when he will be laid away in mother earth. Thus rests one, all who knew him had learned to love, till Jesus returns to gather his people.

G. M. MYERS.

B. L. Johnson was born in Armstrong Co., Penn., June 24, 1843. He died of brights disease at his residence near Fishers, Washington. His death took place on June 22nd, and on the 23rd a messenger reached us while we were assembled in our Annual Conference at Scholls, Oregon. We were in business session. Just one year before this we had issued letters of commendation to him as a minister of the gospel. The writer left the Conference and drove 35 miles to console his family, the 3 daughters are believers of life through Christ. On the day we reached their home, Sunday June 24th, a large congregation gathered at the residence, where I spoke from selections as the brother loved to dwell on during his life among which were Rom. viii. 18, 23; 1 John iii. 1, 2; Dan. xii. 13 and John xi. He was buried on his 57th birthday. His three daughters who have been favorably known in Clark Co., Wash., as teachers were present, also his brother, but his only son is in the United States army in Manila. B. L. Johnson had served his country in the war of the rebellion. He had been an honored citizen and well respected by all. His was a religious life; he joined the Baptist at 15 years old, but in recent years having endorsed the religious views of the Church of God he held membership with our people. The writer had been favored on several occasions by his filling appointments that could not be reached or in helping in the work. He married Martha E. Long, in Muscatine, Iowa, Nov. 6, 1867. She died 17 years ago; since which time he has depended on his three daughters as his housekeepers, and during the time educated them as teachers in our public schools. The love and mutual care existing between father and daughters was most commendable and noticeable by all that formed their acquaintance. He was the father of six children, of whom four are living, one brother and five sisters outlive him. I visited him ten days before his death. His hope for the future was bright. His first greeting was, "I have not long to stay but all is well." His three daughters are baptized believers, and it was their father's great desire that they shall cling to the truth. Theirs is the hope that anchors sure and steadfast.

W. L. SKEELS.

Married.

On June 20, 1900, at Chicago, Ill., I united in marriage Mr. Benjamin F. Jones and Miss Mary Kobow, both of Park Ridge, Illinois, at their new home on Francisco street, Chicago, Ill.

Kind friends remembered them with desirable presents. May our heavenly Father bless them in their journey of life even as they may follow in the footsteps of the lowly Jesus, and the bond of affection grow stronger as life advances.

"There is no blessing like affection:
Life has nought else that may supply its place;
Void is ambition, cold is vanity,
And wealth an empty glitter without love."

SEND THE RESTITUTION to some poor person as present for 1900. The cost is only three cents a week.

Behold the Bridegroom Cometh.

As the bridal hour draws nigh, she who is soon to be wed becomes thrilled with expectant watching. Every thought and every faculty in tense activity is centered on him who is to come, and on the joyous event which will culminate at his advent. The betrothed one who at such a time would become absorbed in other things and lose the attitude of watchful, eager expectancy, would be pronounced as unfitted and unworthy to celebrate the holy nuptials of the wedding hour. The Bridegroom whose bride is the church of the living God is absent, but may return at any moment to celebrate the marriage of the Lamb. If then, the church abandon its posture of eager, yearning watchfulness, if it become indifferent to the advent of the Bridegroom, and interested in the things that perish in the using, how shall it be able to exclaim with joy, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and go forth with gladsome eagerness to meet and greet him?

Strange, indeed, that the church should be so neglectful and forgetful of her first duty to her absent Lord. With evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse, with civilization in many respects a hideous travesty of right and truth and justice, with men rending and devouring one another like so many wild beasts of prey, with prophecies rapidly rounding into accomplished fact, surely his coming will not be long delayed. It is then the plain duty of the watchmen on the walls of Zion to sound the trumpet and awaken a careless church and a sleeping world to the imminence of the second advent. And robed in humility and holiness, may the Bride make ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb.—A. H. Rosenkrans, in Messiah's Herald.

Notice of Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Church of God, at Bush, Madison County, Mo., will be held on the 4th day of August and continue over two Sundays. The Lord willing Bro. John Foore will be with us, and while we have not a direct promise, yet we have hopes that Bro. C. P. Graham of Waynesville, Ill., will also be with us. This may be our last meeting this side of the resurrection of the just, as the present indications of a great and terrible bloody war over China with all nations involved, stands as a guide-post pointing to the prophecy of Joel iii. 9, 10, and very soon will follow that of Micah iv. 1, 2, 3. Then brethren, let us lay every weight aside and meet together with hearts overflowing with fervent love and try to make this one of the best meetings ever held in southeast Missouri. We also make a special invitation to all the brethren everywhere who can; sacrifice some of your surplus cash in the way of buying your railroad tickets, and come and make our homes your home, that we may feast together on the glorious promises and truths of the Bible. You are our brethren, and your presence will greatly encourage us to press forward and onward to the mark of our high calling.

P. J. Graham.

I wish to say to the isolated brothers and sisters, in central Illinois, that I have so arranged my affairs that I can devote most of my time to the Master's service, and will try to call on and hold meetings with any who wish my services. I will be pleased to hear from any of like precious faith, whether they wish my services or not. My address is in column of addresses.

C. P. Graham.

Brother Underwood;

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. Yes, please send your name, request and address, and they will hasten to your home penny or no penny.

WILL YOU TRY IT?

To the Brethren of Kansas and Missouri.

We pitched the Conference tent in the park here at Morrill, Kan., May 21, and will commence meeting at Severance, Kansas, June 1st. We would like to have as many brethren as can, attend these meetings. The annual meeting will be held in Kansas City about Sep. 1st, but a more definite notice will be given later. Some of the points we want to visit this season are not able to meet the expense of a meeting, therefore we depend upon the brethren at large to contribute to the work to enable us to meet these points. Send all contributions to P. H. Oatman, 2711 Olive St. St. Joseph, Mo. Any letter intended for me should be sent to the above place of meeting.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

The Man in the Glory.

"The Man Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. ii. 5.

I wake in the morning with thoughts of his love,
Who is living for me in the glory above.
Every minute expecting he'll call me away,
And that keeps me bright all the rest of the day;
But the moments speed forward, and on comes the noon,
Yet still I am singing, "He'll come very soon."
And thus I am watching from morning to night,
And pluming my wings to be ready for flight.
There's a Man in the glory I know very well,
I have known him for years, and his goodness can tell.
One day, in his mercy, he knocked at my door,
And seeking admission, knocked many times o'er;
But when I went to him, and stood face to face,
And listened awhile to his story of grace,
How he suffered for sinners, and put away sin,
I heartily, thankfully welcomed him in.
We have lived on together a number of years,
And that's why I have neither doubtings nor fears;
My sins are all hid in the depths of the sea.
They were carried down there by the Man on the tree.
I am often surprised why the lip should be curled,
When I speak of my Lord to the man of the world,
And notice with sorrow his look of disdain.
When I tell him that Jesus is coming again.
He seems so content with his houses and gold,
While despising the ark, like the people of old;
And yet at his coming I'm sure he would flee,
Like the man in the garden, who ate of the tree.
I cannot but think it is foolish of souls
To put all their money in "bags which have holes"
To find, in the day that is coming apace,
How lightly they valued the "riches of grace."
As fond as I am of his work in the field,
I would leave go the plough, I would lay down the sickle;
The weapons of service I would put on the shelf,
And the sword in its scabbard, to be with Him-self;
But I'll work on with pleasure, while keeping my eyes
On the end of the field, where standeth the prize.
I would work for his glory, that when we shall meet,
I may have a large sheaf to lay down at His feet;
That he, too, with pleasure his fruit may review—
Is the Man in the glory a stranger to you?
A stranger to Jesus? What! do you not know
He is washing poor sinners much whiter than snow?
Have you lived in a land where the Bible's unknown,
That you don't know the Man who is now on the throne?
O, did you but know half his beauty and power,
You would not be a stranger another half hour!
I have known him so long that I'm able to say,
The very worst sinner he'll not turn away.
The question of sin I adoringly see,
The Man in his glory has settled for me!
And as to my footsteps, whatever the scene,
The Man in the glory is keeping me clean;
And therefore I'm singing, from morning to night,
The Man in the glory is all my delight.

Selections.

The Depth of Bible Thought.

In the Bible there are certain little incidental—and apparently careless—touches, either direct statements or implied inferences, that are sometimes startling when the attention becomes fixed on them—for they may have been read a thousand times without exciting any particular thought. We have frequently been arrested by such passages in both the Old and the New Testament, and it has at the time appeared to us they could not have been put where they are found by any human hand. They involve truths so profound, and utter those truths in so forced and artless a manner, and their significance is so veiled to the casual reader, that it seems impossible that they can have an earthly source. Such passages often occur in the Evangelists, in the discourses of our Lord—declarations that find their echoes in the very depth of nature, and that seem to descend, like the rains of heaven, from outlying realms. When Jesus cried on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"—that was no human cry—though it came from the human side of his nature. But no other man, under the same circumstances, would have uttered that passionate appeal to God amid the agonies of the cross, for it was a dying testimony to the veracity of his life, and implied a consciousness of a relation to an extramundane power which no human being could feel except through the Holy Spirit. We could point out many such verses in both the Gospels and Epistles. They occur also in the Old Testament. For example, "It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." We find this right at the beginning of the Bible—in the beginning of the very first book. There is no sense in it, taken in its lower signification: and if it had appeared for the first time in one of the gospels, or one of Paul's epistles, it would not have been remarkable. But in Genesis, it is remarkable. The Messiah had not been developed at the time in Hebrew thought. But the very moment man falls these two great thoughts find utterance—the Serpent, the kingdom of evil, and the Christ, the kingdom of heaven. They are at once in conflict. The serpent symbol runs through the Jewish theology, and finds its most vivid expression in the imagery of the last book of the New Testament, the Revelation. Now, to predict (say in the times of Moses—though it is doubtless much older), that the seed of the woman was to bruise the Dragon's head, is a conception impossible to human thought, for no son of man could possibly destroy the kingdom of Satan, unless he were at the same time the Son of God. And our remark is, that to find this little statement of a couple of lines, carelessly as it were, thrown into the narrative of the early chapters of Genesis may well rivet our attention. The inspired writer strikes at once—and at the very outset—the key note of the whole burden of Revelation. That is the theme of all the subsequent books of the Bible—history, prophecy, and psalm. It is an arrow, as soon as the bow is lifted, in the very center of the mark, piercing on the first attempt the very focus of all the human speculation of all the subsequent ages; imbedded like a hidden gem in the very oldest page of the Hebrew books.

Another statement of this sort is found in the same connection, and uttered on the same occasion. It is the curse pronounced on humanity after the fall, and on the earth.

It has been the effort of men of genius and of great writers to represent human life as in many respects a satisfactory affair. A great deal has been written about human happiness, and the pursuit of happiness. Our works of fiction, and children's books, represent earth as a very pleasant place, and human life under favorable conditions, as a very agreeable state of things. The fairy books of the middle ages are all based on this thought and fairly express the popular sentiment. The Bible, on the contrary—while indulging in no extended talk—at the very outset, as soon as the tragedy in Eden is enacted, in one single stroke, give us the true delineation of human life: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." And to the woman he said: "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow; in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." There is no rose-colored view of human life here, but a deep significance in every syllable. When we cast the eye back over human history—take the history of the Jews—how fearful has been the amount of human suffering! Or take the world today; take even London, the metropolis of one of the most prosperous and flourishing of all the nations of the nineteenth century, and what is the condition, and who can estimate the sorrows of nine-tenths of the population? And then go to China—to India—to Africa—and how deep is the wretchedness of the sons of Adam! It was all foreshadowed in the few verses we have quoted—and here again too in the third chapter of Genesis, on the very threshold of the sacred books, the inspired penman strikes the key-note of another strain which runs through the pages of Holy Writ—the ruin of man, and the bitterness as well as the utter vanity of human life. On these two texts are preached all the sermons that run through the prophets, the chronicles, and the lyric strains of the old economy: and through the Gospels and the Epistles and the apocalyptic visions of the New Testament. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread"—and in the sweat of thy brain shalt thou nourish thy spirit: and "the seed of the woman shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel,"—this is the summation of the history of humanity, and of the conflict between Good and Evil to be fought out through the ages on the theatre of human thought until Victory shall perch on the banners of the mysterious champion who in "the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God" was to overwhelm with confusion the Serpent-Prince of the powers of darkness.—Central Presbyterian.

Advances Made by Russia.

Now that the end of the war in South Africa is believed to be in sight attention is being turned in England to the advantages that have been gained by Russia during the eight months which it has lasted while the hands of England have been practically tied.

The first step taken by Russia immediately after it was seen that the Anglo-Boer war was going to be a much longer and more tedious affair than was first reckoned on was the mortgage she established over Persia, followed by the movement of troops to the Afghan frontier on the road leading to Herat. The next was the concession from the Turkish government giving Russia the monopoly of railway construction in eastern Asia Minor which virtually converts the great plateau of Armenia into a Russian sphere of influence. Simultaneously with the negotiations that gave her this foothold in the regions overlooking the lowlands of Mesopotamia and facing the German sphere in Anatolia, Russia acquired a lien on Bulgaria in return for a small loan; she obtained the use of the important harbor of Bourgas on the Black Sea, which is connected by railway with Sofia, the capital, and the Servian and Macedonian railways; and the Bulgarian army becomes again the advance guard of Russia in the Balkan Peninsula. These are bargains in western Asia and the near East.

In the far East Russia has obtained two notable concessions, one of which is believed by many to endanger the continuance of her pacific relations with Japan. The first of these concessions is the right to build a railway from Kiakhta, the Siberian customs frontier station south of Lake Baikal, to Kalgan, on the great wall of China northwest of Pekin. The obstacles to the construction of this road through eastern Mongolia are nothing compared to those presented by the country through which the Manchurian railway passes to Port Arthur and Vladivostok. Its strategic advantage is also greater, as it is so far removed from the coast that chance of its being interrupted by an enemy foreign to China and Russia is reduced to a minimum.

The last concession was obtained from Corea on March 30, when the Corean government made over to Russia a site on the shore of the harbor of Massampho, at the southern extremity of the Corean peninsula, to serve as a coal depot and naval hospital for the exclusive use of the Russian fleet. The value of the concession is doubly enhanced by a clause which prevents Corea from alienating to any other power any land in the neighborhood or even on Kojedo or any other island which would cover Port Hamilton and Quelpart Islands, which England has had an eye on for a long time.

The last concession gives Russia an exclusive ice-free harbor midway between Vladivostok and Port Arthur, thus securing a winter base for her Pacific fleet, which is being steadily increased. It also gives her command of the sea road to Pekin, and in a measure isolates Wei-Hai-Wei and threatens Japan from across a narrow channel. So secretely was this treaty negotiated that it was still unknown to foreign correspondents at Tokio in Japan in the middle of April, and apparently also to the Chinese government.

The feeling in England in relation to the Masshampho concession seems to be stronger than with regard to the others, England having evacuated Port Hamilton in 1886 after obtaining an undertaking from Russia not to "occupy Corean territory under any circumstances whatever." In 1894 Sir Edward Grey, then British Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, intimated that the British government regarded this pledge as still valid. In the present circumstances, however, protest is unavailing, and the precedent of Port Arthur makes it doubtful in the opinion of many whether Lord Salisbury would persist in any objection he might raise, while an untimely threat might set in motion the troops Russia has collected in central Asia along the Afghan and Persian frontiers.

The end of the South African war is therefore the more ardently desired in order that the hand of the British government may the sooner be free for contingencies which some believe are not remote.—New York Sun.

What is at Stake in China.

The impression seems to prevail in some quarters that American interests in China are confined chiefly to the lives and property of American missionaries and other American citizens having business in the empire. A mass of timely and interesting information on American trade in China is furnished in a pamphlet of consular reports from that country just issued by our State Department.

It appears from the comparative list here given, showing the value of imports to China for the years 1895 and 1899, that in these four years we have doubled our sales to China, while Great Britain in the same time fell off about $3,000,000. Our nearest commercial rival in that field is Japan. Our sales exceeded Japan's sales in 1896, but in 1899 Japan led us by over $5,000,000. In 1897 the value of our sales to China exceeded those of all continental Europe, including all the Russias (European and Asiatic), by $320,281; in 1898 this excess had increased to $4,171,934, and in 1899 to $6,191,086.

This does not cover all our exports, either, for we send vast quantities of merchandise to China via London, which are credited as exports from Great Britain. Other American goods come into China via Japan and Hong Kong, for which we receive no credit. As it is our figures are creeping up close to those of Great Britain, and if we had full credit for all American goods sold in China the showing would be still more favorable. In 1895 Great Britain sold five times as much as we did in China; in 1898 only a little over twice as much, and last year a still smaller proportion. In the general increase of trade in China in 1899 our gains were ten times those of Great Britain.

In a table of trade balances for five years past it appears that the balance against the United States in 1897 was $8,078,853; in 1898 it turned in our favor by $8,502,519, and last year we still led by $866,783, in spite of the fact that we bought nearly ten millions more of China than in the previous year and almost twice as much as did Great Britain.—Leslie's Weekly.

Among the beautiful things of earth are the hands that do kind and useful acts for all about them. No eye is so beautiful as the one that drops a tear of sympathy over the sins and frailties of the tempted, and the sweetest voice is the one that speaks kind and tender words to the friendless and forsaken. These little things will spring up in your pathway like unpremeditated flowers that shed their beauty and fragrance over life's pathway, and even light up the portals of the grave.

Communicated.

The Harvest is Great, the Laborers are Few.

"Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and disease among the people. But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. Then saith he unto his disciples, the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." Matt. ix. 35-38.

The reading of this portion of Scripture has filled my mind with wonder, love and praise. There is a fullness in it not seen until the scales of tradition and man worship, or will worship, have fallen from our eyes.

In the first place, it shows what is true preaching: it is preaching the good news of the kingdom of God. When this is left out, however good or important may be the matter proclaimed, it is not the preaching of Christ and his apostles; it is another gospel. The kingdom of God has been lost sight of, and the traditions and inventions of men have taken its place. This has caused strife and divisions, till most professed Christians are like Israel in the wilderness, in labor, having refused to go into the promised land and having arrived at the borders of it.

Having departed from the preaching, the inventions of men have bewildered them, and all Christendom this day are dreaming of some imaginary result, they know not what; hence are in the wilderness. But it is not my design now to dwell on this particular point. The text teaches us that the heart of Jesus was full of compassion on the multitudes; and "he is the same yesterday, today and forever," Heb. xiii. 8.

This being true, he will never have any less compassion on them than he had 1800 years ago. If then he was concerned for them and counted them the harvest to be gathered, we may be assured the multitudes will not be left to be devoured by the wild beasts, but in due time be gathered into the garner of the Lord of the harvest, that the Lord of it will not leave the multitudes of which it consists to rot in the field, nor to be burned up in his field.

In the next place we learn from the text who the few are who enter in at the strait gate, Matt. vii. 13. They are the ones who are to be employed as laborers in gathering the harvest. These are the providing of the Lord of the harvest. Men have tried to manufacture them by various processes; but in all cases they have produced only counterfeit ones, such as understand not the work to be done, nor the time of doing it. The Lord of the harvest knows the times and seasons, and has kept them in his own power, Acts i. 7, but is now preparing laborers and bringing them through the strait gate, and on in the narrow way, which shall fit them for the work they have yet to do in the ages to come, in gathering in the multitudes, which no man could number, Rev. vii. 9.

These certainly are not the few that came in at the strait gate, nor the little flock to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom, Luke xii. 32, but entirely another company which is so multitudinous that no finite mind can number them. There we see the harvest of the multitudes have been harvested by the few, whom the Lord of the harvest raised up through fiery trials, after they had entered at the strait gate, and walked the narrow way, following the Chief Shepherd, who did not refuse to drink the most bitter cup of sorrow and suffering his Father gave him, and being made perfect through suffering he became one that could be touched by the feelings of those he came to save. God is now training the few in the same school, so that if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him, 2 Tim. ii. 12. "If so be that we suffer with him that we may be glorified together," Rom. viii. 17. Right here I will say or report what the Savior said, Matt. vii. 21-23 "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name and in thy name done many wonderful works. And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

Brethren, who are these? Are they the multitude, or are they false teachers and hypocrites of all religions? Let us be very careful that we will be worthy of our high calling, that we will escape that solemn denunciation upon all hypocritical professors. Thus is the Lord of the harvest preparing his laborers who, when glorified, made incorruptible, so that they cannot die any more, can go forth to their work, and then will that be fulfilled, which Jesus spake, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do. John xiv. 12.

The text tells us some of the works he did in the cities and villages where he preached the gospel of the kingdom. Such works, and greater works will the few do, who are the laborers, when settled in that kingdom of God which is to come and become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. Dan. ii. 34.

The laborers prepared by the Lord of the harvest, made Christ-like by the endurance of fiery trials, and perfected in submission to the will of God in all things by the indwelling of a Godly or Holy spirit, are those who become the sons of God, by faith, and of course are heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ to the kingdom of God which is to be set up on the earth and will never be destroyed, and being joint-heirs with Christ will give the kingdom and the dominion from sea to sea and from one end of the earth unto the other, and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed. Then will the gospel or the kingdom be set up and established, be promulgated by the laborers the Lord of the harvest will send forth into harvest with power and demonstration by signs and miracles greater than Christ performed while here in the flesh, and in his humiliation, and the multitudes who were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherds, will be gathered into the fold of God, and he will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them. Yes, God will give them pastors according to his heart, which shall feed them with knowledge and understanding. Jer. iii. 15. "Yea; thy watchman shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing, for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion," Isa. lii. 8. "Then shall all the ends of the world remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee, for the kingdom is the Lord's and he is the Governor among the nations. A Seed shall serve him, it shall be accounted to the Lord; for a generation, they shall come and declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he has done this." Psa. xxii. 27-31.

Thus will the multitudes, the sight of whom moved the compassion of Jesus, be gathered, as the final and great harvest, so numerous that no man can number them. This is the angel's message sided, to the shepherds at the time of the birth of our Savior, "And the angel said unto them, Fear not, for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people."

My prayer is, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

JOHN FOORE.

Brother Underwood:

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. Yes, please send your name, request and address, and they will hasten to your home penny or no penny.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 25, 1900.

"ALL this, and Christ too," said an aged saint as she suppered on a crust of bread and a cup of cold water." Is not such a spirit better that a princely revenue?

LUTHER said, "Let me be refuted and convinced by the testimonies of the Scriptures otherwise I cannot and will not recant, for it is neither safe nor expedient to act against conscience. Here I take my stand."

JOHN FOSTER said:—"Some people's sensibilities are a mere bundle of aversions, and you hear them display and parade them, not in recounting the things they are attached to, but in telling you how many things and people they cannot bear."

IN a certain sense history has justly been called the interpreter of prophecy, but to the Israelite prophecy was more the interpreter of history, for it gave him notice of approaching events, and supplied him with the reason for bringing those events to pass."

CHALMERS wrote of the unbeliever as follows:—"I pity one whose intellect the light of revelation never penetrated: who can gaze upon the sun, and moon, and stars, and upon the unfading and imperishable sky, spread out so magnificently above him, and say all this is the work of chance."

THERE has been some change in the Chinese question since our last issue. It was then given out that on July 6 all the foreigners in Pekin had been murdered. In order to have a clear case and sufficient reason for a declaration of war, the United States government decided to demand a direct communication from Minister Conger if he were still living. Accordingly the Chinese minister at Washington was notified, and a message sent to Pekin, and on July 20th a reply was received which was supposed to be of date not earlier than July 18. This dispatch stated they were alive at the time, but were being constantly assailed, and must be relieved soon or it would be too late. The Washington authorities believed the communication to be genuine, but the European powers considered it a trick of the wily Chinese. However, satisfactory proof is given that Pekin can communicate with the outside world if the government wishes to, and now all the powers are demanding direct word from their representatives. It will be some days before it will be definitely known what answers will be given. Meanwhile China is calling first on Japan, then on France, and now this country, to save her from her enemies. It seems to be generally believed that America can if she will hold the European nations in check, so in case the Chinese government will in good faith endeavor to put a stop to the Boxers, and will make good their depredations, it will be possible to still preserve the empire. Russia is pouring her troops on to the Siberian frontier to check the Chinese invasion of her territory, and be ready to take her full share in the settlement of the matter when the time comes to divide up, or be indemnified. The United States is hurrying forward all available men and munitions of war. There is a time coming when the earth will experience a universal peace, but we are told to look for a universal war before the inauguration of that happy time. Should this present trouble quiet down, it will only be for a little while, for something else will come up that will involve the nations in the last struggle that will come just before the advent of our King. Let us watch carefully the movements of the nations of earth, and therein read the "signs."

Punishing Selfishness.

"Old Churchill was riding on horseback, when he met an old woman who had not so much of the world's goods as he. He handed her a quarter of a dollar and rode on. He had ridden only a short ways when he soliloquized thus: "Now shouldn't I have done better if I had kept my money and bought myself something?" Wheeling his horse around he rode back to the old lady and said,—"Give me that money!" She handed it to him. Placing it in his wallet, and at the same time handing her a five-dollar bill, he exclaimed, "There self, now I guess you'll wish you had kept still."

When Amen Fails.

The Christian Giver says that "an old Methodist preacher once offered the following prayer in the prayer meeting: "Lord, help us to trust thee with our souls." "Amen," was responded by many voices. "Lord, help us to trust thee with our bodies." "Amen" was responded with as much warmth as ever. "Lord, help us to trust thee with our money;" but to this petition the "Amen" was not forthcoming.

The Rent Rocks.

In "Flemming's Christology," it is stated that an unbeliever visiting the sacred places of Palestine was shown the clefts of Mount Calvary. Examining them narrowly and critically, he turned in amazement to his fellow-travellers and said, "I have long been a student of nature; and I am sure that the rents and clefts in this rock were never done by nature, or an ordinary earthquake. By such a concussion, the rock must have been split according to its veins, and where it was weakest in the adhesion of parts; "for this," he said, "I have observed to have been done in other rocks when separated or broken after an earthquake: and reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here, for the rocks split athwart and across the veins in a strange and preter-natural manner; and therefore," said he, "I thank God that I came hither to see the standing monument of miraculous power by which God gives evidence to this day of the divinity of Christ."

Can You Serve Two Masters?

Jesus says you cannot. He says no man can do that. Hearken to him in Matt. vi. 24, "No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate one and love the other; or, at least, he will attend to one, and neglect the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." This word mammon is the Syriac word for riches, or gain, and is here personified as a master. Jesus who had been warning his little flock not to hanker after the praise of men, now proceeds to warn them not to covet the wealth of the world. They had left all to follow him, and the Lord was solicitous that they should ever be of the same mind. It would be fatal to their everlasting interests; to attempt to divide their service between God and the world. There is no foundation for the opinion that gain is godliness (1 Tim. vi. 5) and therefore the broad common-sense principle is laid down, that no man can serve two masters, because their commands would be sure to cross each other and cause serious interference. The interest of one party or the other would be sure to suffer, and trouble ensue. All the desires of the flesh are mammon; the lust of the eye and the pride of life are mammon. Honors and preferments, and pastimes and sports, are mammon as well as riches and praise of men. They come into competition with God when they are served. To serve the flesh is to serve self; to serve God is to deny self.

An out-and-out sinner may be an honest and consistent rebel against God, and a faithful servant of sin. "But there is another class, a sort of hybrid race, which is difficult to classify; they seem to be neither fish nor flesh; they are amphibious; they are in what is called the church, and also in the world outside, and are as much at home in one place as the other. Whether in the ball room or at the theatre, the Sunday school, the card party, the lodge, the caucus, or almost anywhere else, they contrive to make themselves at home.

Christian professors, though ignorant of God's power to save, do not understand such persons, and even non-professors are sometimes puzzled by them. The adopted sons of God who were begotten by the Word of God, the gospel of the Anointed, and living in obedience, have no use for them whatever. And many an honest worldling despises the duplicity and inconsistency they exhibit. The Methodist Herald relates the following instance:

"A young man of our acquaintance is not now a regular attendant of the Sunday school. The teacher of the Sunday school class he once belonged to is known by some to be fond of amusements with gambling features. And so the young man says, 'I am willing either to play a game of pool with Mr. ———, or to attend his Sunday school class, but I decline to do both.'"

It is sadder still to know that even some who seemed to have once forsaken all to follow Christ, and rejoiced in hope of the glory of God, drift so far out into the popular stream that they can hold to God and Christ and truth with one hand, and to the world with the other. What an hallucination, the idea that they can walk the broad road, and at the same time tread the narrow way is double-distilled folly. It is only a question of time when such will make the startling discovery that they have no part or lot with Christ,—God is not mocked. They cannot serve two masters.

Prayer.

He that cometh to God must believe two things, namely that "God is," and that "he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Mark you, not them that seek him occasionally, but diligently. Petitions clothed in seemingly appropriate words may not be worthy the name of prayer. Such petitions may be uttered with scarcely a thought that God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. And under such circumstances the offerer would be apt to forget what he prayed for: and of course would expect no answer. Is this acceptable worship of God? or is it mere lip-service?

"Praying always or at every season with all prayer and supplication in spirit, and keeping watch for this with all perseverance and entreaty for all saints." This is the way the apostle in Eph. vi. 18 explains what is said in Heb. xii. 9. This is the way to diligently seek God,—pray at every season, despite all change of place, relations or circumstances,—at every opportunity. The watching here, it seems to us, refers to opportunities for prayer. The continued habit of prayer can scarcely be acquired, or kept up after acquired, without watchfulness to that end.

A sense of dependence will foster a spirit of prayer. Self-sufficiency is atheistic. All true prayer is the cry of weakness. If we feel that we can get along without God, we will not pray unto him. The evidence of Sonship is essential to the life of prayer described above. If we lose or nearly lose the evidence of Sonship we knock feebly at Mercy's door. May we not say that prayer is the measure of love. Can we not prove that by experience? When our whole heart goes out in love to the God of all grace, do we not want to draw near and converse with him often. Love makes us bold. How differently the mere beggar climbs your steps, from your child; one comes as if ashamed and fearful of repulse, the other comes with confidence and with a bound. There is no reason why we should ever lose the evidence of our Sonship. Indeed no one ever loses the sense of Sonship except by disobedience. The Word of the Spirit stands fast,—and it only requires us to walk in it. Being Sons, we have amazing privileges. "Like as a Father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him, for he knoweth our frames, he remembereth that we are dust." And then we are blessed with the office of the Great High Priest over the House of God, and at his mercy-seat we can obtain mercy and find help for every time of need. And once more,—"The Spirit helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered." Hallowed are the privileges of God's children.

McCheyne used to say that "a great part of his time was occupied in getting his heart in tune for prayer." And Gurnall says: "To get a great bell up is much harder than to ring it after it is up." Is it not harder to get our hearts in tune for prayer, than to pray after made ready?

Century's Greatest Railway.

The Transiberian railroad, from an economic and political standpoint, is the greatest work of this century. It gives Russia a superior standing in Pekin. It now touches the Amur; in three years it will reach Port Arthur, making the distance but thirteen or fourteen days from Moscow to Pekin.

There is annually an excess of 1,500,000 births over deaths in Russia, and Siberia is the outlet for this overflow. The black lands of Siberia form an area of not less than 50,000,000 hectares (188,550,000 acres), but high freight rates are an obstacle to the arrival of their cereal products in France. The average freight rate on the Transiberian is three-tenths of a cent per kilometer (about five-eighths of a mile). In France the minimum rate is four-fifths of a cent per ton per kilometer.

French capitalists, it is said, have invested a great deal of money in Russian railroads and various industries in that country. Since the date of these investments the heavy imports from Russia and the meager exports from France to that country have been a cause of complaint among French capitalists. In return for something like $700,000,000 invested in Russia they see Russian purchases made in the United States, England, and Germany, while France receives Russian products as dividends for her capital. Some remonstrances have been made to Russia, but the only answer has been a suggestion that France should reduce her heavy protective tariff on Russia's wheat.—Washington Post.

An Israelite Indeed.

Jesus was a correct judge of character. He never made mistakes. He possessed a perfectly clear discernment of the inwardness of the individual man. He needed not that any one should tell him, so absolute was his comprehension of men and things, animate and inanimate. His perfect knowledge of individual character enabled him to timely impart the needful help and instruction to every obedient, submissive soul.

Nathanael was an honest, frank and true man. When told by Philip that they had found him of whom Moses and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, he in his frank, honest way answered, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see." When Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, he said, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!"—no hypocrisy. As soon as Jesus saw him he loved him for his guileless character. Nathanael needed only to see Jesus to believe and confess him as Christ the Son of God.

Nathanael is not the only person upon which the omnipresent eyes of Jesus rest. He beholds all classes and conditions of men and things, reading every thought and emotion of the human heart. He knows the very imaginations of our thoughts. The Psalmist says, "He knoweth our thoughts afar off." O, for more guileless men and women today, who dare to be true Israelites indeed!

We read in the Word that "they are not all Israel that are of Israel." A mere profession does not always imply a possession. Alas! too many, it is feared, use their high-sounding profession as a cloak to cover up inward vileness, and thereby, if possible, deceive the very elect. But the all-seeing eyes of God behold their inward life, and in his book of memory are all the hidden things of the heart written, to be reviewed in the presence of God, angels and assembled worlds at the great judgment day, where no covering but the all-atoning blood of the Lamb will avail as a shield. O, let us be honest, guileless, now and henceforth, that our neighbors and friends with Christ will say of us in our daily walks in life, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile."—A. C. Russ, in Wesleyan Methodist.

The Testing Heat.

Recently I visited a factory in a New Jersey town where they make silk out of wood. This is a new invention and the wood goes through eighty different process before it comes to look like silk. When I applied for admission at the office they were reluctant to have me go through. But finally one of the men consented to escort me through the building.

In the original state this would-be silk is only crude logs. It is put into a machine and sawed into strips and the strips are shredded as fine as hair. Then it is steamed and plunged into cold water to make it strong. Now it looks like a deep yellow. It is put into lime to bleach it. This solution is so strong that it would eat the flesh from a man's hand, were he to immerse his hand in it.

Space would forbid that I should relate every other process. But when it has passed the seventy-nine processes then comes the testing heat, which consists of two rollers heated to a white heat through which the insipid looking mess passes and this puts the finishing touches on it and makes it look like silk. Said the man: "If it passes through the testing heat it is all right for sale, but if the other processes were not carefully accomplished it will scorch and be useless, and we can't tell until it comes through the tester."

This is a valuable lesson for every Christian. What are we but logs, crude logs, and the temptations of the world saw and shred us. Then we have a ray of hope which acts as the steam and cold water plunge, and we feel stronger. Like the would-be silk we are crude and yellow, then comes disappointment after disappointment so strong that we think we will be crushed under its weight. This is meant to bleach us; to take all the imperfections out of us. When we have passed through all the ups and downs of a Christian life there is at last, too, a testing heat and who knows how many of us will be scorched because we have not prepared our material properly so that it will pass through the tester, which is God's judgment.

On every piece of perfect goods the inspector marks "O. K." and it is placed on sale, while the imperfect is marked "N. G." which means no good. The N. G. pile is far greater than the other. I thought, would it not be so with us? To how many will God mark "Well done." Let us prepare our material so carefully that when we come to the testing heat which is to give us our brilliancy and perfection that God, our inspector, can mark us "Well done." Let us not be in the discarded lot and forever lost. —Rudolph Pickel.

Short Sermons. No. 2.

Fables that are fatal are those that falsify and counterfeit the truth of God, and as we value life, let us beware of all such fables. The first fable or falsehood that turned from the truth was invented by Satan at the start, and was more deadly in its effects than a dose of strychnine, as it has slew old and young from that day to this, and filled our once fair world with sorrow, pain and woe. Oh, what was this deadly dagger that has done so much mischief? Listen, "Ye shall not surely die." Who said it? Not God, but Satan—the devil; who was a liar and a murderer from the beginning. Then oh, do not tell me it makes no difference what a man believes so he is sincere, which is another fable misleading its millions. Those who believe a fable or a lie, will be damned who believed not the truth but have pleasure in unrighteousness, and fabulous stories. Paul says so, 2 Thes. ii. 10-12. Many are the fables or falsehoods that have sprung out of this wild gourd vine that has run up over the wall and spread its branches far and near, and it will take more than a handful of meal to nullify the "death in the pot." One of those branch fables that is loaded with wild gourds—Satanic fruit, which is death in the pot, or a deadly poison, is this cunningly devised fable, that the Lord comes at death, which would be a constant coming, ignoring the real personal coming of our long absent Lord and Master, and friend and Savior. This is one of Satan's master-strokes, dealt out amid death-bed stories and leads from Christ and that blessed hope here and hereafter. Oh, mortal, dying man, come to Christ and live.

Report.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." Eccl. xi. 1.

The seed or gospel of the kingdom which was sowed in this part of the habitable among the thorns, wayside and stony ground found hearers. I am thankful to say that some of it fell in good ground, and is germinating and coming forth. On last Sunday, the 8th, after Bro. B. F. Boyer had delivered a very interesting discourse concerning the Vine and the branches and also the fruit which the branches bore, a subject which is so well calculated to interest and enlighten the eyes of our understanding, that it seemed to be satisfactory to all. After the close of his remarks we repaired to the water, where he buried by baptism one of our best citizens, now in his 76th year. He had been hearing the gospel preached for a long time, and it became plainer and plainer to his mind, and he said he desired to change his way of living by yielding his members as instruments of righteousness unto holiness, that the end might be everlasting life. I take pleasure in giving his name, George Updike, for he was the eldest son of our much lamented, old Sister Updike, who was known as a mother in Israel for so many years, and she ceased not night nor day to pray for her children that they would all obey the gospel and become heirs to the kingdom. Some of them have and there are others of them who I hope soon will. Yes, we read, that now is the time and the accepted time. Today, if you will hear his voice, harden not your heart, but follow the example of this brother, who made up his mind to change his way of living and try to serve the Lord.

Yes, 'twas almost the eleventh hour,
Before he in the vineyard came,
But thank the Lord 'twas not too late,
For him to bear the Savior's name.

His companion has for many years
Been working in this vineyard too,
And now their hearts and hopes are one,
To work until the Master comes.

Oh, may their children one and all,
Now listen to the gospel call,
Work in the vineyard of the Lord,
And there insure the great reward.

Obituary.

Mrs. Nancy Carter died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hiram Francisco, 105 East Lawrence street, at 6:05 o'clock Sunday morning after an illness of 10 months of Bright's disease, aged 70 years.

Nancy Ames was born in Cuyahoga county, Ohio, Oct. 6, 1830. She was united in marriage to H. R. Carter in 1850 near Cleveland, Ohio. To this union were born five children, three of whom are living, Frank Carter, of Cromwell, Ind; Mrs. Elmer McHenry of Nappanee, Ind; Mrs. Hiram Francisco, Mishawaka, Ind. Besides these 12 grandchildren survive. The husband died nine years ago in Ligonier, Ind., since which time the deceased had made her home with her children, residing last with her daughter at whose home she passed away. Mrs. Carter had been a consistent member of the Advent church for 30 years and was constantly helping others. Brief services were conducted at the residence at 10 o'clock Monday, July 16, by Mr. Charles Draper, who delivered a brief address and offered prayer. The remains were conveyed to Ligonier, Ind., via the L. S. & M. S. railway and final services were held at the Advent church in that town, Rev. Mr. Musson, officiating. Interment was made in the Ligonier cemetery.

Died, on Monday, July 9th, 1900, Mrs. Anna Olmstead, the beloved wife of Bro. James Olmstead, who died in October last.

Ever since her husband's death she has been far from well, and finally passed to rest at a friend's home in Oakland, Cal., where she was visiting. Her sufferings were great for some weeks, and much of the time near the end was spent in unconsciousness, with intermissions of consciousness for a few moments at a time.

At the request of her sister the services were conducted at the house by the writer.

The Hour of Prayer.

A lull in the ceaseless tumult,
A pause in the weary toil,
In the needless selfish striving,
In the sordid earthward toil;
A hush in the noisy clamor,
In the dizzy whirl and din:
A stop on the dusty pathway,
On the steps that go down to sin.

A moment's turning from pleasure,
A brief forgetting of pain
Ere, strong in the strength divine,
We take up the cross again:
A moment to breathe the grateful—
A draught of a purer air,
As into the upper regions
The spirit soars in prayer.

A moment for fairer dawning
The armor that girds one on,
For closer binding the sandals
Ere pressing on to the goal:
For seeking a Guide unerring
O'er a path unknown and dim,
And a light by which to shine ahead
We may safely follow Him.

So we wait for the Father's blessing,
The touch of his hand in peace,
Ere we go our way rejoicing,
Attuned to heaven's harmonies.
We drop at his feet the burden,
The sorrow, and earning care,
And find a sweet rest and solace
In this holy hour of prayer.

God's Gracious Plan.—No. 4.

A Bible summary in brief, of God's merciful arrangement for the salvation of fallen man, through Christ Jesus as Mediator, after 50 years of private study for Bible truth.

"God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and weak things to confound the mighty." A shepherd boy to be a king, and a fisherman to have the keys of the kingdom.

He chose his elect in Christ before the foundation of the world. He chose them from the beginning to salvation through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth. 2 Thess. ii. 13.

They are all chosen through Christ the only name and way they could be chosen, and this is the only way God has given to enlighten and prepare all men in due time for salvation if they will accept it.

God controls men by motive power. The promise of an endless life through Christ, and the coming kingdom is the motive power offered to win men to Christ. Freedom of choice, with power to act, and reason to guide, is the heritage God gave to man, by which responsibility is created, and character is formed; without which there could be no responsibility, nor voluntary action. Take away man's freedom to choose and refuse and will power to act, and he would be an irresponsible statue. In short it would deprive him of all voluntary action. He could neither move nor talk nor eat.

God has been arranging and preparing for the great future event of blessing all nations by the elect seed since the promise was made that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head.

What and where is the saints inheritance?

David says, "The heaven even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Psa. cxv. 16.

"The kingdom under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." Dan. vii. 27.

"I will cause them that love me to inherit substance." "The meek shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5.

Abraham and his seed was promised the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, Gen. xvii. 8, and died without so much as to set his foot on for an inheritance. Acts vii. 5, but he and his seed are heirs to the world. Rom. iv. 13.

Christ said, "I will come again that where I am ye may be also." Christ is to set on the throne of his Father David and rule over the house of Jacob forever. So he nor his saints never leave the earth. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Psa. xxxvii. "They shall be recompensed in the earth." Psa. xi. 31.

These Scriptures so definitely define the inheritance that we will quote no more.

Where is the kingdom of God, and when set up?

This is an age of faith and hope, where we have only the fruits of the Spirit as a foretaste of the coming kingdom, for which we are waiting and praying. Job says "The earth is given into the hands of the wicked," Job ix. 24. John says, "The whole world lieth in the wicked one." 1 John v. 17. The devil tempted Christ by an offer of all his kingdoms if he would worship him, which could not have been a temptation, if he did not control them.

God's kingdom was, and is to be a literal kingdom. Israel was God's kingdom, located in Palestine. He said he was their King. 1 Sam. xii. 12. God chose Solomon to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel, 1 Chron. xxviii. 5. Zedekiah their last king was taken prisoner to Babylon, of whom the Lord said, "Remove the diadem and take off the crown, exalt him that is low and abase him that is high." "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 26, 27.

There is much history and many way-marks of truth to guide the seeker after light in these few words. They with Daniel's prophetical explanation of Nebuchadnezzar's image, furnish a key that unlocks the history of this world and the merciful arrangement and purpose of God in behalf of the children of men so literally, that it undermines all visionary theories built on mystical interpretation concerning the only kingdom promised to the children of men.

Christ reigns on David's throne forever when he comes, and the saints are with him forever. There is not a hint of they or Christ ever leaving this earth.

The head of gold represents the universal Babylonian Kingdom. The breast of silver, the Medo-Persian Kingdom. The thighs of brass the Grecian Kingdom. The legs of iron, and feet and toes of iron and clay, the Roman Kingdom in its united and present divded form, and the stone (being Christ) that strikes the image on the feet and breaks the clay, the brass, the silver and gold to pieces and becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth, represents the fifth everlasting kingdom. Dan. ii. 35. In verse 44 Daniel gives the same truth in another form, saying, "In the days of these kings (speaking of Rome in its present divided state) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

In Daniel's historical prophecies it must be admitted that the outlines of the history of this world thus far has been literally and correctly given, and this should convince all that the future predictions in the same prophecies will be as literally fulfilled. Israel was conquered by Babylon and Hezekiah's crown taken off, and God's kingdom is to be no more till he—Christ, the Stone, shall come and strike the image on the feet (not in the legs or thigh) which is yet in the near future. Then the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.

The three times the kingdoms were overturned before he whose right it is shall come, was from Babylon to Medo-Persia, from Persia to Greece, and from Greece to Rome, Daniel sums up the great object for which the kingdom of God, the fifth kingdom is to be established in harmony with the great object for which the oath-clad promise was given, and that is the blessing of the nations. He says in Dan. vii. 14, "One like the Son of Man, (Christ) came before the Ancient of Days, and there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, (what for?) that all peoples, nations and languages should serve him."

The Psalmist says, "All the nations thou hast made shall come and worship before thee." Psa. lxxxviii. 9. This serving and worshiping is located in the kingdom, but how could heathen nations without enlightenment serve and obey God, or how could they obey if all are destroyed at Christ's coming and none but the elect seed left and saved?

The coming kingdom and the resurrection life hid in Christ, are the motive-power used in the gospel to induce men to repent. In Christ's first teaching he says, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was the next universal kingdom to come. He went about all Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom. He says, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

Its coming is of so much importance that he gave it in form as a petition for the daily prayer of his people, saying, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven," and his coming and kingdom is yet the earnest prayer of his waiting people.

That the kingdom now is near at hand, is shown by the signs being nearly fulfilled that immediately precede his coming. Luke xxi. The darkening of the sun and moon, the perplexity of nations, looking for things coming on the earth, and the parable of the fig tree. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." The coming of Christ and the establishing of the kingdom are the next great events now to look for.

Many passages are quoted to prove that the kingdom is already set up, such as Christ saying, "The kingdom is come unto you." Did Christ intend in this to contradict Daniel in his positive statements and his own teaching in requiring his followers to pray for its coming, if it had already come? Certainly not. It had come to them by proclamation as an object of faith and hope; but not in fact. We are translated into, or for the kingdom, but it is by faith. God said to his Son, "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Psa. ii. 8. The Revelator quotes this and puts its fulfillment after Christ's coming. "That which ye have hold fast till I come." "He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron." Rev. ii. 25. Why rule them with a rod of iron? Because their power and authority must first be broken before they can be enlightened and Christ can speak peace to the heathen. "When thy judgments are in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." Famine and pestilence and hailstones are used when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ to subdue and break in pieces their wicked rule.

The heathen are given to Christ for an inheritance, and an inheritance, Webster says, "is something desirable," and certainly Christ would not ask for the heathen to destroy, for he came to save men's lives and not to destroy them. The kingdoms of this world are not given to Christ till he comes, neither does his reign over them commence till the stone strikes the image on the feet. The worldlies they lived in the wicked one yet. Christ sits at the right hand of his Father until his enemies are made his footstool. It is then the rod of his strength goes out of Zion and he rules in the midst of his enemies. Psa. ex. It is then the law goes forth out of Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

The Better Resurrection.

Editor Restitution:

I have before me a book, THE BETTER WAY, by Dr. B. Carradine, a Methodist evangelist of the sanctification type. Although the common mistake is made in frequent statements of assuming the semi-platonic, heathen theory of immaterial soul beings with inherent immortality instead of accepting God's plan of salvation of life only in the Christ through a resurrection or a change from natural life into spiritual, immortal life in the call of the living saints in the resurrection morning, and also the mistake of placing the redeemed in the heavens both after the death and after the resurrection instead of in the new earth under the whole heavens in the immortalized state when Jesus has come as King, there are a number of Bible truths very fitly stated.

We understand that Jesus received a special resurrection, that he became the first fruits. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Afterward, when he comes as a thief, 1 Cor. v. 2, 2 Peter iii. 10, Rev. xvi. 15, etc., for his saints, there will be the blessed resurrection from among the dead—Phil. iii. 11, of them that are Christ's at his coming. These just and justified ones shall not come into judgment, but shall be like him and shall see him as he is, in glory, in a glorified body. 1 John iii. 2; Col. iii. 4. They shall be heirs, even joint-heirs, with him. Then, when he shall have put down all authority and power, all rule, the end shall come and the rest of the dead shall arise to judgment, some to everlasting life and some to everlasting condemnation and death, Rev. xx. 5, 12, 14; 1 Cor. xv. 24, etc.

From the book referred to above I quote under two headings what is rarely so clearly put except by those who have thrown off the yoke of sectarianism and take the full Bible in its purity.

J. G. Happt.

A GREATER PRIVILEGE.

"Some close students of the Bible say there is a coming of Christ for his bride, that precedes by a thousand years his coming to judge the world. That not all will see him. Not all will go into the great supper with him at that time.

"There is a day coming of Christ when every eye shall see him; but there is a midnight coming that is going to astonish and amaze many in the church. In the day coming, all will be taken, good and bad alike. In the other coming, the Bible says, 'one shall be taken and the other left.' Two women will be grinding at the mill; two will be in a bed; one shall be taken and the other left. Those that are ready to meet Christ will be caught away from the tribulation that is to reign on earth and that precedes the final judgment. Let us live so as to see the Bridegroom when he comes!"

B. Carradine.

THE BETTER RESURRECTION.

"In Hebrews xi. 35 we are told that certain persons endured certain things that they might obtain a better resurrection.

"If there is such a thing as degrees of comparison and if there is to be any dependence placed upon the construction of language, then, according to this expression better, there must be a good resurrection.

"No one will admit for a moment that the resurrection of the wicked is a good one. On the contrary we have the Word of God stating that it is one of shame and everlasting contempt.

"So here we have three types or grades of resurrection—bad, good and better.

"Should one, in a critical spirit, ask where is the best resurrection and thus seek to cast ridicule upon the thought, we would calmly point to that of the Son of God. Here as in all other things, he outranks and towers above us all.

"We are told in the Word of God that the good and bad alike will be raised from their graves on the morning of the last day. At the voice of the Son of God they that sleep in the dust will come forth, some to eternal life and glory, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. This is what is called the general resurrection.

"Where will we find the better resurrection? Let the reader turn to Rev. xx. 4, 5, 6, and see for himself: 'And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years.'

"The first resurrection takes place a thousand years before the general resurrection and is seen at a glance to be a better resurrection.

"This is the resurrection that Paul talks about in Philippians iii. 11, 12: 'If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect.'

"Many have quoted these words to prove that Paul never had the blessing of Christian perfection, when he is not speaking of that grace at all, but of the glory of a peculiar resurrection.

"But some one says, Why should he be straining after a resurrection, when we all shall be raised, no matter what we do?

"In answer, let the reader notice that it is not the general resurrection that Paul is speaking of and saying that he is laboring for, but a very remarkable resurrection! Not a resurrection in common with all the dead, but out from among or out from the dead. The Revised Version brings out the meaning in the translation in the Greek.

"This, by the way, is the peculiar description of the resurrection of the Savior: Not raised with the dead, but from the dead!

"There is a resurrection of a certain band of the Lord's followers that takes place a thousand years before the general resurrection, and when they are raised they will be taken from the midst of vast multitudes who will slumber on until the last day. So the first resurrection will be one out from among the dead.

"Well might Paul say he pressed forward for such a prize and exhorted that as many of us as be perfect, be thus minded.

"The writer does not know how the reader is minded; but he can speak for himself in great certainty that he does not want to lie in the ground any longer than is necessary; that he wants to come forth from the grave as soon as possible; and if there is any grace or blessing in the spiritual life that will bring about the earlier resurrection, he would have it at any cost and in the face of every opposition.

"Now the question arises, Who are they who are thus honored?

"In this matter we are not left to conjecture; but the Scripture states plainly: 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.'

"The word holy is the same that in other places is translated sanctify. The two as translated come from the same Greek word, so that the verse as truly reads: 'Blessed and sanctified is he that hath part in the first resurrection.' As the honest and wise child of God would read this, he would at once say, If I am not sanctified, then let me at once be. I must be holy, no matter what be the cost.

"In the fifth verse we read that John saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God having part in the first resurrection.

The question arises, Suppose that a man should be burned alive for Christ, or torn to pieces by instruments of cruelty, would he sleep on while the one beheaded shall be raised? A moment's thought will show us that the meaning desired to be conveyed is simply that the one who gives up life for Christ shall be thus honored.

"In all ages men have had to suffer for the witness of Jesus and the Word of God. As the centuries roll on and Christian teaching becomes crystalized in public sentiment and law, our heads are protected from the decapitating ax and our lives are safe, but the hatred to the witnessing and testifying does not change. The spirit of persecution is not gone, but simply controlled and held down by certain forces.

"This hate is not allowed to cut off heads, put people on the rack or in prison, but it still waits to strike and does strike whenever it is allowed. There is an ecclesiastical power that, when it comes down on an offender, sounds exactly like the executioner's ax as it fell upon the neck of a victim. The letter written, the public censure, the open threat, the removal and degradation from office or position in the church, has a sound about it that is wonderfully like the sickening thud heard on the block in the dark ages.

B. Carradine.

Running the Race.

"Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize; so run that ye may obtain." 1 Cor. ix. 24.

The Apostle compares the Christian life to a race. Business in this world is a race, the man with the most ability, or the one who can deceive the people the most comes out ahead, and everything else is run on the same principle. In order to succeed in any thing a person must have a purpose, and then use their energy and ability to accomplish that purpose. So in the Christian life or race we must have an end in view, and not get weary but press on the end. Heb. xii. 1. We are told to run with patience the race that is set before us. People are apt to start out to do something, but get tired of it and never accomplish what they started to do. But we are to run with patience, that is we must run to the finish so that we may obtain the crown which Christ, the righteous Judge, shall give at the end of the race to all them that love his appearing. The reward at the end of this race is a crown of life or immortality in Christ's everlasting kingdom. If we get into the straight and narrow way and continue in it to the end, we shall receive the reward, and hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." J. E. H.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I feel as though I want to take a part in the love feast. I do love to read the good letters, it gives us courage to press onward. We are also isolated, but thanks to the Lord we have our good paper and Bible to help us through this world of sorrow and temptation; and oh, we long for the time to come when there will be no more trouble and parting, when the former things pass away and behold! All things have become new. Oh, that he may come soon is my prayer.

Your Sister in hope,
Fanny Norbury.

Obituary.

Sister Martha Jane Rush was born Dec. 7, 1860. Died near Remington, Ind., July 14, 1900, at the age of 39 years, 7 months, and 7 days. She leaves a husband, 8 children, 5 brothers, and one sister.

Sister Rush, with her husband and others, became obedient to the faith of the gospel last fall under the labors of Bro. Austin, and was one of 14 who were baptized at Rensselaer; up to the time of her death she was a faithful member of the little class at Green Grove. In her last illness she always exercised that patience and manifested that fortitude that characterizes the follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, the great Captain of our salvation. On Sunday July 15 we laid her to rest in the cemetery at Remington, Ind., to await the resurrection of the just, at the coming of him who holds the keys of death and the grave, who shall not only unlock the grave, but cause his own to come forth in the power of an endless life, nevermore to return to corruption.

"We laid her to rest 'mong the jewels of Isis,
Folded close in death's icy embrace;
We have pressed the last kiss, we have dropped the last tear
On the dead and the beautiful face.
Let her rest—let her sleep
Where the lone willows weep,
And the blossoms of sweet summer wave,
For we know there is One who her ashes will keep,
And redeem her fair form from the grave."

Funeral services were conducted by Bro. Austin of Argos, and the writer.

Secure a good name to thyself by living virtuously and humbly; but let this good name be nursed abroad and never be brought home to look upon it. Let others use it for their own advantage—let them speak of it if they please; but do not thou use it at all but as an instrument to do God glory and thy neighbor more advantage. Let thy face, like Moses', shine to others, but make no looking-glass to thyself.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 1, 1900. NUMBER 29.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalsaints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations: the restoration of Israel the literal resurrection of the dead; the glorification of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

God Knows Best.

If we could push ajar the gates of life
And stand within and all God's working see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key!

But not today. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans like lilies pure and white unfold,
We must not tear the close shut leaves apart
Time will reveal the calyx of gold.

And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say, "God knew the best!"

Genesis. Chap. 1.

1. In sovereignty God created the heavens and the earth.

2. And the earth was invisible and not fitted up for habitation and darkness was over and above the abyss: and God's Spirit brought itself to bear upon and over the water.

3. And God said, Let light come to pass and light came to pass.

4. And God saw the light, that it was good (subserved its end or object): and God made a distinction between the light and the darkness.

5. And God called the light day and the darkness night. And there became an evening and there became a morning, one day.

6. And God said, Let there become a fixed condition in the midst of the water and let it be that which separateth between water and water. And it came to pass in this wise.

7. And God caused the fixed condition and God made a separation between the water that was beneath the fixed condition and the water that was above the fixed condition.

8. And God called the fixed condition a heavens (or canopy): and God saw that it was good. And there became an evening and there became a morning, a second day.

9. And God said, Let the water that is beneath the canopy be gathered together into one gathering-place, and let the dry appear. And it came to pass in this wise: and the water that was beneath the canopy was gathered together into its gathering-places and the dry appeared.

10. And God called the dry land, and the standings-together of the waters he called seas: and God saw that it was good.

11. And God said, Let the earth bud herbage of grass that soweth seed according to genus and species, and fruit-tree that beareth fruit, whose seed is in it according to genus upon the earth. And it came to pass in this wise.

12. And the earth brought forth herbage of grass that soweth seed according to genus and according to species, and fruit-tree that beareth fruit, whose seed is in it according to genus upon the earth. And God saw that it was good.

13. And there became an evening and there became a morning, a third day.

14. And God said, Let there become light-bearers in the canopy of the heavens for illumination upon the earth, to distinguish between the day and the night; and let them stand for signs and for seasons (or definite periods, the same term used for prophetic periods later) and for days and for years.

15. And let them stand for illumination in the canopy of the heavens to shine upon the earth. And it came to pass in this wise.

16. And God created the two great light-bearers, the great light-bearer for authorities of the day, and the lesser light-bearer for authorities of the night, and the stars.

17. And God placed them in the canopy of the heavens to shine upon the earth.

18. And to rule the day and the night, and to distinguish between the light and the darkness; and God saw that it was good, (that is that they subserved their purpose).

19. And there became an evening and there became a morning, a fourth day.

20. And God said, Let the waters lead forth creeping things of living souls and flying things that fly over the earth throughout the canopy of the heavens. And it came to pass in this wise.

21. And God created the great sea-monsters and every living soul (organism) of creeping things, that the waters led forth according to their genera, and every winged (or aged) flying (or swimming) thing (eons by genus: and God saw that they were good.

22. And God blessed them saying, Increase and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let the flying things multiply upon the earth.

23. And there became an evening and there became a morning, a fifth day.

24. And God said, Let the earth lead forth a living soul (organism) according to genus: and it came to pass in this wise.

25. And God created the wild-beasts of the earth according to their genera and the domestic-animals according to their genera and all the creeping things of the earth genus by genus: and God saw that they were good.

26. And God said, Let us create mankind according to our image and according to a process of conformity to us: and let them rule over the fish of the sea and the flying things of the heavens and the domestic-animals and all the earth and all the creeping things that creep upon the earth.

27. And God created man: according to God's image created he him; male and female created he them.

28. And God blessed them saying, Increase and multiply and fill the earth and subdue it as lords and rule over the fish of the sea and the flying things of the heavens and all the domestic-animals and all the earth and all the creeping things that creep upon the earth.

29. And God said, Lo, I have given unto you all sown grass that soweth seed that is upon all the earth; and every tree which hath in itself fruit of sown seed; for you it shall be for food.

30. And unto all the wild-beasts of the earth and unto all the flying things of the heavens and unto every creeping-thing that creepeth upon the earth, which hath in itself a soul of life, also all green grass for food, and it came to pass in this wise.

31. And God saw all the things he had created; and lo, they were very good. And there became an evening and there became a morning, a sixth day.

COMMENT.

The first thought of revelation is "the sovereignty" of "the God" who makes the revelation; and very naturally the next revelation of himself is in his creative purpose and plan as an Author or Creator. Under the misapprehension that the first two words of Genesis whether in the Hebrew or Greek ever meant "In the beginning" whole tomes of speculative reasoning have been written and published to determine what this "beginning" is here referred to, whether the beginning of creation or some other beginning which could be consistent with God's attributes and being. If it meant the beginning of creation what worse tautology could a human author be guilty of than to say that he was the author of his work, whatever it might be, when he made it? As he could not have made it before he made it, nor after he made it. But to make confusion worse confounded, we have these same two words or this idiomatic expression quoted by John as the first two words of his gospel, and as the first premise in his reply to the Gnostics or traditional speculative philosophers of his day.

The expression "en archee" is an old Ionic idiom, common to Herodotus, Hesiod and other writers of their day; but rarely occurring in the later Attic and is correctly rendered generally "in authority" or "in rule" or "in sovereignty." The idiom occurs quite frequently in the Scriptures of the Old Covenant; but only three times in the New Covenant, twice in the first chapter of John's gospel and once in Philippians iv. 15, where it is erroneously rendered also "in the beginning," should read "in the authority of the gospel" in which Paul came to them and exhorted them in the matter of "giving and taking" or sharing in the needs of the saints which is, was, and always will be the gist of practical Christianity.

This idiomatic expression quoted by John as the first premise of his answer to the traditionists of his day and translated "in the beginning" becomes the starting-point for an utter perversion of John's argument through the whole of the first fourteen verses of this chapter. John is saying to the gnostics as it were, you are talking about your evidences and "authorities" for your heathen philosophy and tradition—"To the law and the testimony." "In authority was the Word"—that is the Word of God, not of man—the Word as given in the very first two words of revelation. John never could have dreamed that the perversion of the thought of this first premise of his would be laid hold of by doctrinaires to prove the eternal existence of Jesous Christ, "the Son of the Father." Nevertheless Protestantism has been foolish enough to ignore ordinary scholarship and original investigation, and to lay hold of this absurd and apostate middle age teaching as gospel truth, and make it one of their most cherished doctrinal proof-texts.

The next absurd statement in the R. V. is that the earth was "waste and void" instead of "invisible and unfitted for habitation."

If it was "void" then it was empty, as void relates to an internal condition—void of what? And if "waste," this adds nothing to the statement in the same verse that it is chaotic in its external condition. But "invisible" implies at least that something is coming to make it visible, and prepares the reader for the coming of "light," and the coming of light prepares one for "the distinction" made between light and darkness, which is "day and night" and appropriately so called after the event.

Notice the fiat that gathers the waters into one gathering-place and then the subsequent statement that they were gathered into their "gathering-places"—asserts both the law of the tendency of water and the facts that hinder the full assertion of this tendency. Then observe the first principles of botany and zoology asserted in this chapter exactly as modern science has formulated them. Moreover observe particularly (for it is very important to an understanding of other Scripture) that man was not made "in the image and likeness of God;" but "according to an image and a likening process" or "a process of conformity."

It takes both "the First and the Last Adam" to make the true or complete or perfected man. Adam was an image and likeness but the Christ is "the true image and conformity."

This whole chapter in short is but the statement, and that too a mere outline assertion of the purpose and plan of God in creation. It is the mere "elevation" as it were of the world's house, which God had "begun" to build as we learn in the next chapter. "The specifications and working-plans" very naturally are not revealed to mankind. For God is not only the Author or Architect; but the Builder or "Deemiourgos."

Then the reader will notice that man was not "made out of dust" but "was made dust;" and this agrees with the later statement "Dust thou art and unto dust thou wilt return"—moreover that he was created "a living soul" like all the rest of the animate creation, and if he gets immortality it must be by another creative act higher and more important than this one recounted here in Genesis; and this is just what a later revelation asserts and explains "regeneration" to be.

God's Gracious Plan.—No 5.

A Bible summary in brief, of God's merciful arrangement for the salvation of fallen man, through Christ Jesus as Mediator, after 50 years of private study for Bible truth.

Who is the rightful heir to David's throne?

God swore unto David in truth unto David, he will not turn from it, of the fruit of thy body will I set on thy throne." Psa. cxxxii. 11. "I have made a covenant with my chosen. I have sworn unto David, Thy seed will I establish forever and build up thy throne to all generations." Isa xc. 3, 4.

Christ is both the root and off-spring of David. He is David's son according to the flesh, but in the resurrection life, he will be older than David, being the first-born from the dead. which by heriditary descent would make him heir to the throne, and David then could call him Lord. He is the child born upon whose shoulders the government shall be. He is the everlasting Father of the world to come. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even forever." Isa. ix. 6, 7.

In Luke i. 32 it says, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Thus we see Christ is the rightful heir to David's throne.

Christ told his disciples he was going away and whese he went they could not come, "But I will come again, that where I am there ye may be also." When he comes to gather his elect seed both dead and living in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord.

When and where does Christ take the saints?

Here mysticism and literalism largely disagree. Theory says they remain in the air till the earth casts out the remainder of her dead and with the living left on the earth, they are all consumed in the conflagration of the earth, which is claimed then takes place. That they remain in the air till the indignation be past is true. Dan. xii. 1; Jer. xxx. 7; Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, which is when the world is gathered to the great battle of God Almighty, Rev. xvi. 14, which the nations are looking for and fearing, when the implements of death now invented and made shall be used to the hilt, Joel iii. 9–11, and the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth to the other. Jer. xxv. 33. The elect seed escape these things coming on the earth by being taken away before. Luke xvii. 34. But that the earth is set on fire at Christ's coming, and all destroyed but the chosen ones with Christ, contradicts the plainest and most fundamental teaching of the Bible. Paul says that Christ comes (not go away) with all his saints, 1 Thess. iii. 13, but does not locate the place, but Zech. xiv. definitely locates the place he comes to with all his saints and puts his feet, and it is to Mount Olivet from where he ascended and said he would come again in like manner. And he comes while all nations are gathered against Jerusalem to battle, being the great battle we have referred to above. Then certainly the world was not set on fire, nor the people destroyed while the saints were above, and here in this chapter it will be seen the restitution commences. In Joel iii. 9, and on, the same event is given. Here they beat their plowshares into swords and their pruning hooks into spears and the mighty men of war are being waked up, which is now being fulfilled. They gather at the valley of Jehoshaphat near Jerusalem to battle. Thither the mighty ones come down—Christ and his saints, as in Zech. xiv. and the same restitution scenes follow. Please read.

The heavens retain Christ until the times of restitution.

Peter refers us for instruction to what the prophets have said concerning the times of restitution, Acts iii. 19–21, and we have been quoting the [illegible] and he did, and teaching of the prophets as given by inspired authority. The restitution was Abraham to die before [illegible] according to the revealed purpose of God is a gradual, progressive [illegible] begun and completed during the [illegible] of the Lord, called the judgment [illegible] The stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands was small at the beginning, but it grew and became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

Christ says "the kingdom of God is like a grain of mustard seed that grows to be a great tree, and like leaven that leavens the whole meal." So in the restitution. The face of the earth is to be renewed, the curse removed and the nations enlightened and blessed. All takes time, and so God has arranged it, 2 Peter iii. shows saying, "The world that then was being overflowed with water perished, but the heavens and the earth that are now, are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men," and just here he wisely gives the length of the day when stating the great restitution work to be done, saying, "A day with the Lord is as a thousand years." This agrees with the Psalmist who says, "A thousand years with the Lord are as yesterday," and both agree with Rev. xx. 6, which says, "They that have part in the first resurrection (the elect seed) shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." This one thing, the length of the day, Peter told them not to be ignorant of, for God is not slack concerning his promise, but is long suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. After making this merciful statement that pertains to all men, he says, "The day of the Lord shall come as a thief in the night in the which (or during which day) the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works therein be burned up. It is not the earth that is burned up, for that is to abide forever." Eccl. i. 4. Its foundation is laid that it should not be removed forever. Psa. civ. 5. It is the works of the devil Christ was manifested to destroy that is to be burned. Zepheniah iii. 8, in referring to the same event says, "All the earth shall be devoured with the fire of his jealousy." Here fire is used figuratively. Then a pure language will be given to the people that they may all call on the name of the Lord. After the flood God said in his heart, "I will not again curse the ground for man's sake, neither will I again smite every thing living as I have done."

The restitution is a gradual work for the day. To assume that the vast work of the day is of short duration and done at once is wresting the passage from its plain obvious meaning.

B. C. SIMONDS.

Be a Missionary at Home.

The Scotsman illustrates: After an enthusiastic missionary meeting a young lady went to the speaker and told him that she would like to become a missionary. Looking at her earnestly, the missionary said:

"I suppose you have been working in the Sunday-school, and seeking to win the scholars there for Christ?"

"No," answered the young lady, "I never felt called to teach children; I am not suited for them."

"Well," said the missionary, "perhaps you have been helping in a mother's meeting, and trying to bring those at home to Jesus?"

"No," answered the young lady," "I cannot say that I have done any of this work, but if I went abroad I might be able to begin there."

"Believe me, my dear young lady, if you cannot work for Christ at home, you will not find it easier to do so abroad. We want as missionaries those who have proved themselves soldiers of the Lord Jesus."

If God be our enemy, all creation is at war with us, not excepting frogs and flies.

Buried With Him." Col. II. 12.

There is always something sad, and yet something also something to rejoice, in a burial. A burial implies a dying; and, [illegible] about it as we may, we are very loth to die; we die hard. Though before [illegible] on every mind by trials and temptations, we would live as long as possible. But on account of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, there is something hopeful and inspiring about a burial, for there is anticipation of a resurrection, to those IN HIM, "in the likeness of his resurrection."

These thoughts are awakened by, and accompany a burial in the watery grave of those who obey from the heart that mould of teaching into which they are cast. With most persons it requires a great mental struggle to consent to the gospel requirement to "put to death the old man," that the new man may appear. But after the citadel of the old rebel has been stormed and the inmate captured and put to death, obedience to the gospel commands becomes spontaneous; it is "from the heart," and no matter what the conditions imposed, being reasonable and practicable, they are gladly complied with. How glorious the victory, when self-will is put down and the will of our heavenly Father is made supreme. And what joy and peace there comes to the believing heart in the consciousness that it is the Father's will that is being done. How gladly then the heart responds to the requirement to be "buried with Christ into death;.....that the man of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin."

We were made to think along these lines last Sunday, July 22nd, when it was our happy privilege to baptize into Christ Mr. and Mrs. Addison Cox, of Rensselaer, Ind., who had made this place their home since last fall. We rejoiced to see them voluntarily assume the obligations of the Christian warfare, and avow their faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. They had had this matter under advisement for some time and we believe they acted intelligently in taking this step. May it be theirs to perfect such a character as will be approved in the great day when God shall judge the secrets of men's hearts by Jesus Christ. "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor in the Lord shall not be in vain."

Report of Meeting.

Report of the Northwest Conference of the Church of God held at Scholls, Oregon, June 22, 1900. The Annual Conference began Friday evening with a sermon by Bro. Perrine. Saturday was business meeting in the forenoon, at which A. J. Mills was re-elected President, and W. W. Jaquith was elected Vice President. W. J. Byham was elected Secretary and P. G. Woolf, Treasurer. Letters of commendation were granted preaching Bros. Richard Corbaley, A. L. Corbaley, Walker Perrine, A. J. Daily, W. L. Skeels, W. A. Prosser, Edwin Groat and M. L. Adams.

Saturday afternoon there was social meeting, at which much interest in the Scriptures was manifested. After social meeting the brethren were entertained by one of those eloquent sermons which Bro. Prosser's many years in the work fit him so well to preach.

Sunday morning was occupied by Bro. Adams and afternoon by W. L. Skeels, who had been called away on Saturday to preach the funeral of Bro. B. L. Johnson, of Fishers. Bro. Skeels' sermon was as usual an instructive and heart-warming one. Bro. Skeels has been evangelist for a great many years, and is among the ablest and most successful ministers of the church. Bro. Edwin E. Groat was also there and although the time was occupied by others, so there was no room for a sermon from him during the session, we can commend him as an earnest and able minister of the gospel. The Conference was the best attended and most successful held for a number of years.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 1, 1900.

A LIVING soul is a "natural body." Soma psu-chikon. 1 Cor. xv. 44.

EVERY intelligent being acts according to some forethought, some design, some plan, and how much more must God.

"A WISE man ought to hope for the best, be prepared for the worst, and bear with equinimity whatever may happen."

A LITTLE Scotch girl was being examined at school. The examiner asked her, "What does patience mean?" Her answer was, "Wait a wee, and dinna weary."

THE word mortality comes from the Latin root "mors"—death, and signifies deathfulness. Mortality is an earthly body in living action; or life manifested through an earthy body, and therefore, from the very constitution of the body, terminable life.

IMMORTALITY is deathlessness. This word is compounded of in, not, and mortality,—subject to death. The words possible and *im*possible will illustrate the meaning and force of the prefix im when attached to the word mortality, which of course negatives the latter.

MARTIN Luther asked, "What is our death but a night's sleep? For as through sleep all weariness and faintness pass away and cease, and the power of the Spirit comes back again, so that in the morning we rise fresh and joyous; so in the last day we shall rise as if we had only slept a night, and shall be fresh and strong."

WHEN Thomas Aquinas visited Rome, and was shown the georgeousness of the Papal Palace, the Pope it is said, remarked to him,—"Well, Thomas, the church in our day cannot say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "No," replied Aquinas, "Neither can it say, 'In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk.'"

"Work

Out your salvation with fear and trembling." Phil. ii. 12. Is salvation is not worked out, it will die out. Nothing blights and kills our prospects like neglect. Everybody sees how true this is of our present fleeting fortunes; but few remember that it is equally true in respect of that great fortune which lies off yonder beyond the tomb. Neglect, like rust and rot, will ruin all. Most men know what it is to tremble before grave issues, and it becomes us all to grow grave with our responsibilities, and to be filled with that fear which is not terror, and tremble with a filial fear of offending the best of Fathers. Salvation, beloved, is worth working for; gained, it is glory—missed, it is doom."

A Parable.

"A fern told me that it was too bad to be always shut up in a shady place, and that it wanted to grow beside the red rose that was shining like the very eye of the garden. The fern said,—"I have as much right to be out in the sunshine as the rose has, and I will be out." I transplanted the little malcontent, and in one hot day the sun struck it dead with his dart of fire. Now, if we be where Christ means us to be, in shade or in light,—and will grow according to his will, it shall be well with us; but if we touch that which is forbidden, we shall be made to remember that it is written, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," or "dying thou shalt die."

Good Words vs. Good Works.

The author of the following lines is not known. They were once quoted by Dean Stanley in closing a sermon. They express the due proportion between profession and practice.

"Say well is good, but do well is better;
Do well seems the Spirit, say well the letter;
Say well is godly and helps us to please;
But do well lives godly, and gives the world ease;
Say well to silence sometimes is bound,
But do well is free on every ground.
Say well has friends—some here, some there,
But do well is welcome everywhere.
By say well many to God's Word cleave
But for lack of do well it oft at leaves.
If say well and do well were bound in one frame,
Then all were done, all were won, and gotten were gain."

HUMBERT, King of Italy, was assassinated by a man named Angelo Bresci, as he was entering his carriage at Monza on the evening of July 29. The murderer fired three shots from a revolver, one of which pierced his heart and he died instantly.

THE situation in China is changed very little. No direct news has come from the foreigners in Peking, and if they are alive they are not allowed to send out word. The Chinese report them as living, but that they will be slain should the powers advance toward Peking. This threat will not check the movement when the troops are ready, as China has had fair warning before what to expect in case of harm to the legations.

What is the Matter?

A few weeks ago we published an explanation of the markings of our mail list, so that each one could readily understand just how his account stood. We appealed to those who were not paid up to send us their renewels at once. We endeavored to have it understood that we made this call solely because we needed the money due us to enable us to carry on our work. We can understand why worldly men and women would neglect to pay for one of their papers, but we cannot understand how a member of our church, professing to be looking and longing for the coming of Christ, and even expecting him to appear very very soon indeed, can go on for weeks, and months and years, and not pay for their paper. We dislike to notify or appeal to subscribers to pay up, but so many get behind that it is necessary and has to be done. Now brethren and sisters, we have a right to expect a reply to be given to our call. By no process of reasoning can you justify yourselves in not answering. We realize that there are times when it is difficult for you to get the money, and we are always willing to wait a few weeks or months for you, but to continually neglect it is not right and brotherly treatment. We are not saying this to scold—far from it—but simply stating what you will each admit is a truth. We are afraid you do not realize that you will have to answer for neglect of such duties the same as any other obligation that rests on you. Brethren take up your case and if you are in arrears act so that we cannot make another appeal for a year. It is a matter of great moment to us, and we are indeed very anxious, as our necessity is great. Please be prompt.

Assimilation.

Medhurst says the doctrine of assimilation is understood and enforced by the Buddists in China. "Think of Budda and you will be transformed into Budda." "If men pray to Budda and do not become Budda, it is because the mouth prays and not the mind," and this maxim may be applied to those who call themselves Christians. If men do not become godlike it is because they do not understand him to whom they pray, or, do not pray to him from the heart. To be transformed into his moral image they must pray to him with the heart and understanding also.

The Egyptians adored birds and beasts of various sorts, and also creeping things. These are to be seen in groups of revolting association in their sculptures. And as they were the patterns for Egyptian guidance there was no vice of which mankind is capable that these people did not practice. The 8th chapter of Ezekiel contains a graphic passage on this subject. Those who offered prayer to these creatures soon became only fit society for the beasts of the field. By natural law the worshiper becomes assimilated to the object of worship.

It is often the subject of remark that those who have little or none of the truth as it is in Jesus, are far more devotional than those who have heard and accepted the joyful sound; this is sad but true. But, having in all likelihood been raised to believed that sincerity was the great essential, truth was at a discount; and when the discovery is made that they are godless, Christless and hopeless without faith in the covenants of promise, there is great danger of going to the opposite extreme and cultivating the intellect at the expense of the moral or devotional faculties.

If responsibility be the basis of judgment with God, and we think it is, this is an alarming state of things. It is amazing to think that after he who caused the light to shine out of darkness, has shined into one's heart, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, he should not be moulded into the divine image and walk closer and closer with him!

We would earnestly remind the loved ones scattered abroad that our spirituality is not estimated merely by a knowledge of and zeal for certain essential truths, but by love to God, devotedness to his service, unwearied benevolence, victory over sin, the world, and the flesh, purity of motives, heavenly tendency of our affection, relish for spiritual occupation, rectitude of conduct, humility of heart and a growing resemblance to our blessed Lord and Master, who tells us we are his friends, if we do whatsoever he commands us! As evidence is being daily and hourly poured in upon us that he will soon issue the proclamation "gather my saints unto me, those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice,"—it is of great moment that a state of preparedness be maintained.

Apostles' Creed. Eph. iv. 4-6.

THE ONE GOD.

"The One Eternal Uncreated Substance which is essentially Power, incorruptibility, and life, and known before the days of Moses by the name of Ail Shaddai, the strength of the mighty ones," but from his interview with the angel of the bush, by that of Yahweh, or Yah, "He that be." Gen. xvii. 1; xxxv. 11; Ex. vi. 3; Psa. lxviii. 4.

THE ONE LORD.

"Jesus—Hebrew, Jehoshua. "I-shall-be-the-Powerful," the Head of the Ecclesia, the Anointed King of Israel, and the future Ruler of the whole world. Eph. v. 23; John xviii. 37; Matt. ii. 6; Psa. ii. 8 and lxvii. 7.

The subject-matter of the one faith is the glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God, which disclosed his eternal purpose to establish a dominion of righteousness in all the earth. Luke viii. 1; Dan. ii. 44; Jer. xxxiii. 14-16; Zech. xiv. 9.

THE ONE HOPE.

THE ONE BAPTISM.

The immersion in water for the remission of the sins of all those who believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and desire to be brought into the bond of the covenant, and to take on the name and service of the Lord Jesus. Acts ii. 38; Mark xvi. 16; Gal. iii. 27-29.

THE ONE BODY.

The Ecclesia (church or congregation) of gospel-believing subjects of the "one faith" and the "one hope," in whom the Word of Christ dwells richly in all wisdom, and who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and incorruptibility at his appearing and his kingdom. Acts viii. 12-13; Col. iii. 16; Rom. ii. 7; 2 Tim. iv. 1.

Selected.

Be Careful.

The following words of Paul came before my eyes about two minutes ago: "But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."

The truth is and cannot be contradicted, that those who bite get bitten and those who devour get devoured.

While talking to "Ben" Hogan, the ex-pugilist, I called his attention to some of the scars on his person that had attracted my attention. He then made the remark that a man should not expect to give scars and not receive some in return.

Not far from my residence is a bull dog that has a face scared all over. He is kept for the purpose of biting and therefore is the recipient of many bites.

If you want to be scarred bite others, for it will not be long after you begin that kind of work before all your neighbors will know that you are a biter and will treat you accordingly.

What a nuisance a quarrelsome person becomes in the neighborhood in which such an one resides.

A quarrelsome person is unhappy from morning until night, and the delight of his or her soul seems to be to get others to growling. Such persons should be avoided, except when there is an opportunity for doing them a kindness. It is well to pray for them, but often somewhat dangerous to pray with them.

I was asked to talk to a quarrelsome printer, but refused. I was not accustomed to being bit, and had no ardent desire to put myself into a position to listen to his biting remarks. Others were at liberty so to do, but what was the use of my going knowingly into the jaws of a biter, who was proud of the sarcastic remarks that came from his lips?

That printer one day met more than his match: for he fell in contact with a man who devoured him after his own fashion.

Biters, take heed: for the day is not far off when you will meet your match at that kind of business, and will feel keenly how small you are.

There is no fun in being devoured, either by man or beast. There is nothing manly or womanly in having a sharp, biting tongue that stingeth like an adder.

People who go about biting at the characters of others ought to be put on an island by themselves and left to devour each other. I would like to see them in such a condition and watch them for a few minutes until the strife of words and exhibition of temper got to be too hot.

Almost every community is blessed with a few biters—some of them backbiters. And I know of no community that has committed enough crimes to be entitled to such punishment.

You who bite, stop your biting, for surely there is no pleasure in being an unmitigated town nuisance.

Civilization has solved many a problem; but, as yet, has not been successful in bridling the tongues of biters of character.

The excuse which some of them give is that they were born that way. But that is a poor excuse; for it is a duty of all of us to overcome our natural propensities to do that which we should not do.

Barking and biting dogs are promptly attended to by those who are troubled by them. But no barking or biting dog ever was so disagreeable as a person who is barking all the time at others, and occasionally biting those who are made of the kind of composition that will not stand such treatment.

Some who do not bite are almost as hard to put up with on account of their snappish ways. They "snap you up" even when you want to be on the most friendly terms with them. It is best to let such people alone, for it will be a good thing for them to get a chance to become well acquainted with themselves.

How quickly we are sized-up by those who know us and often by those who hardly know us. Soon Mr. or Mrs. B——is spoken of as "So nice" or as "So disagreeable." If you get the name of "disagreeable" it will hang to you longer than you care to have it.

It is good to have the good-will of your neighbors. It helps to make the journey of life pleasant traveling. It is more than pleasant to hear that your neighbors speak well of you.

In the verse preceding the one I have quoted from are these words: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Now, you know what to do, even if you do not feel like doing it. It is the proper way to live, and the only way if you desire to please God by your conversation.

It is hard to love others as we love our selves, but it more than pays in the long run. If you want to be happy that is the way you must live; if you want to be unhappy, live some other way.

As a rule, happiness is cheaper than unhappiness. It costs a man or woman to be unhappy—loss of contentment, loss of fellowship with those whose acquaintance is desirable, loss of sleep and loss of a peculiar satisfaction that comes from being the possessor of a happy heart.

While you are endeavoring to love others as you love yourself, you will find out that others will make an extra effort to love you. Nothing like good example. Try it for a few months and see if it will not work better than you expected.

The devoured should not grumble when they are going through the pangs of being punished for their bad behavior. They should be willing to take a dose of their own medicine.

Almost all of us stand in need of improvement. A man wrote me a letter, in which he stated that he was about perfect and wanted me to become so. I thank him for his wish concerning me, but he said so many bitter things about others that I never answered his letter and do not care to become very intimately acquainted with him.

I end this article as I commenced it, "Be Careful."

The World Without the Gospel.

Reflect what kind of a world this was when the disciples of Christ undertook to reform it, and compare it with the condition in which their teachings have put it. In its mighty metropolis, the center of its intellectual and political power, the best men were addicted to vices so debasing that I could not even allude to them without soiling the paper I write upon. All manner of unprincipled wickedness was practiced in the life of the whole population without concealment or shame, and the magistrates were thoroughly and universally corrupt. Benevolence in any shape was altogether unknown. The helpless and the weak got neither justice nor mercy. There was no relief for the poor, no succor for the sick, no refuge for the unfortunate. In all pagandom there was not a hospital, asylum, alms-house, or organized charity of any sort. The indifference to human life was literally frightful. The order of a successful leader was always obeyed by his followers with the utmost alacrity and pleasure. It was a special amusement of the populace to witness the shows at which men were compelled to kill one another, to be torn in pieces by wild beasts, or otherwise "butchered to make a Roman holiday." In every province paganism enacted the same cold blooded cruelties: oppression and robbery ruled supreme; murder went rampaging and red over all the earth.

The church came, and her light penetrated this darkness like a new sun. She covered the globe with institutions of mercy, and thousands upon thousands of her disciples devoted themselves exclusively to works of charity at the sacrifice of every earthly interest. Her earliest adherents were killed without remorse—beheaded, crucified, sawn asunder, thrown to the beasts, or covered with pitch, piled up in great heaps, and slowly burned to death. But her faith was made perfect through suffering, and the law of love rose in triumph from the ashes of her martyrs. This religion has come down to us through the ages, attended all the way by righteousness, temperance, mercy, transparent truthfulness, exulting in hope, and white-winged charity. Never was its influence for good more plainly perceptible than now. It has not converted, purified, reformed all men, for its first principle is the freedom of the human will, and there are those who choose to reject it. But to the mass of mankind, directly and indirectly, it has brought uncounted benefits and blessings. Abolish it—take away the restraints which it imposes on evil passions—silence the admonitions of its preachers—let all Christians cease their labors of charity—blot out from history the records of its heroic benevolence—repeal the laws it has enacted and the institutions it has built up—let its moral principles be abandoned and all its miracles of light be extinguished—what would we come to? I need not answer this question; the experiment has been partially tried. The French nation formally renounced Christianity, denied the existence of the Supreme Being, and so satisfied the hunger of the infidel heart for a time. What followed? Universal depravity, garments rolled in blood, fantastic crimes unimagined before, which startled the earth with their sublime atrocity. People have and ought to have no special desire to follow that terrible example of guilt and misery.—Judge Black, in North American Review.

The Conquering Book.

The Bible is the conquering book. It has already dominated English literature, so that almost the whole of its text, from Genesis to Revelation, might, if all copies of the Bible were suddenly lost from the world, be restored in piecemeal fragments gathered out of the books in which the Book has been quoted. Then besides there are the Bible thoughts that have indirectly, we might almost say insidiously, permeated the literature of Europe and America. More than that, the Bible has been industriously for years securing its own translation into hundreds of tongues and dialects of the globe. The Koran does not take pains to translate itself, and, indeed, refuses to be translated; but in contradistinction with such apathy of false faiths the Bible courts transcription into foreign tongues, loses nothing in the process, but thereby gains for itself the homage of multitudes who, on reading it for the first time, cry, "This is the book we long have sought, that finds us out in the deepest recesses of our being and satisfies the profoundest cravings of our souls!" The Bible is the comforting book. There is no volume like it for consolation. It is the only sure and steady staff for pilgrim spirits to lean upon, and the only book that is quotable at the bedside of the sick. It is a book to wear next the heart in life, and upon which to pillow the head in death. No other so-called "scriptures" of the world say the things that the Bible says, or supply the hopes that its promises afford. The Bible is not simply a book, it is the Book. It is the best book of any kind that we have. We cannot do without it, either here or hereafter.

There are many books in the world, but there is only one Book. The Bible is unique. It is in a class by itself. It seeks to control everything, but it coordinates itself with nothing. It sets forth infinite examples of character, but it is not itself imitable. No one ever has written or ever will write a second Bible. The very phrase which every one uses, "The Bible," signifies the uniqueness of this book. It is a whole library in itself, and yet it is more than a simple collection of books. There is homogeneity and consistency to the whole which lead us to speak of Scripture as being a single story, not many revelations. The Bible is the exhaustless book. It may sometimes prove exhausting to its light-minded readers, but it never exhausts itself. "It is the wonder of the Bible," observes Dr. Joseph Parker, who has preached more than twenty-five volumes of sermons upon Scriptural subjects, "that you never get through it. You get through all other books, but you never get through the Bible." On the basis of a rationalistic criticism, this quality of exhaustlessness is really inexplicable. But when we come to realize that, after all has been said as to scrolls and tablets and styluses and human factors and copyists, God wrote the Bible, we understand why it is that Scripture is so rich in treasures of wisdom. We see that we cannot exhaust the Bible because we cannot exhaust God.

Poetry.

Gentle Words.

It takes long days of golden sun,
And many a drop of rain,
To start one flower from winter's blight;
To bud and bloom again.

If once from out a mocking eye
We cause a tear to steal,
A hundred words of warmest love
May not the sin heal.

Then hurl no hasty, cruel chain,
To give another pain.
Let gentle words, like rain drops, swell
Cold hearts to life again.

Selections.

Is Russia to Control all of Asia? No. 1.

[The Cosmopolitan for July contains an article on the above subject written by Alexander Hume Ford, which so clearly sets forth the advances made by Russia in her onward march to India, that we venture to give it place that our readers may have a clear comprehension of the gigantic operations, and the far-reaching vision of the great White Czar. It is quite lengthy, and so we give it in two numbers.—Ed.]

At this moment Russia has encamped just beyond the southern terminus of her Trans Caspian Railway, within forty miles of Herat, the key to India, a force of her best soldiers, larger than our entire army of invasion of Cuba and Porto Rico. Extend this radius back less than three hundred miles and it will encompass an eager-fighting force outnumbering our entire standing army at home and abroad, a force which Russia can mobilize within a few hours by a military railroad built for this particular purpose. And all along the line across Asia to the far-distant Pacific, Russia is preparing herself in like manner to meet and finally settle the Eastern question when it next arises. At the most distant extremity of her Asiatic possessions, within hailing distance of the gates of Peking, the Czar has stationed an advance guard of Cossacks, while behind them and within call is an army more vast than that on the borders of Afghanistan. Within a few months, at most, it is confidently expected that Russian rails will connect both Herat and Peking with St. Petersburg. The closing year of the nineteenth century may yet add more territory and people to Russia's domain than has any full century in her history. So far Russia has proceeded with masterly diplomacy: the peace of the world has not been disturbed by her recent advances into Asia; and as the only real rival to Russia's aggressiveness in the Orient is now seriously engaged in holding her own in South Africa, the time seems auspicious for the Czar to make good with comparative safety his startling claims to absolute supremacy in Asia.

Along her seven thousand miles of Asiatic frontiers, Russia has for more than a year been extending an enormous military cordon, not unlike the thin army of fishermen that distributes itself around the outer edge of a seine-net to drag the ocean for its myriads of unsuspecting fish. But the fish Russia is after are human; in number they constitute half the population of the globe, inhabiting, moreover, its richest and most productive portion.

A system of military railroads has advanced with the Russian army along the line of the Asiatic frontier, so that a long stretch of steel rails practically forms the boundary line between the two great possessions, as well as a military base of supplies unparalleled in magnitude of conception in the history of the world.

Within the last few months the great military column thrown across Asia has become largely augmented and is assuming a sudden activity. All along the line an advance is now being made. From Batum on the Black Sea to Vladivostok on the Pacific Ocean the immense human drag-net is closing in upon its prey. Latest reports indicate that even in Europe the net is being extended, Sebastopol in the Crimea now being fortified and garrisoned as a base of operation.

Persia on the west and Manchuria in the far East are now well within the closing ends of the net, and any day may see the world officially notified that Russia's Asiatic frontier has been shortened by one-half and extends but from Bander Abbas on the Arabian Sea to Peking, the capital of China, for the lines of railway advancing from Petersburg in divergent directions to both of these cities are guarded by myriads of Cossacks, while everywhere in the open country between, along the base of the triangle, newly established forts are springing up, new railroads projected and new garrisons arriving.

It is not possible, perhaps, to learn the exact number of soldiers stationed along this outer line, but in times of peace, besides the heavy garrison at the impregnable fortress of Batum on the Black Sea, there are outposts innumerable in the Caucasus country. About the Persian frontier, it is reported, there are now stationed more than one hundred thousand Cossacks, while at Baku troops from Moscow can leave the railroad train on the shores of the Caspian Sea to be borne by the magnificent vessels of the oil fleet, which collectively can carry ten thousand a trip, across to Krasnovodsk, where the Central Asia Railroad begins. One hundred and seventy miles from this place on the line of railroad we find one thousand troops at Kizilwait, while one hundred and thirty-three miles further still there are six thousand soldiers in garrison at Askabad; again, two hundred and fifteen miles farther on, at Merv, is a body of seven thousand Cossacks. From this point a spur of the railroad runs south to Kushk, near Herat, where it is said there are now gathered forty thousand Russian troops. At Charjui, one hundred and forty-seven miles east of Merv on the main line, is a small garrison of one thousand men, while three hundred miles up the Oxus from this point, in easy communication by river steamer, are three thousand more troops. Again, on the main line of road, two hundred and twenty-five miles beyond the Oxus, are six thousand well-mounted soldiers at Samarcand; one hundred and seventy miles beyond this, at the present terminus of the Trans-Caspian branch, which is making its way northward to Omsk on the Trans-Siberian Railway, is a garrison of nine thousand men. At Khojand, on the main line destined to cross China and in time reach Peking, are one thousand men, only a few miles from Marcelan, where five thousand troops are located. A small force is kept at Andijan, the present eastern terminus of the road; and at Namarican on the Syr-Darya River a thousand men await orders. These figures do not begin to enumerate the real military strength of Russia in Central Asia, for her best fighters are drawn from the mounted tribesmen who to the number of many thousands stand ready to give their lives for the great White Czar, and the pouring into this country from European Russia of countless regiments during the last few months has greatly altered the military status.

Stretched along the border-line in eastern Siberia and Manchuria Lord Charles Beresford, during his tour of investigation in the far East nearly two years ago, found the following distribution of troops had been made in that region by the Czar:—

Troops at Vladivostok 28,000; Nikolskoe 20,000; Blagoveschtsk, 8,000; Khabarovsk 40,000; Kirin 8,000.

The number of troops has been, and is being, greatly augmented. In fact, while I was in Port Arthur last summer, there were twenty thousand Russian soldiers encamped in the old mandarin palaces about that city, while at Talienwan, Moukden, New Chwang, Harbin, and other recently Russianized Chinese cities, were located thousands of soldiers, none of which garrisons is mentioned by Lord Beresford. Even now, troops from Odessa are arriving at Port Arthur by water, ten thousand having reached that fortress quite recently.

To Lord Beresford's estimates should also be added the Ochrania, or Cossacks, detailed for duty along the line of railway in Manchuria, besides the constantly arriving new troops. So that to-day Russia's forces at the farther end of her military drag-net are probably considerably over two hundred thousand strong. Nor does Russia rely only on her railroads for means of invasion. Lord Beresford has pointed out that the breeding-ground of all Chinese horses, Mongolia, is practically in the hands of Russia; he might also have added with equal truth that at the other end of the net, in Central Asia, Russia has an army of over five million Kirghiz steeds, the best army horses in the world, while Great Britain's entire equine population is estimated at but something over half this number. So that along her line of Asiatic frontier Russia has stretched an army of half a million soldiers, with fully ten million of horses and camels to mount them and supply pack-trains for carrying provisions and forage across the desert. To offset this, England has in India about one hundred thousand white men who would bear arms in time of war, and four hundred thousand native soldiers and police, who, if not disaffected, could be relied upon to defend her Indian frontier, but serious set-backs in South Africa could not but seriously endanger British superiority in Hindostan.

This, then, in brief, is an outline of Russia's and England's apparent military strength in Asia during the close of the century; but from the southeast corner of Asia another military cordon, thirty thousand strong, is advancing northward and westward, its two ends evidently destined to meet those of the Czars advancing lines. France, Russia's ally, is forcing her way into China as she has never done before. Ignoring the protests of England, and of British merchants in the Yang-tse-Kiang valley, French forces invade southern China, and the echoes of the battles with the Chinese are heard in London and Paris, in which latter capital deputies of the nation openly declare in public speeches that France and England cannot long defer war with each other, while from the House of the Lords in London comes the despairing cry of the Earl of Rosebery, who on the 16th of February of the present year delivered himself of the following pertinent and timely remarks before his colleagues in the House of Lords:—

"The crisis in South Africa is urgent, but we must not keep our eyes on South Africa alone. Last December the government made vigorous overtures to two great powers, Germany and the United States, for an alliance, but those overtures were not received with such cordiality as to encourage the government to pursue them. It does not appear that the friendship of France would bear any great strain, and as to Russia, events have been recently witnessed in Persia about which England would formally have had something to say, but which she now passes unnoticed.

"I would tell her Majesty's government now that it is for us a matter of life and death. If Great Britain were to lose South Africa, she would lose the most important base outside of the United Kingdom and she would lose her colonial support. If another fifty thousand men should be wanted for South Africa, I do not know where they would be got. It may be said that it is unwise to lay bare the weaknesses of the country; but, depend upon it, other nations know our position as well as, if not better than, ourselves. If this is not a life-and-death crisis, I do not know what is."

And the day following this remarkable utterance by Lord Rosebery, the Australian Parliament hotly discussed the danger of sending more troops to South Africa when they might be needed nearer home in a greater crisis.

Lord Rosebery's criticism of Germany's lukewarm attitude toward England was no idle one, for in December, 1899, after the first reverse to English arms in South Africa, the Kaiser seemed to turn toward Russia. A concession to build a railroad from Constantinople to the Persian Gulf was accepted as a gift from the Sublime Porte by Germany, together with a large cash subsidy; and Russia, in return, it is said, for Germany's non-interference with the Czar's claims in European Turkey, recognizes Germany's sphere of influence in Asia Minor. Immediately following the granting of the railway concession, Russia announced to the world that she would at once continue her trans-Caucasian system on from Tabriz in Persia to Bander Abbas on the Indian Ocean. An American insurance company having recently lent the Russian government twelve million dollars necessary to complete the missing link connecting this Persian road with Moscow and Petersburg, the money for its continuation on to the Indian Ocean was quickly forthcoming, and, as the surveys have already been secretly made, actual work begins immediately. Wall Street has absorbed another twenty-five million dollars of Russia's railway bonds, printed in English for the benefit of American investors. The purchase-money will never leave America, but goes for coal, ships, cars and agricultural implements. Russia is thus enabled to assume Persia's debt to England, besides lending the Shah several million rubles, for a consideration. A steady stream of soldiers is still pouring over the Caucasus Mountains into the country of Iran, while from every outpost in Central Asia forces are marching southward for advance into Persia and northwest Afghanistan, while across the Caspian sails a line of ships bearing men to fill the places of those who have gone forward.

The consideration which the Shah was compelled to yield to Russia is the port of Bander Abbas on the Indian Ocean, which will soon be thrown open; and, so far as America is concerned, the history of the building of the Manchurian railways, from crossties to locomotives, by Yankee firms, will doubtless repeat itself in Central Asia. So it is seen how subtly, and to her own overwhelming advantage, the astute Slav, after bringing together as his allies the two bitter enemies, France and Germany, propitiates America by using the money of her people for building her railroads, then returns it to them in the very material with which they are constructed, besides continuing to pay them interest. Thus, hand in hand with Russia, America finds herself advancing all along the line of Slav conquest in Asia. Millions upon millions of Russian rubles are already pouring into Yankee pockets for preparing the way of advance, and the amount will soon be more than quadrupled by the opening up of Central Asia to our manufacturers. Already this spring several chartered steamships have sailed from Philadelphia for Russia, laden with agricultural implements to the value of millions of dollars, orders for which have hitherto gone to England and Germany.

In the case of France, this is not the first time this nation has been the cat's-paw to the Czar of Russia. Exactly one hundred years ago Russia and France first conceived their project of a joint overland invasion of India, and to-day they are again in a close alliance with the same object not very remote from their plans, but with the difference that, instead of being thousands of miles away from England's Asiatic possessions, Russia has approached until she touches India in the Pamirs, while French Tonquin leans heavily on British Burmah and is pushing England's sphere of influence in China farther northward to the Russian frontier.

Editor Restitution:

It has been our privilege to visit the brethren at Cleveland and to hear Brother Joslin proclaim the words of truth. We were glad to meet and become acquainted with the brethren of the faith, and their earnest words as we were about to leave them encouraged us and made us feel that we were remembered, and that if we could not meet with them we should not be discouraged, though our number is small; and we know we have the promise where two or three are gathered. We rejoice to know that all the Father's promises are sure. But meeting with those of like precious faith helps to strengthen and encourage. Bro. Goss of Cleveland came to Salem, June 30, and remained with us until July 15. I will send his address of June 8 taken from Joshua iii. 5. He shows how the words of Joshua can apply to spiritual Israel of today, and that the to-morrow mentioned in the text is near, so near that we can see the wonders that the Lord will work for Israel; can be seen if those who are waiting for the Lord will watch the move of the nations.

ADDRESS.

"And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves: for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you." Joshua iii. 5.

The name Joshua in the Hebrew Scriptures is the same as Jesus in the Greek or New Testament language, meaning a Savior. See Matt. i. 21. We have in this passage a suggestive thought for spiritual Israel in these last days. Israel was encamped upon the borders of the promised land, at the very brink of Jordan, ready to enter into the promised possessions, after the long wanderings and trials. So now spiritual Israel realizing that the next move will bring her over the rushing waters into a land of blessedness, typically "flowing with milk and honey." Being in this expectant waiting attitude, we listen with attention to the command of our Joshua, our Leader, our Savior, and we find it in the words spoken to Israel of old: "Sanctify yourselves: for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you." The sanctifying was a ceremonial one consisting of divers washing and cleansing of garments. All typical of the inward purifying of mind and heart, which were the essential things required by God in all times. The central thought is in the necessity for preparedness and purity. Neither could exist without the other, and being essential to their salvation, the reason is not withheld, "for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you." Two thoughts here unite to give force to this statement. 1st, "the Lord will do wonders," (i. e. his mighty work of deliverance and salvation) only among the purified people. 2nd, the word tomorrow suggests "the nearness of deliverance, the close of the great week of 6,000 years is upon us, and next is about to dawn a grand Sabbatic day, toward which every faithful one looks with joyful heart. Its nearness is a source of hope, and he loves to think of it as only "to-morrow," even at the door.

Reference was also made to Paul's declaration that "for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain." He says they are not all Israel, that are of Israel. Plainly showing that spiritual Israel as well as fleshly Israel was in his mind, and so they which are of the faith, the same are the children of Abraham, Israelites indeed. Their hope was based upon their faith in a resurrection and their confidence was steadfast. "Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead. Acts xvii. 31. It was and is this doctrine of resurrection that separates the true believer from the world, their faith in him who declared himself the resurrection and the life. The Stoics and Epicureans of Athens could see no harmony between their cherished Platonic theory of the immortality of the soul, and a religion wherein all the believers' hope depended upon a resurrection of the dead, hence they mocked at it or turned coldly away. Howbeit certain men clove unto him (Paul) and believed. Seeing that the day appointed is now so near that we can speak of it as tomorrow, shall we not sanctify ourselves anew as Israel of old, in preparation for the mighty work which the Lord will do among his people shortly. Paul was bound with a chain, but it did not hinder his preaching his Word: neither should we be prevented by our present circumstances from preaching or teaching the truth.

David expresses the mental attitude of the true and faithful believer suitably for this time, in the 57th Psalm, "Be merciful unto me, O God, for my soul trusteth in thee; yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast."

Report.

It has been the source of very great pleasure and satisfaction to be permitted to spend a week among the good brethren, sisters and friends at Hammond, La., and especially to help our dear young sister, Bessie, youngest daughter of Sister Arlon M. Siple, put on Christ by leading her into a watery grave from which to rise in newness of life. By this act of obedience she confessed that as our Savior had been buried into the tomb or death-state and had risen to life through his resurrection, she too must hope for the attainment unto the new life in immortality through the promised resurrection, unless the trumpet call should sound during her life and so she should be immortalized without seeing death. She understands God's plan of giving eternal life to those who have earnestly sought for it by a true faith and hope and an honest love. Jesus is the firstfruits of those that slept. Afterward shall be called those that are Christ's at his coming, but they that are alive shall not precede them that are asleep, but in a moment at the last trump they of the faith, whether living or dead, shall together receive life everlasting. These shall have their duties under the Anointed Son of God over the nations of the earth during the thousand years, when the end shall come, when all is prepared for the general resurrection to judgment, for the rest of the dead shall arise, some to everlasting life and some to everlasting death.

During my stay I delivered nine discourses, sometimes to small but always to interested and thoughtful audiences. The Congregational people kindly granted the use of their fine church building from Monday night, July 9th, to Saturday night of the same week. During the week invitations were received from the pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church to fill his pulpit at the regular morning service on their Sabbath, and from the Congregational trustees for two services on Sunday, their pastor being away on his vacation. For these appointments I chose very plain lines of Scripture that are, however, not generally well understood. Hearty expressions of satisfaction and gratification at the meetings were cheering because they were evidence of good done. I have a warm affection for a good brother, who though they are not now of the one faith, yet desire to know the whole truth. Our heavenly Father, bless them and guide them into the fulness of the true hope. Their lives are pure and true. There is indeed a noble people in Hammond.

Our own dear household of faith is standing steadfast upon the promises, definitely understood and cherished. How much better this is than a loose, indefinite faith, or a belief in the doctrines of men! Without exception they are fervent in love and good works. God bless them!

It is my intention to spend several more weeks actively in the vineyard. Some day it may be granted that I may give much more time, but the temporal things of this age demand much.

I see by the Last Restitution that another valiant soldier has fallen asleep. Brother Winslow was a true and effective worker. It was good to know him.

Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Editor Restitution:

In my weakness am trying to serve the Lord. I believe the Lord is coming very soon. I want to be ready to meet him in peace. I can truly say I am weary of this life, I am weary of care and sorrow. I long for rest with the people of God. I never hear any preaching down here in Indian Territory. I do not think the gospel has ever been preached here. I sincerely thank you for your kindness to me.

Conferences.

The fourth Annual Conference of the Church of God for Missouri and Kansas will be held in Chelsea Park, Kansas City, Kansas, from Sept. 1st to 10th, 1900. Our tent will be pitched on the ground and meeting begun one week in advance, Aug. 25th, and the business of the Conference will be called at 10 o'clock on the morning of Sept. 1.

A number of speaking brethren from abroad will be in attendance. A general gathering of brethren is desired and expected. A sufficient number of small living tents will be pitched to accommodate all who may attend. Let all come prepared with bedding sufficient for their own use. Board at a very small figure not to exceed 25 to 30 cents per day will be furnished on the ground. A daily programme will be rendered, which in addition to the business will consist of Bible class work, reading of essays and addresses on set topics.

To reach Chelsea Park from union depot, take a Kansas City, Kansas, street car and transfer at Minnesota Ave. and Sixth Street to a Chelsea Park car, and run to the end of the line where our tents will befound. Let all parties desiring tents please address us at once at Prescott, Kan., till Aug. 22nd, and after that date to Kansas City, Kansas; so we may know how many tents to secure and erect on the ground. The tents will cost $1.75 for ten days. The place of meeting this year is central and easy of access from all points in this territory. Brothers and sisters, we need your help, and it will do you good to attend the meeting, so come and assist in making this the best Conference we have ever held.

A. W. Darby, Sec.

The annual meeting of the Church of God, at Blush, Madison County, Mo., will be held on the 4th day of August and continue over two Sundays. The Lord willing Bro. John Foore will be with us, and while we have not a direct promise, yet we have hopes that Bro. C. P. Graham of Waynesville, Ill., will also be with us. This may be our last meeting this side of the resurrection of the just, as the present indications of a great and terrible bloody war over China with all nations involved, stands as a guide-post pointing to the prophecy of Joel iii. 9, 10, and very soon will follow that of Micah iv. 1, 2, 3. Then brethren, let us lay every weight aside and meet together with hearts overflowing with fervent love and try to make this one of the best meetings ever held in southeast Missouri. We also make a special invitation to all the brethren everywhere who can; sacrifice some of your surplus cash in the way of buying your railroad tickets, and come and make our homes your home, that we may feast together on the glorious promises and truths of the Bible. You are our brethren, and your presence will greatly encourage us to press forward and onward to the mark of our high calling.

P. J. Graham.

The thirteenth Annual Conference of the Church of God in Christ Jesus for the State of Iowa will be held on the new campground near Cedar River Park at Waterloo, Iowa, Aug. 18 to 27, 1900.

The business of the Conference will be transacted on Saturday Aug. 18. We especially desire to have all the members present, as important matters relative to the campground and Conference work will be settled on that day, so come on Friday, Aug. 17, so as to be ready for the work early in the day.

Conference will furnish tents for all, but bring the bedding and dishes you may need. Board 10 cents a meal or 25 cents per day.

Leave your baggage at the depot where you arrive. We will have it brought to camp. Take street car for Cedar River Park, or Chautauqua.

Those coming on Chicago and Great Western R. R., stop at East Waterloo.

In many respects this will be the most important conference we ever held, and all should come. A cordial invitation is extended to those of the faith in other States, and we assure you a good time and a hearty welcome. Heb. x. 24, 25.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. One Thing Needful.

Ah what if the spinning and care
Be left for a time for another to bear,
When the soul that is eager to learn,
From the sordid concerns of earth would turn,
Coming where Mary came,
With the eyes and the heart aflame
To sit at the feet of Jesus,
To sit and learn of Jesus?

No labor profits that here is done,
Though riches, honor and fame be won;
And earthly wisdom is foolish made,
And vain the pleasures that pall and fade;
Coming where Mary came,
With the eyes and the heart aflame
To sit at the feet of Jesus,
To sit and learn of Jesus.

"One thing is needful" the Master said,
And nought may stand in the plans stead,
Laying the burdens and care adown,
To run the race for the golden crown:
Coming where Mary came,
With the eyes and the heart aflame
To sit at the feet of Jesus,
To sit and learn of Jesus.

How to read Matt xxiv.

Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope perfectly to the end for the grace which is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. i. 13.

Jesus' prophecy concerning the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, is in perfect harmony with the recorded testimony of the Scriptures of the prophets. The phraseology even that is used is almost word for word identical in many instances. It is necessary that we look at the above chapter from an Israelitish point of view, it being delivered from that standpoint. Reference to the accounts of Mark and Luke will serve a good purpose in this examination. Matthew refers to the destruction of Jerusalem, verses 1-25, and compare with Mark xiii. 1-23; Luke xxi. 5-24; and compare Matt. xxiv. 3 with xxviii. 20, in relation to the end of the age. "What the sign of thy presence and the end of the age?" "And lo, I am with you all the days till the end of the age."

We now turn to Daniel ix. 25, 27. And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and the end thereof a sweeping away, and unto the end of the war desolations are decreed, etc.

We now enquire, How long the vision concerning the continual sacrifice and the desolating abomination, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? Dan. viii. 11, 13, and the answer verse 14:—Unto twenty-four hundred days; then the sanctuary shall be cleansed. Compare with Hos. iii. 4, 5. For the children of Israel shall abide many days (2400) without a king and without a prince and without a sacrifice, and without an altar, and without a priesthood, and without Urim and Thummim. Compare these two quotations with Luke xxi. 24. And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. After that they shall seek the Lord their God and David their king, and be amazed at the goodness of the Lord in the latter days—"in times of restitution." Acts iii. 19.

Moses prophesied of the calamities of Israel as recorded in Lev. xxvii. 25-29; compare with Ezek. v, in view of facts of history.

The abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, equal to Jerusalem compassed with armies, Matt. xxiv. 15; Mark xiii. 14, compared with Luke xxi. 20, gives the solution:—"Then"—gives the "when" and the "then" their relative force in the context. "Then let them who are in Judea flee to the mountains." They fled to the mountains for safety, because there the instruments of divine retribution did not penetrate; and this circumventance accounts for the statement in verse 22 and Mark xiii. 20 concerning the "shortening the day" of the war; because if the war continued for a considerable length of time "no flesh would have been saved; but for the sake of the elect whom he had chosen, he shortened the days" of the war. Read verse 14 and compare with Mark xiii. 10. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a testimony unto all nations and then shall the end come—compare with xxviii. 20.

This statement agrees with the commission given the apostles in chapter xxviii. 19 and Mark xvi. 15—"Go ye therefore and disciple the nations," and "go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation." Compare with Acts i. 8; ii. 5-11; xv. 14; consult Col. i. 6, 23, for the fulfilment of the prophecy concerning the preaching of the gospel to all the world before the destruction of Jerusalem, and in fulfillment of the commission given the apostles, having no reference to their successors, in name or in the titles of ecclesiastical preferment.

The apostles were sent to preach the gospel among all nations for a purpose. They did it. They fulfilled their mission as ambassadors of Christ, to whom were committed the word of reconciliation—2 Cor. v. 19, 20—leaving out, in toto, and forever, the claims of the apostacy with reference to the preaching of the gospel. The apostles placed the testimony of God given through them on record for the use and benefit of future generations.

Jesus warned the disciples concerning false Christs-5, 23, 25—and points out the difference in the manner of his arrival as compared with theirs. Keep the connection of thought from verse 26 through 27 and on to 28. It is the manner rather than the time which is referred to here. The false Christs being only a matter of hearsay, whether here or there, while the fact of Christ's presence will be, when it does occur, as manifest and sudden as the lightning's flash. The first known of it is its presence; and this refers to his coming as a thief. He comes unannounced without special warning; the day or hour is not revealed. Watch therefore and be prepared as a wise and faithful servant, waiting the approval of the Master in the day of inspection. Compare verse 28 with Luke xvii. 23, 24, 34, 37—"Whither Lord?"

"Wheresoever the body is thither the eagles will be gathered together." Compare Matt. xxiv. 40, 41 and then compare verse 42 with Rev. xvi. 15; 1 Thess. v. 2. "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of." Verse 50. Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. And he gathered them into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon. The demon-spirits gather the kings to the war, but "He" gathers the watchers to Armageddon, verse 16. Compare 2 Thes. ii. 1, "Now we beseech you brethren, concerning the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him."

Read verse 29 and then compare it with Mark xiii. 24. The "those days" are shifted from during the tribulation in Matthew to "those days" succeeding the tribulation in Mark. The "but" is left out in Matthew and retained in Mark.

Transpose Matthew so as to harmonize with Mark: "But in those days, immediately after the tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Accordingly there will be a period of time agreeing with "those days" immediately after the tribulation of the Israelitish race, and before the establishment of the kingdom, in which days the cup of trembling will be put into the hands of those nations who afflicted Israel, and they will be forced to drink the bitter cup to the very dregs. Isa. li. 22, 23; Jer. xxv. 31-38. These will be dark days for the nations—days of retribution. Isa. lxiii. 4. The day of tribulation is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. Consult Luke xxi. 25. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring. Verse 26.

For Scripture usage with reference to the symbolic signification of sun, moon and stars, consult Gen. xxxvii. 8-10; Isa. xiii. 9-13; xiv. 12-14, and references harmonizing with these, and after that read again Matt. xxiv. 29. Our Scriptures are more or less symbolical as the references given above attest.

Sun and moon are in the singular number, while powers, and heavens, are in the plural. There must be design in the manner of stating these coming facts, so as to agree with the real conditions when the Son of Man is revealed. Joel iii. 16 uses the same phraseology as Matthew: "And the heavens and the earth shall shake." Haggai also mentions heavens in the plural, and earth in the singular; ii. 5, 7, 21, 22; Heb. xii. 26-28. "Yet once more signifieth the removing of those things which may be shaken, as of things that are made; that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." The removal of all human governments and institutions—made things—will give place to the kingdom of God, which cannot be moved or shaken, but lasts forever.

The present national and international conditions are indications of the hand of the Mighty One of Israel, and we do well to take heed to the prophetic word as to a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn. These conditions seem to be premonitions of the "great earthquake." Rev. vi. 12-17.

The sun of those days already referred to, becomes "black as sackcloth of hair, and the whole moon became as blood;" etc.

One central sun influencing the whole system of world powers, governments, principalities, and powers in the heavenlies. The great image of Dan. ii. 31 is suggestive of prevailing conditions in "those days." The image is one, and God through Daniel "makes known to the king what shall be in the latter days." Thou O king, (31) sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, etc. The image, necessarily, exists when smitten, and "then the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold were broken to pieces together." Verse 35.

The stone crushes them "altogether" "then." The great image is, as herein stated, broken to pieces once, and for the first time. The dominion passed along downward to the legs of iron and feet and toes, where the crushing commences. The course of empire presented herein is analogous to another vision regarding the four beasts, Dan. vii. 11-14.

The fourth (Roman) "beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame. As concerning the rest of the beasts (Babylon, Medes and Persians and the Greek empires) they had their dominion taken away, but a prolonging of life was given them," as it is this day. See interpretation verse 44.

And in the days of these kings (kingdoms aforesaid) the God of heaven will set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Compare verses 13, 14, with Matthew xxiv. 30.

The breaking to pieces of the image begins with the feet of iron and clay, and on upwards to the head of gold, which was, before the dominion passed downwards to the silver, an universal empire as stated in Dan. ii. 38. Imperialism on the one extreme, and democracy on the other—the first last, and the last first, in the order of going out of existence, as well as in the order of coming into power.

The naval and military demonstrations now (July 12) in Chinese waters and upon Chinese territory suggests future possibilities, and yet the reading of verse 34 (Dan. ii.) indicates a very different condition of things when the stone smites the image. The difference is here: The stone that smites the image is "cut out without hands." It is the kingdom of God in its stone form, or rather stone state—a small affair, but with great and wonderful results. It may be compared with a grain of mustard seed, the smallest of seeds, but when grown the greatest among herbs.

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree, when its branch is now tender and putteth forth leaves ye know that summer is near. So likewise when ye see all these things come to pass know that the kingdom of God is near—at the door." Nothing between the completion of the things, and smiting of the image, and its reduction to dust. The mixture of iron and potter's clay represent democracy: a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. A government within it of the strength of iron, but with the weakness of the clay. The last phase of human government. The iron of the old Roman constitution of things mingled largely with the clay of modern democracy. A state of affairs unthought of by the ancients, and opposite from their ideas of despotism.

The "powers of the heavens" to be shaken are not official powers, but physical, and the stars represent the officialism of the several heavenlies. In the U. S. A. the stars are let down gently to be succeeded by a new set of officials, but at the time here referred to, they fall, never to rise, but give place to an entirely new and better order of officials who are destined to execute justice and righteousness in the earth.

All the tribes of the land shall mourn and they, the mourners, shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven. 30.

It is not the mourning in view of dreaded calamities, but of penitence. They shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourns for an only son. Zech. xii. 10.

He comes for the deliverance of his people. For the day of retribution is in his heart, and the year of his redeemed is come, to execute the judgments written. Isa. lxiii. 4. The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with him; and his feet shall stand on Mount Olivet when he comes from the south by way of Mount Paran and Edom. And "then" after that "he will send his messengers with a great sound of a trumpet, (Matt. xxiv. 31) and they shall gather his elect from the four winds." Compare Mark xiii. 27 and Zech. ii. 6-8. The phraseology favors the thought that Jesus had in mind the reading of the LXX, which is, "I will gather you from the four winds of heaven."

Note, that the gathering of the living and the sleeping saints has, at this time been an accomplished fact. And they come with him in clouds from some place south to the Mount of Olives and on to Mount Zion in order to the establishment of his authority there.

He comes with power (physical power here) and great glory—the glory of the God of Israel. Consult 1 Thess. iv. 17, 18, and 2 Thess. ii. 1. Nearly all of these are to be gathered from the grave. Ezek. xxxiv. 13 and xxxvi. 24-28 with Zech. ii. 6-10, and Deut. xxx. 3-5 with Ez. xxxvii. 21 and Isa. lxvi. 20.

As the surrounding of Jerusalem by the Roman army was a sign of its desolation, to the disciples in order to their escape out from the city to the mountains for safety, so therefore, when the sun becomes darkened from existing causes at the time referred to as "those days after that tribulation" and "the powers of the heavens be shaken"—then the coming of the Lord is near, "at the door." The 2400 days of Daniel about to be fulfilled.

Israel will then "return and serve the Lord their God and David their king, and will be amazed at the goodness of the Lord" after the completion of the "many days." Hos iii. 5. They enter into the bonds of the new covenant when times of refreshing will be showered on them from the presence of the Lord, and their sins and their iniquities will be no more remembered. Ezek. xx. 34-38; and Jer. xxxi. 31-34; Is. xl. 12 compared with Lev. xxvi. 42-45. The blowing of the "great trumpet" Is. xxvii. 13 is suggestive of the jubilee when "the year of my redeemed is come."

Do not skip the references given but read and examine in view of Jesus' great prophecy; and note Is. lxvi. 20 as to the gathering of Israel to their fatherland.

Matthew, Mark and Luke refer to the fig tree as the sign of approaching summer, "so likewise, when you see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is near." Read verse 34 and examine the versions. Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. All these things will be accomplished. "This generation" in the sense of the generation living at the time the prophecy was delivered does not meet the requirements of the case. To assert that "this generation" means those living at the time of the end who witness the things mentioned, would be equal to saying that those who see these signs would not pass till these same things would be fulfilled.

Some translators use the word race, and think it agrees better with the context. But this does not remove a palpable contradiction, and rather reaffirms it. The word "till" or "until" limits the passing of the race to a certain time, and then the race would "pass" or "pass away" which is directly opposed to the prophetic utterances in relation to the race. And for this reason inadmissable.

The thought of the Israelitish race becoming absorbed by the Gentile nations, and losing their national identity, is not the teaching of the Scriptures. In view of all the historic facts and documents concerning the Jewish race, and the perpetuity of the Israelitish nation, as affirmed by the prophets, I venture to give a reading that meets all the circumstances of the case, and submit the same for the inspection of those qualified to give this matter their attention, apart from preconceptions.

I take the word "parerchomai" from Young's Concordance. It is from para by erchomai, to go; to pass by, to go beyond, outrun, outstrip, surpass. To come into prominence, to come before the assembled people; to appear publicly, and the fifth signification, to pass away, to vanish.

The accuracy of the prophecy has been proven by the facts so far. The Jewish race will not pass, surpass, go beyond, outstrip the other races as a nation till these things mentioned be fulfilled. Then Israel will pass along to the head of affairs religious, political, educational and social. Then the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the prophets, will be verified. Then they will pass by all competitors in the race for national honor, glory and wealth in a land of corn and wine, and his heavens shall drop down dew, and the wealth of the nations will flow to them. They will "be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men." Mic. v. 7.

As the Lord's first-fruits nationally they will be related to the Gentile nations as the tribe of Levi was related to the congregation of Israel. They will be gathered first "sanctified unto the Lord, the first-fruits of his increase." Jer. ii. 3. Leave out the supplied words. What a harvest home this will be, when the promises to Abraham will be fulfilled and when the "knowledge of the glory of God fills the earth as the waters the sea." Consult Ezek. xxxvii. 25-27. They and their children, and their children's children forever; and my servant David their prince forever—"and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them. My tabernacle also shall be with them. Is. xvi. 5 and Amos ix. 11, 12, with Acts xv. 16.

My sanctuary, and my tabernacle will be in their midst. The priestly functions will be exercised by the Aaronic priesthood in the holy temple, and under the supervision of the royalties of the order of Melchi-zedek in the tabernacle of David. Matthew xix. 28, and Luke xxii. 28-30 and Rev. iii. 21.

The Aaronic priesthood shall instruct the people, decide all controversies which may arise between contending parties. Ezek. xliv. 24.

To return to our lesson. Compare verses 38, 39, with the conditions prevailing before the flood, Gen. vi. 5-7. "So will be the presence of the Son of Man," and compare with Luke xxi. 34-36. These are personal considerations which are being intensified at the present day as we are brought nearer and nearer to the long looked for and hourly expected coming of the Lord as a thief. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." 1 Thess. v. 2, 4. "Watch therefore, and pray always, that you may be accounted worthy to escape all these things, and to stand before the Son of man." Verse 36.

"After a long time the Lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them." Chapter xxv. 19 may be compared with Matt. xxiv. 42-51. The matters placed on record herein are personal matters which each one must see to, and consider for himself and herself. Our future destiny depends upon how we stand related to these things as bondservants of the Master who bought us, and desires our welfare; having provided the means for our enlightenment with a view to the formation of a character void of offence, and for approval in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to the gospel.

The servants having now been settled with, the good servant to be ruler over his master's goods, with the life pertaining to the age; while the evil servant is cut off from the life of the age, and takes his portion with hypocrites. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. "Then" in the order of events, we are informed further, which see accordingly.

Short Sermons. No. 3.

"For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 23.

Life and death are not the same, no more than day and night, light and darkness are one. Job says if he had died in infancy he would have lain still, slept and been quiet, and at rest with kings and counsellors. Here the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. The small and great are there. Then he tells us where the small and great are in death in a land of darkness and the shadow of death without any order and where the light is as darkness. Those who are conscious to the last seem to know that death casts a dark shadow over them. Many have borne testimony thus, "All is getting dark before me, I can't see." What a contrast between truth and error, fact and fiction, the Word of the Lord and the devils story, and yet how strange it is that men otherwise sensible, have been trying for six thousand years to mix these diverse and divergent things all up together, causing great confusion among the people. Immortal souls are not transmitted from parent to child, else they be divisible and destructible. Neither is God constantly creating such souls for all babies at birth, and taking them away at death. If so that would not be our child, then why say it is and cry about it? The Lord consoled Rachel or the mothers of those little children slain by that wicked Herod with the promise that their children shall come up again from the land of the enemy, which is death. Many are the preachers that try to console otherwise. Whose preachers are they?

The Master consoled his disciples by telling them if he went away he would come again and receive them unto himself that where he was they might be also. Blessed promise,—blessed hope. Paul consoles his brethren also in the same blessed promise, "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain shall be changed and caught away with them to meet the Lord, with the blessed assurance that we shall then ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Blessed words. Mine blessed hope.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 15, 1900. NUMBER 31.

Walter Tomlinson 11 Strikerman St

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

ANOTHER massacre of Armenians to the number of 200 by Turks and Kurds is reported as having taken place at Spaghauk in Asiatic Turkey.

COUNT Von Waldersee, a German Field Marshal has been selected as Commander-in chief of the allied forces in China, and will start for the post of duty soon.

ON Aug. 9, word came of the capture by the allies of Yang-Tsun, an important point on the line to Pekin. It is at the junction of the Pei-bo and the railroad from Pekin, and its capture insures two routes of transportation to Pekin.

DURING the maneuvers of the French fleet off Cape St. Vincent last Saturday the signals on the flag ship were mistaken and a battle-ship struck one of the crack torpedo boat destroyers, sinking her instantly, with only a dozen of the crew of 62 men saved. The rest all went down with the vessel which was one of the fastest boats of the entire fleet.

THE murdered King of Italy was buried at Rome, Aug. 9, with impressive ceremonies. The iron crown carried behind the casket is the celebrated "Iron crown" of Lombardy, constructed of iron and gold for the King of the Lombards in 691. The same crown that Napoleon Bonaparte first joined to that at Milan in 1805. It was also used at the coronation of Charlemagne.

CHINA appeals to the United States to treat with Li Hung Chang for a short truce, but the request is refused as the demands made have not been complied with by China. These demands are again made, and all talk of peace is at an end till they are acceded to. What must be done is the Chinese government must give convincing proof that the foreign ministers, and families are safe. The ministers must be put in full and free communication with their governments. The imperial authorities in Pekin must co-operate with the allied forces in securing unobstructed advances to the capital, and the consequent protection of all foreigners. This has not been done by China, and the advance is being made as fast as can be.

BROTHER Austin sends us this additional instruction for those intending to attend the Indiana Conference. The notice is on the 4th page and all interested will observe the directions given. All who can do so should be at this meeting, as it is in a new place, and it will help the brethren there to have a good number present. Those going via Tipton over the Lake Erie, stop at Scircleville, those going via Frankfort over same road stop at Hillisburg. "Those going via Kokomo over Clover Leaf, stop at Forest, and those via Frankfort over Clover Leaf stop at Michigantown. All going by rail please observe these directions to avoid disappointment on your part, and also that you may respect the request of the church which has invited the Conference."

WE have been watching for some time the movements of "Dr." John Alexander Dowie, who claims the title of "General Overseer" of the "Christian Catholic Church." He is a "divine healer" of very extravagant pretensions, and has considerable of a following. One of his schemes is the founding of a city not far from Chicago, which is to be called "Zion." On August 9th, he left Chicago for a trip abroad. He went to the train dressed in a cream colored flannel suit, attended by two lines of "Zion guards," as he feared an attempt would be made to assassinate him. He will be accompanied on his journey by Carl Stern, a former Chicago policeman, who will act as special body guard. Dowie said it was his purpose to ride on a donkey over the hills into Jerusalem on New Year's morning. In telling of the greatness of his Church, he said its properties were worth about $5,000,000. This is the result of five years' work among the "poorer" people in and about Chicago. Recent transfers in real estate indicate that this property belongs to Dr. Dowie himself. We leave each one to draw his own conclusions and make his own contrasts.

"TRUE nobility of mind is a scarce article; the friction of sin in the channel of many generations has worn it out, except where the influence of God's Word has preserved it."

TRUTH scarce ever yet carried it by vote anywhere at its first appearance. New opinions are always suspected, and usually opposed; without any other reason but because they are not already common." So says Lock.

"HE who turns away offended with the disagreements of his brethren, neglects rare opportunities of self-discipline, and of showing devotion to his Master, and saying with Jeremiah (chapters x. and xix.) 'Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.'"

BRITISH troops are to be landed at Shanghai to protect the property and lives of England's subjects there. The United States was asked to protest against this action, but refused to do so, as she may have to do the same at points where American interests may demand it.

"THERE is nothing in the world really beneficial that does not lie within the reach of an informed understanding, and well directed pursuit. There is nothing that God has judged good for us, that he has not given us the means to accomplish, both in the natural and moral world," if the word of Burke can be relied upon.

"DROUGHT and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave (sheol) those who have sinned. The womb shall forget HIM, the worm shall feed on HIM, HE shall be no more remembered," Job xxvi. 19, 20. "Like sheep THEY are laid in the grave, (sheol,) death shall feed on THEM.....THEIR beauty shall consume in the grave (sheol) from their dwelling." Psa. xlix. 14.

JOSEPH Cook asks:—"Did you ever calculate that the number of working hours in the mature part of life is only 135 thousand? Rest a moment on that thought. Between twenty-five years, which pass in the early part of life without much fruit, and the seventieth year of life, there are forty-five years of life which we call mature. Now, suppose that a man throw away in every year fifty-two days for Sundays, thirteen for illness, vacation and other interruptions; and suppose that for forty-five consecutive years he works 300 days a year—a large average—that would give a man in the mature part of life 13,500 days. Supposing that a man have health and industry enough to work ten hours in each of these 13,000 days, he will have 135,000 mature working hours. A man who is forty, however, has but 90,000 hours left; a man who is sixty has so few hours left I don't want to shock you by mentioning their number."

Are We Watching for Jesus?

"Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come; but know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up; therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

We remember reading an account of the Queen of England's first visit to Edinburgh; it said the vessel that brought her landed in the evening. It was concluded that she would not come ashore till nine in the morning, and the Lord Provost had that idea. But what happened? The Queen is famous for taking people by surprise, and she landed between six and seven in the evening. The Chief Magistrate was sadly ashamed of himself. He didn't lose his place, but he bitterly regretted that he had not been waiting to welcome her. The words of our Lord seem to indicate that even many who profess to have taken his name will not be looking for him,—and even if not excluded, they will regret not having been waiting to give him a hearty welcome; and the words "They that were ready went in," contain a fearful responsibility.

Syriac Version.

Of 1 Tim. iii. 16. "The pillar and foundation of the truth, and truly great is this mystery of righteousness, which was revealed in the flesh, and justified in the spirit, and seen by angels, and proclaimed among the Gentiles, and believed on in the world, and received up into glory."

Of 1 John v. 11, 12. "This is the testimony that God hath given to us life eternal, and this life exists in his Son. Every one that taketh hold of the Son taketh hold of life; and every one that taketh not hold of the Son hath not life."

Of Acts ii. 31. "And he foresaw, and spoke of the resurrection of Messiah, that HE was not left in the grave, neither did his body see corruption."

Justification in Seven Aspects.

Justification in seven aspects is exhibited in The Truth.

1. We are Justified by the Grace of God. That is the source of our Justification. Rom. iii. 24; Titus ii. 7.

2. We are Justified by the obedience of Christ. That is the basis on which it rests,—Rom. v. 19.

3. We are Justified by the Blood of Christ. That is the way it has been brought about, Rom. v. 9.

4. We are Justified by the Resurrection of Christ from the dead. That is its confirmation,—the proof that God has accepted the sacrifice of Christ, Rom. iv. 25.

5. We are Justified by Faith. That is the hand which lays hold of it, Rom. v. 1; Gal. iii. 8.

6. We are Justified by Works. That is the proof we give of it, James ii. 20—26.

7. It is all of God,—"Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is GOD that Justifieth, Rom. viii. 33.

Man's Glory.

"Man, collectively, puts on the appearance of strength. He founds empires, builds cities; he guards by his armies and cements by his policy; but it is written, 'All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass.' If we trace the course of civilized and powerful man through the world, we will find it covered with the wreck of his hopes; and the very monuments of his power have been converted into mockery of his weakness. His eternal cities moulder into ruins; and serpents hiss in the apartments where he planned his empires. Echo itself is startled by the foot which breaks the silence that has reigned for ages in his hall of feast and song. Columns stand in the untrodden desert, and the hut of the shepherd, or the den of the robber shelters the only residue of his palaces, and the glory which now exists is crumbling everywhere. All human glory, all fleshly pride, break in the blast and nod to their fall. The withering wind or the raging tempest shall pass over them in turn, and man shall be beneath the ruin of his proudest grandeur."

The Council of Trent.

The Council of Trent says that "The images of Christ, and of the Virgin Mother of God, and of other saints, are to be kept and continued in temples especially, and due honor and homage paid to them. Not that it should be believed there is any divinity or virtue in them for which they shall be worshipped, or that anything is to be sought from them, as was formerly done by the pagans who put their hope in idols, but because the honor shown them is referred to the prototypes whom they represent; so that we adore Christ through the image which we kiss, and before we uncover the head and kneel, and pay homage to the saints whose similitude they bear."

In this way the Council endeavors to relieve papists of the charge of idolatry. But they may define as much as they please about the distinction that exists between their views and the ideas of pagans, in the adoration of images, the acts still remain. Papists and pagans, brethren of the same great synagogue of satan, both "kiss, uncover the head and kneel" before idols. These acts of adoration before the senseless stocks they constitute themselves idolators—offer prayers of honor and homage to "statues of gold and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood, which neither see, nor hear, nor walk," which are due to God alone. The law which convicts them of idolatry is "Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them." Papists do all this. They have other gods, they make graven images, and they make likenesses of Christ, of the Virgin, and of saints, whose ghosts, they say, are in heaven above. They bow down to them and serve them in divers ways, celebrating days to their honor, making votive offerings on shrines, and saying prayers to them, and, more stupid than pagans themselves, they do honor to worm-eaten skull-bones and skins of the dead! The ghosts of their deceased patrons are the "other gods" before Jehovah whom they honor with worshipful fanaticism far above him.

We rejoice to know that Jehovah is a jealous God; and that for the honor of his name he will not permit such an outrage on truth and reason to curse the earth with its presence a single day beyond the appointed time of its destruction."

Soul in the Latin Language.

"The word for soul in the ancient Latin version of the Scriptures, is anima (in its various forms,) the root from which we get our English words animal, animate, and kindred terms. It corresponds to the Hebrew and Greek originals for soul, as well as the English word, in expressing the LIFE and CREATURE-FUNCTION of ANIMAL EXISTENCE, of which we give the following few illustrations out of hundreds:—

"Man became a living animam," Gen. ii. 7. (animam viventem.)

"All the animoe that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his loins." Gen. xlvi. 26.

One animum of five hundred, both of the persons and of the beeves, of the asses and of the sheep." Num. xxviii. 31.

"Whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that anima shall be cut off." Gen. xvii. 14.

"In whose hand is the anima of every living thing and the breath of all mankind." Job xii. 10.

"And smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the animas that were therein he utterly destroyed." Josh. x. 35.

"Every anima that eateth that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts." Lev. xvii. 15.

"Behold all animae are mine; as the anima of the father, so also the anima of the son; the anima the anima that sinneth, it shall die," Ezek. xviii. 4.

"My anima chooseth strangling and death rather than my life," Job. xvii. 15.

"Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfy his anima when he is hungry." Prov. vi. 30.

"There is an animale body and there is a spiritual body." Corpus animale and corpus spiritale." 1 Cor. xv. 44.

"The first man Adam was made a living animam." 1 Cor. xv. 45.

"Wherein were eight animae saved by water," 1 Peter iii. 20.

"And every living anima died in the sea." Rev. xvi. xvi. 3.

"Thou shalt make his animam an offering for sin." Isa. liii. 10.

"He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a animam from death." Jas. v. 20.

"The sword reacheth unto the anima." Jer. iv. 10.

"Piercing even to the dividing asunder of animae and spirit." Heb. iv. 12.

"No animâe of you shall eat blood." Lev. xvii. 12.

The Proverbs.

"The Book of Proverbs contains a little over five-hundred proverbs. This is the wisest book in the world. It is full and running over with commonsense flavored with tartness and pungency. If men of families, men of business, councillors and kings could act on the maxims of this one book it would change the whole face of the world. It would regenerate society, and sweeten life at its springs. It was written five-hundred years before the seven wise men of the East are said to have appeared,—seven hundred years before Socrates, Plato and Aristotle wrote and discussed. In speaking of Solomon as its author it would be more correct to speak of God as the author, who wrote through Solomon. We find nothing equal to it in literature; and if it were a human composition, or compilation it is strange that we of this nineteenth century, with all our learning cannot equal it. No man ever wrote a book like this. The works of the greatest of the oriental sages, and the productions of the greatest men of the East, are nowhere beside this book. There is a ring, a grip, and an indescribable something which marks it off from all other works of a similar character. The inherent force of divine truth proclaims its inspiration. It is quoted at least eighteen times in the New Testament, and alluded to still oftener, and therefore bears the divine signature. More than this, the true inwardness of human nature it exhibits corresponds with the experience of ages."

Obituary.

Died, near Colfax, Ind., of dropsy, which finally terminated in blood poison, our dear and esteemed Brother, John Boyd, born April 29, 1829, died July 26, 1900, aged 71 years, 3 months and 26 days, baptized in 1870 by E. C. Andrus, lived a consistent Christian life for thirty years. A wife, two children, grand-children and two great-grand-children, also two sisters survive him. He was the last one of four brothers. He was conscious to within four days of his death.

Six years ago, on our way from Illinois to Scircleville, Ind., we visited Uncle John (as he was familiarly called) and his wife and remarked that Sister Boyd surely could not live long as she was so feeble being partially paralyzed, but for the past two years or perhaps longer she has been so very near helpless, and was Uncle John's constant care while he was able to wait upon her, but now he sleeps in Jesus and the feeble, aged wife is left to mourn, but not without hope.

We loved Uncle John and know that if we are faithful we will meet him again, and

"No parting word shall e'er be spoken
In that bright land of flowers,
But songs of joy and peace and gladness,
Shall evermore be ours."

My father, J. S. Hatch, preached the funeral, based on 1 Thess. iv. 13–18; Job xiv. 1–15; after which in the presence of sorrowing, bereft ones he was laid away in his narrow resting place to await the summons of his blessed Master. May we be ready whether living or sleeping to hear the glorious call, that we may meet this dear Brother and our loved ones who are sleeping, is my prayer.

Your Sister in Christ,
AZORAH M. SCRIMMS.

Poetry.

Some Time.

Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgment here has spurned—
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet—
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how we at second sight were never true.

And we shall see, that, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me;
How, when we called he heeded not our cry,
Because his wisdom to the end could see:
And e'en as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if, some time, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this potion for our lips to drink;
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach his face
Oh! do not blame the loving Father so,
But bear your sorrow with obedient grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends his friend,
And that sometimes the subtle pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within, and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery find a key.

But not today. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart;
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if, through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we shall say that "God knew best."

Genesis. Chap. 2.

1. And the heavens and the earth were consummated and all the cosmos of them.

2. And God consummated on the sixth day all his works, which he had created, (the original or consul creation,) and he ceased on the seventh day from all his works which he had created.

3. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because on it he ceased from all his works which God had begun to create.

4. This is the book of the origin of the heavens and the earth, when they originated, on the day when the Lord God created the heavens and the earth.

5. And every green thing of the field before it came to be upon the earth, and all herbage of the earth before it had sprung up; for God had not rained upon the earth, and there was no man to till it.

6. And a fountain arose from out the earth and watered all the face of the earth.

7. And God moulded man dust from the earth and breathed into his face a breath of life, and man became a living soul (or lit became into a living soul)

8. And God planted a paradise in Eden at the East and placed there the man whom he had moulded.

9. And God caused still further to spring up out of the earth every tree beautiful in its season to see, and good for food; and the tree of the life in the midst of the paradise, and the tree of the knowing that one knows good and bad.

10. And a river goeth its way out of Eden to water the paradise; therefore it is divided into four branches.

11. The name of one is Phisoon; This is the one that encompasseth all the land of Euilat. There is where the gold is.

12. And the gold of that land is good; and there is the coal (or diamond) and the precious atone.

13. And the name of the second river is Geeon; this is the one that encompasseth all the land of Aithiopia.

14. And the third river is the Tigris; this is the one that goeth its way on before and opposite Assurians (Assyrians,) and the fourth river is the Euphrates.

15. And the Lord God took the man whom he had moulded and placed him in the paradise of delight to till it and to watch to guard it.

16. And the Lord God commanded Adam saying, From any tree that is in the paradise thou mayest eat for for food;

17. But from the tree of comprehension of good and bad, ye may not eat therefrom; and on the day ye do eat therefrom, ye will be condemned to death.

18. And the Lord God said, It is not good for the man to be alone. Let us create for him a responsive-helper according to his kind.

19. And God moulded still further out of the earth all the wild-beasts of the field and all the flying things of the heavens and led them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and anything that Adam called any living soul that was its name.

20. And Adam called names for all the domestic-animals, and for all the flying-things of the heavens and for all the wild-beasts of the field; but for Adam there was not found a responsive-helper like to him.

21. And God cast an ecstacy upon Adam and he slept: and he took one of his ribs and filled up flesh in place of it.

22. And God built the rib which he had taken from Adam into a woman; and led her unto Adam.

23. And Adam said, This now is bony substance of my bones and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called woman (or wife) because she was taken out of her husband.

24. For this reason a man will leave his father and his mother and will have cleaved to his wife; and they two will be for one flesh.

Comment.

In the first verse of this chapter the R. V. renders "Cosmos" by the English word "host" which is entirely inadmissible and very misleading. In the second verse the word which means "cease" is translated in the C. V. & R. V. by the English word "rest" which is still worse and utterly invalidates the argument made in Hebrews 4th and running through the whole chapter namely: starting with the first promise that God ceased from his works (creation or authorship works on the seventh day,) and that as God ceased from his planning, and that therefore all his distinctive authorship works were finished with "the founding of the Cosmos." So the perfected saints when perfected will cease each one from their works, which I interpret to mean that "the renewed man" is doing "these first works" now in this state of probation, that is forming his character and in so doing building upon the true foundation of Christ and the apostles and the prophets. "For no man can lay any other foundation than this that hath already been laid" is the substance of the general teaching of the Scriptures.

The importance of a correct translation of this word "cease" is also emphasized by Christ's teaching in the passage "My Father worketh hitherto and I am working,"—not contradicting this first statement of Genesis at all; for he is not speaking here of creative works, but of employment. The architect does not cease from all work when he has finished his "plans and specifications" but he employs agents, agencies and materials to carry out these plans and specifications. So God as it were does not cease from all employment when he has finished "the cosmos" or plan of the heavens and the earth. This fact is clearly brought out in the third verse which says "Ceased from all his works which God had begun to create." And which reads in the R. V. "rested from all his work which God had created and made." Query. What is the difference between created and made?

Notice the difference of reading also in the fourth verse. Instead of "This is the book of the origin of the heavens and the earth, etc.," the R. V. reads, "These are the generations of the heavens and the earth, etc." Query. How many generations were there? In the fifth verse the entire thought is changed by the omission of the preposition "before." In the seventh verse "formed" does not mean necessarily the same as "moulded" and that is the specific formation spoken of here. Then the R. V. says, "formed man of dust" which is not the same thought as "God moulded man dust from the earth." Again the C. V. & R. V. read "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." Text reads "breathed into his face a breath of life."

In the eighth verse "Edem" is given in all the versions as "Eden." All we know of "Edem" and "Naid" are that they were countries "At the East" adjoining each other and were "the cradle" of the human race, that "the paradise" was in "Edem" and that Kain and his descendants settled in "Naid" (not in "Nod" as the versions read.)

In the ninth verse observe the very important difference between the reading in all the versions, "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil" and "the tree of the knowing that one knows good and evil." For moral responsibility begins not with the knowledge of good and evil, but with the subjective consciousness of our personal relation to good and evil in some specific act. I may contemplate good and evil to all eternity without moral responsibility, and unless I am brought into a personal relation to it by experimental knowledge of it I can't say that I know it. It is only "the burnt child" that knows that fire will burn. In the 17th verse this tree is spoken of as "the tree of the comprehension of good and evil," an expression which is really equivalent to the first statement about which we are commenting, but briefer and confirmatory of the philosophical interpretation which I have given to the first.

We learn in the tenth verse that the source of the river that was to water the paradise was in this country of Edem and that the main river divided somewhere in the paradise into smaller rivers or estuaries the object stated being to water the paradise, which would lead us to infer that the paradise was no small "garden" or park. Observe the difference of names of these rivers as it may not be impossible yet to identify the first two as we have the last two.

In the fifteenth verse instead of "the garden of Eden" the text reads "the garden of delight." The R. V. also omits "whom he had moulded." "To till and to watch to guard it" instead of "to dress and keep it."

There is no word for "freely" in the sixteenth verse.

In the seventeeth verse, the penalty of eating of the forbidden fruit was as stated not death the same day, but condemnation to death or sentence of death and the record shows that it was over nine-hundred years before it was executed.

"Responsive-helper" more adequately translates the word for the first wife than "helpmeet" in the versions. For the same term in the Psalms and Prophets is frequently applied to God himself as a descriptive epithet. He is called our "Responsive-Helper."

In the nineteeth verse "living creature" in the C. V. & R. V. should read "living soul," "every living soul."

In the twentieth verse Adam called names for "the domestic-animals" and "for all the flying-things of the heavens" and "for the wild-beasts of the field" instead of "the man gave names to all cattle and to the fowl of the air and to every beast of the field."

In the twenty-first verse the R. V. reads "a deep sleep" where the text reads "ecstacies," Eng. "ecstasy." This does not and never did mean "a deep sleep;" but literally means "a standing out of one condition into another and is constantly used of "the prophetic ecstasy" in the Scriptures and in the classics of any craze or unusual condition of the person or persons affected, besides we have the additional statement made here that Adam "slept".

In the same verse instead of he "closed up the flesh instead thereof" should read "and filled up flesh in place of it."

In the twenty-second verse should read "built into a woman" instead of "made a woman" and "unto Adam," instead of "unto the man."

In the twenty-third verse should read "was taken out of her husband" instead of "was taken out of man."

In the twenty-fifth should read "for one flesh" instead of "one flesh." This expression is quoted by Paul in his disquisition on marriage and commented upon and explained—both expressions "into or for one flesh" and "one flesh" being used by him, showing that he understood there was a difference of meaning in the two expressions.

The balance of the 25th verse in the C. V. & R. V. is a part of the first verse of the third chapter.

In these days of "Higher Criticism" and all sorts of extravagant statements and claims which assume to be scholarly and authoritative and which make out that Moses did not write the books of Moses, and that Esaias did not write the book of Esaias etc.; it would seem well to review as we are doing some of the evidence drawn from the so-called versions upon which those statements are founded. This is and will be the object of these papers.

A Saved Sinner.

"Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things." Psa. lxxii. 18.

Digging among recollections of my early childhood, I remember one gloomy day in September 1866, when the first time in my young life I attended school at the peaceful town near which I was brought up.

As a two years old child, adopted by a Catholic lady of considerable wealth, I was surrounded by all the care which love and money could procure and hardly outgrown my long dresses when a governess undertook to introduce me to the mysteries of the alphabet, and slate and tablet, and on my 6th birthday I had mastered the first German spelling-book from cover to cover.

The laws of Austria as well as Germany prescribe that children must live and be introduced in the religion into which they are born until fourteen years of age, when they become independent in religious affairs, and I being of Jewish birth, the local Hebrew congregation was not slow to insist that I be sent to their "Chasan" who, while not being an ordained "Rabbi" is the spiritual adviser of smaller congregations, conducts the services at the synagogue and instructs the children in Hebrew. Questions of extraordinary importance are left to the decision of the nearest Rabbi, and if necessary to the Kreis—Rabbiner, (Districts—Rabbi) who is appointed by the governor.

While an increase of the tuition-fee agreed upon by my very liberal foster-mother secured me the privilege of doing at "Chasan's" dirty school-house pretty near whatever I pleased, the public school which claimed me from my 6th year was a more formidable affair—there the rod ruled supreme and the stories of cruel treatment which leaked out from time to time made me look with anxiety towards the next opening of the schools.

I must somehow have evaded attendance for a few days as I distinctly recollect my first day at school to have been a Friday when at 8 o'clock in the morning my governess delivered me to the teacher, a rough-looking man with a reputation to match his appearance.

Still the new surroundings awakened my curiosity and after a few minutes I felt at home in the schoolroom. At 11 o'clock we were dismissed until 2:00 P. M.

Re-entering the classroom at that hour I little thought how important this afternoon was to become for my future life.

Of course, my beloved foster-mother had trained me to say the morning and evening prayers as usual for children, and she as well as my governess told me many times about God; but when on that memorable Friday afternoon, the chaplain of the school, a mild-looking old priest, in one short hour gave us an outline of the life, death and glorious resurrection of our blessed Lord, he had no idea that divine grace was using him to bring a little Jewish boy on the way to salvation and when—as usual on Friday at 3 o'clock the whole class arose for the Lord's prayer I joined them with a full heart and ever afterwards I was one of the chaplain's best pupils.

Such conditions could not fail to attract Jewish attention and my Hebrew instructor was not slow to inform me that I must keep away from the priest and everything connected with Christianity, and these warnings became more urgent when soon afterwards a Rabbi made the town his permanent residence and found it his duty to take me under his spiritual care and supervision.

I was compelled to attend the services at the synagogue, but while most of the benches were empty I was relegated to a dark corner in the rear and in consequence of my Christian connections absolutely ignored and treated with contempt.

But they were badly mistaken when they expected to conquer me in that way—it only made me more determined in my resistance and finally brought me to open rebellion.

The only good result of their zeal was that I learned the Old Testament in the original language which gives a more thorough understanding than even the very best translations can impart, and thus having become familiar with the divine law of the Old Dispensation, of course I failed to see in the saints of the Catholic Church more than martyrs who had kept their faith to the end and thereby had gained a crown of righteousness, but to us could never be objects of adoration or worship.

Years passed by and I came to Prague, the ancient capital of Bohemia, the seat of some of the oldest and best German High Schools.

There, while attending a preparatory college the rationalistic tendencies that prevailed during the early seventies influenced me to a very great extent and not until I had graduated into higher studies did I become aware of my dangerous condition.

But how hard it was to extricate myself from all that tangled mass of self-constructed righteousness, disguised atheism and mis-construed truth!

"Lord, give me light or take me away," was my cry, and after an almost superhuman effort my prayers were granted. More glorious than ever I beheld Jesus, my blessed Redeemer, who shed his precious blood for me; more powerful could I feel the guidance of his Holy Spirit.

Living in a Catholic country and a pronounced anti-Semetic feeling permeating the districts where Protestants were more numerous, I could not take decided steps at that time and it was not until 1889, in London, long after I had begun energetic evangelistic work that my formal baptism took place. Shortly afterwards I came to the United States.

Looking backwards over my past life, I see many shortcomings, am aware of my faults and imperfections and know that my efforts for my Master's glory have not always deserved to be rewarded by a "well done."

Throwing myself upon his mercy and pleading for his forgiveness, it is my sincere aim to do better in the future than I have done in the past; and that God may help me in carrying out this resolve, is the prayer of your faithful brother in Christ,

Gustave S. Zingler.

I am well pleased to be able to introduce to the readers of The Restitution, our dear Jewish Brother, who has of late been reading our paper, and finding help and comfort therein. He says "The Lord is exceedingly merciful in giving him light from above every day; more knowledge of his truth and deeper insight into his plans." And he feels that "Such abundance of spiritual gifts have not been bestowed for his personal benefit only, but that God wants him to proclaim the message far and wide."

For Our Children.

The Boy and the Sparrow.

Once a sweet boy sat and swung on a limb;
On the ground stood a sparrow-bird, looking at him.

Now the boy he was good, but the sparrow was bad,
So it shied a big stone at the head of the lad,
And it killed the poor boy; and the sparrow was glad.

Then the little boy's mother flew over the trees,
"Tell me, whom is my little boy, sparrow-bird, please?"
"He is safe in my pocket," the sparrow-bird said;
And another stone shied at the fond mother's head,
And she fell at the feet of the wicked bird, dead.

You imagine, no doubt, that the tale I have mixed;
But it wasn't by me that the story was fixed.
'Twas a dream a boy had after killing a bird;
And he dreamed it so loud that I heard every word,
And I jotted it down as it really occurred.

The Story of Israel. No. 97.

BALAK AND BALAAM.

Where is the lesson now? It was the last of April when we met before. I am sure that my little folks must have forgotten by this time.

"No indeed Auntie. It is the 24th of Numbers."

You are right Herbie. If you are only nine years old, you have a good memory, and that shows that you are interested in our Bible studies. But what is the chapter about Carrie?

"About Balaam. He did not go to seek for enchantments as before, but set his face toward the wilderness and saw Israel abiding in his tents according to their tribes, and the spirit of God came upon him."

Do you think his words were prophecies?

"I had not thought about that; they must have been."

What do you think Edna?

"I think they were, for see, he says, 'his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted. God brought him forth out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn; he shall eat up the nations, his enemies, and shall break their bones and pierce them through with his arrows. He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion who shall stir him up? Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee."

I think you are right, Edna. That Israel's seed was to be in many waters proves that the time referred to was not that in which they would be sojourners in the land of Canaan, but a future time when they would be spread abroad over all the earth. The King that is to be higher than Agag is Jesus, he is to exalt the kingdom of Israel.

Israel did not have the strength of an unicorn when he conquered Canaan. He was strong, but he was not a great lion, he did not "eat up the natives," but left many of the Canaanites unconquered, and was finally conquered himself and carried away captive.

How angry Balak was at Balaam. 'Three times had his enemies been blessed, when he expected them to be cursed.

He bade him go home to his place. But Balaam had not finished his prophecy; he must tell what this people would do to Balak's people "in the latter days." A Star was to come out of Jacob and a sceptre was to rise out of Israel that would smite the corners of Moab and destroy all the children of Sheth. Edom was to be a possession for his enemies. Israel was to do valiantly. From Jacob was to come he that would have the dominion, and not from Moab. Amelek and the Kenites and Ashur, or Assyria were to perish as nations.

"And I know who that Star is. I know who is to have the 'sceptre and the dominion from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth.' It is Jesus."

Yes, Herbie, and he is making preparations to take that dominion now.

"Is that why the nations are fighting in Africa and China and everywhere?"

Yes Carrie, and these great wars will go on until all people are willing to submit to him, and to walk in his ways. The dear Lord is working just now. He is in a hurry to have the kingdom come that all the world may be blessed. The gold, the silver, the brass and the iron kingdoms must all fall to pieces together, and how rapidly they are falling. But Auntie is tired.

Our next lesson will be the 25th of Numbers.

Auntie Winch.

Apron Strings.

"I promised my mother I would be home at six o'clock."

"But what harm will an hour or more do?"

"It will make my mother worry, and I shall break my word."

"Before I'd be tied to a woman's apron strings."

"My mother doesn't wear aprons," said the first speaker, with a laugh "except in the kitchen sometimes, and I don't know as I ever noticed any strings."

"You know what I mean. Can't you stay and see the game finished?"

"I could stay, but I will not. I made a promise to my mother, and I am going to keep it."

"Good boy!" said a hoarse voice just back of the two boys.

They turned to see an old man poorly clad and very feeble.

"Abraham Lincoln once told a young man," the stranger resumed, "to cut the acquaintance of every person who talked slightingly of his mother's apron-strings, and it is a very safe thing to do, as I know from experience. It was what brought me to disgrace, for I was ashamed not to do as other boys did, and when they made fun of mother I laughed too—God forgive me! There came a time when it was too late"—and now there were tears in the old eyes—"when I would gladly have been made a prisoner, tied by those same apron-strings, in a dark room with bread and water for my fare. Always keep your engagement with your mother. Never disappoint her if you can possibly help it, and when advised to cut loose from her apron-strings, cut the adviser, and take a tighter clutch of the apron-strings. This will bring joy and long life to your mother, the best friend you have in the world, and will insure you a noble future, for it is impossible for a good son to be a bad man."

It was an excellent sign that both said "Thank you" to the conclusion of the stranger's lecture, and they left the ball-grounds together, silent and thoughtful. At last the apron-critic remarked with a deep-drawn sigh:

"That old man has made me gooseflesh all over."

"Oh, Dick," said his companion, "just think what lovely mothers we have both got."

"Yes; and if anything were to happen to them, and we hadn't done right! You'll never hear apron-strings out of my mouth again."—Harper's Young People.

Conferences.

The fourth Annual Conference of the Church of God for Missouri and Kansas will be held in Chelsea Park, Kansas City, Kansas, from Sept. 1st to 10th, 1900. Our tent will be pitched on the ground and meeting begun one week in advance, Aug. 26th, and the business of the Conference will be called at 10 o'clock on the morning of Sept. 1.

A number of speaking brethren from abroad will be in attendance. A general gathering of brethren is desired and expected. A sufficient number of small living tents will be pitched to accommodate all who may attend. Let all come prepared with bedding sufficient for their own use. Board at a very small figure not to exceed 25 to 30 cents per day will be furnished on the ground. A daily progamme will be rendered, which in addition to the business will consist of Bible class work, reading of essays and addresses on set topics.

To reach Chelsea Park from union depot, take a Kansas City, Kansas, street car and transfer at Minnesota Ave. and Sixth Street to a Chelsea Park car, and run to the end of the line where our tents will befound. Let all parties desiring tents plenso address us at once at Prescott, Kan., till Aug. 22nd, and after that date to Kansas City, Kansas; so we may know how many tents to secure and erect on the ground. The tents will cost $1.75 for ten days. The place of meeting this year is central and easy of access from all points in this territory. Brothers and sisters, we need your help, and it will do you good to attend the meeting, so come and assist in making this the best Conference we have ever held.

A. W. Darby, Sec.

The thirteenth Annual Conference of the Church of God in Christ Jesus for the State of Iowa will be held on the new campground near Cedar River Park at Waterloo, Iowa, Aug. 18 to 27, 1900.

The business of the Conference will be transacted on Saturday Aug. 18. We especially desire to have all the members present, as important matters relative to the campground and Conference work will be settled on that day, so come on Friday, Aug. 17, so as to be ready for the work early in the day.

Conference will furnish tents for all, but bring the bedding and dishes you may need. Board 10 cents a meal or 25 cents per day.

Leave your baggage at the depot where you arrive. We will have it brought to camp. Take street car for Cedar River Park, or Chautauqua.

Those coming on Chicago and Great Western R. R., stop at East Waterloo.

In many respects this will be the most important conference we ever held, and all should come. A cordial invitation is extended to those of the faith in other States, and we assure you a good time and a hearty welcome. Heb. x. 24, 25.

A. J. Eychaner, Pres.
Sadie Clark, Sec.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith will convene at or near Scircleville, Clinton Co., Thursday, Sept. 6, 1900, at 7:00 P. M. and continue over the following Sunday. We have been informed that the brethren there are generally anxious to have the conference meeting held there and that ample arrangements will be made to care for all who desire to attend from a distance.

We hope that as many as can will arrange to attend and that much good may result. This is the time for the election of officers for the following year and there should be a good delegate representation.

The people will be met at Hillsburg, Scircleville and Michigantown, should any come to the latter place. Those coming from the east and south come to Scircleville via Tipton, those from north and west, to Hillsburg via Frankfort.

F. L. Austin, Pres.
A. C. Roberts, Sec.

The Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus will convene at Oregon, Ill., Friday Aug. 31st, 1900 and continue over Sunday, September 2nd. Let all attend who can. Brother S. J. Lindsay makes a special request that all who anticipate attending to write to him so that he can provide suitable accommodations for them. Churches in the state are especially requested to send delegates and all brothers and sisters both within the state and outside are cordially invited to be present. Brother and Sister B. W. Woodward, Brethren L. E. Connor, A. J. Eychaner, D. L. Hudler and Samuel Wilson are expected to be present, so that a good season of refreshing is assured.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

Poetry.

When Trouble Comes.

When trouble comes, don't let despair
Add to the burden you must bear,
But keep up heart, and smiling, say:
"The darkest cloud must pass away."

Don't sit and brood o'er things gone wrong.
But sing a helpful little song,
Or whistle something light and gay,
And scatter half your care away.

The man who sings when trouble's here,
From trouble has not much to fear,
Since it will never tarry long
When stout heart meets it with a song.

Then don't forget, when things go wrong,
To try the magic of a song;
For cheerful heart and smiling face
Bring sunshine to the shadiest place.

Genesis. Chap. 3.

1. And the two were naked, both Adam and his wife, and they were not ashamed. Now the serpent was the most thoughtful of all the wild beasts upon the earth, which the Lord God had created. And the serpent said unto the woman, What is it God hath said, that ye shall not eat from every tree of the paradise?

2. And the woman said unto the serpent, From the fruit of the wood of the paradise we are eating.

3. But from the fruit of the tree that is in the midst of the paradise, God said, Ye shall not eat therefrom, nor shall ye touch it, that ye may not be condemned to die.

4. And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye will not be condemned to die;

5. For God knoweth that on the day when ye eat therefrom, your eyes will have been opened, and ye will be gods as it were, comprehending good and bad.

6. And the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasing to see with the eyes and beautiful in its season to contemplate and taking from the fruit thereof she ate, and gave to her husband with her and they ate.

7. And the eyes of the two were opened, and they comprehended that they were naked; and they stitched together fig-leaves and made for themselves girdles.

8. And they heard the voice of the Lord God as he was walking in the paradise in the afternoon; and both Adam and his wife hid themselves from the face of the Lord God in the midst of the woods of the paradise.

9. And the Lord God called Adam and said unto him, Where art thou?

10. And he said unto him, I heard thy voice as thou wast walking in the paradise, and I was afraid, because I was naked, and I hid myself.

11. And God said unto him, Who told thee that thou wast naked, unless thou hast eaten from the fruit of the tree, from which alone I commanded thee not to eat?

12. And Adam said, The wife whom thou gavest to me, she gave to me from the tree and I ate.

13. And the Lord said unto the woman, Why didst thou do this? And the woman said, The serpent deceived me and I ate.

14. And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, accursed art thou from all the domestic-animals and from all the wild-beasts that are upon the earth. Upon thy breast and thy belly shalt thou go thy way and earth shalt thou eat all the days of thy life.

15. And I shall put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. He will be on his guard against thy head, and thou wilt be on thy guard against his heel.

16. And to the woman He said, I shall multiply thy sorrows and thy sighing; In sorrow wilt thou bring forth off-spring, and thy turning-away wilt be unto thy husband, and he will rule over thee as lord.

17. And unto Adam he said, Because thou didst hearken unto the voice of thy wife and didst eat from the tree of which I alone commanded that thou shouldst not eat, accursed is the earth in thy works (of employment;) In sorrow shalt thou eat it all the days of thy life.

18. Thistles and thorns will it cause to spring up for thee, and thou shalt eat the herbage of the field.

19. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread until thou shalt returned to the earth out of which thou wast taken. Because earth thou art and into earth shalt thou return.

20. And Adam called the name of his wife Zooee (long "o" and long "e" this means) because she was the mother of all the living.

21. And the Lord God made for Adam and his wife tunics of skins and clothed them (with these under-garments.)

22. And God said, Lo Adam hath become one of us as it were to comprehend good and bad. And now he must not perchance stretch forth his hand and take from the tree of the life and live forever.

23. And the Lord God sent him forth from the paradise of delight to till the earth out of which he had been taken.

24. And he cast Adam out and caused him to dwell over opposite (or away from the immediate proximity to) the paradise of delight, and arrayed the flaming-sword that turned to guard the way to the tree of life.

COMMENT.

In the first verse "the most thoughtful of all" instead of "more subtil than any"—"the wild-beasts upon the earth" instead of "any beast of the field". R. V. "We are eating" instead of "we may eat". "Be condemned to die" instead of "lest ye die"—these last two in the 3rd verse.

4th verse, "will not" instead of "shall not."

5th verse "will" instead of shall also. "Comprehending good and bad" instead of "knowing."

6th verse. "And beautiful in its season to contemplate" instead of "to be desired to make one wise."

7th verse. "Comprehended" instead of "knew." They must have known before that they were "naked" but did not comprehend what it meant to be naked. "Girdles" instead of "aprons."

8th verse "afternoon" instead of "cool of the day."

9th verse "Adam" instead of "the man."

11th verse, "God" instead of "he" "unless" omitted and the form of the statement thus changed.

14th verse. Instead of "above all cattle and above every beast of the field," reads "from all the domestic-animals and from all the wild-beasts that are upon the earth" instead of "upon thy belly" reads "upon thy breast and thy belly" which is strictly true and the other is not. Wrong use of "will" and "shall" in the 15th verse. Instead of "bruise" reads "be on his guard against" a very important error in its relation to later fact and prophecy.

No word for "conception" in the 16th verse and "sighing" omitted in the C. V. & R. V. and the word "apostrophe" which means "turning away from" translated in R. V. "desire." "Rule" also instead of "rule as lord." This distinction recognized later,—for instance "Sarah calling him (Habsam her husband) lord." This not unimportant in the burning question now being agitated the world over, namely—Is Equality of sex in the marriage relation taught in the Bible?

In the 17th verse "alone" omitted and instead of "for thy sake" reads "in thy works" and instead of "in toil" reads "in sorrow."

In the 18th verse instead of "thorns also and thistles" "thistles and thorns" "herbage" better than "herb" also. The word is the general term for "grass."

In the 19th verse "thy bread" instead of "bread," also "earth thou art" "instead of "dust thou art."

In the 20th verse "Adam" instead of "the man" and "Zooee" instead of "Eve."

In the 21st verse reads "tunics" (an under-garment) instead of "coats" (outer-garments.)

In the 22nd verse reads "one of us as it were" instead of "as one of us"—reads "the tree of the life" instead of "the tree of life."

In the 23rd verse no word for "therefore."—The verse introduced by "and." "Paradise of delight" instead of "the garden of Eden."

In the 24th verse reads "east out" instead of "drove out." "And caused him to dwell over opposite the paradise of delight" omitted entirely in the R. V.—"the flaming sword" changed also to "the flames of a sword." "Every way" not in the text. Should read "to guard the way to" instead of "to keep the way of."

God's Gracious Plan.—No 8.

A Bible summary in brief, of God's merciful arrangement for the salvation of fallen man, through Christ Jesus as Mediator, after 50 years of private study for Bible truth.

After Israel shall have received double for all their transgressions as the prophets have said, and their eyes that God has shut have been opened, John ii. 40, and their blindness shall have passed away, Rom. xi. 25, 26, then they will loathe themselves for their iniquity and they shall remember their abominations and be ashamed, and fear the Lord, and he will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and a great company shall return, and they shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them by rivers of water, wherein they shall not stumble, for I am a father to Israel. In Matt. xxiii. Christ gives the pharisaical Jews the most severe berating probably that ever was put on record, and then tells them they should not see him again till ye shall say blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, and after they had hung him on the cross, Christ asked his Father to forgive them, for they knew not what they did, showing they had not committed the sin which is unto death, because of their blindness, for had they known they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. Here in contrast is the greatest manifestation of love and seemingly of hatred the world ever saw, and yet the hatred is forgiven because they were still in darkness and blindness as to Christ's Messiahship, and will be till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, believing him to be an illegitimate child and usurper, and then in the resurrection state, Ezek. xxxvii: Zech. xii. 10, 13. I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son, and be in bitterness for him as one is in bitterness for his first-born. In that day a fountain is opened to David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and uncleanness.

When they look upon him they crucified, in their resurrected state, with their blindness taken away, they at once see their evil doings and mourn for their sins, and their heart of stone is taken away and they are given a new heart and a new spirit.

God does not pour the spirit of grace on those who have sinned willfully after they have had a knowledge of the truth, for they have crucified the Son of God afresh, and it is impossible to renew them again to repentance, for such have committed the unpardonable sin.

Paul was born out of due time—too soon—being an abortive. His conversion by the appearing of Christ in his brightness, was a figure of the future enlightenment and conversion of the benighted world. Those pharisees Christ so berated in Matt. xxiii. and said they should not see him again till they should call him blessed, who was the means of his crucifixion, and for whom he prayed, literally fulfill Christ's prediction in the prophecy quoted when they look on him whom they pierced. Thus we see God's oath that all nations should be blessed will have a most literal fulfillment, and the fact of its being established by his oath, should put an end to all strife and the setting aside of glorious, unconditional, world-wide prophecies to sustain a theory.

God says by Isa. xxix. When Jacob sees his children, the work of mine hands in the midst of him, they that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine. In a little while Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field. In that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord. The ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him.

Christ's prayer John xvii. is an explanatory indorsement of the parent promise, showing the literality of its fulfillment. He prays not for the world till all the elect seed the Father had given him should be made one, as he and his Father are one,—a perfected body, he the head, and they the body; then he includes the world in his prayer, says it is that the world may believe, putting the event in the future age.

Paul in Rom. viii. in other language duplicates the gospel promise to Abraham, saying, The creature (the blinded world) waiteth for the manifestation (the resurrection) of the sons of God (the elect seed.) The creature was made subject to vanity (corruption) not willingly (on their part) but by reason of him who (in his purpose) hath subjected them in hope, because the creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, (the curse) into the glorious liberty of the children of God (the gospel.) The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, (the curse on them all.) Not only they (groan) but we ourselves (the seed) that have the first-fruits of the spirit groan, waiting for the adoption, to-wit the redemption of the body. Here the whole creation are made subject to death in hope, concerning which hope the world at large have been left in darkness, but after the elect seed have been delivered from death, then the groaning creation are delivered into the glorious liberty of accepting salvation when enlightened. Such a resurrection clearly shows they are not beyond the reach of mercy and the blessing promised all nations.

The free-woman represents Isaac, and are counted for the seed and children of promise. It was said of Esau and Jacob before they were born neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works but of him that calleth that the elder should serve the younger, pre-figuring the future ruling and serving. The free-woman represents the elect seed, —the few,—the little flock that set with Christ on his throne, and are made priests and kings to rule and judge the world as joint-heirs with Christ, while the bond-woman's son represents the children of the flesh,—the many,—the nations,—the world and Israel that was cast off, and lost the heirship promised them, are also counted in with the nations, kindreds and tongues that are to serve and obey and be ruled over as subjects of the kingdom.

Christ limits the treading down of Jerusalem to the end of Gentile time, Luke xxi. 24, Behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy. The voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her. This shows it has been once a city of weeping. Isa. lxv. Look upon Zion the city of our solemnities. Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall never be taken down. Isa. xxxiii. When rebuilt it stands forever.

Here Jerusalem is called both Zion and tabernacle. Peter calls it a tabernacle, Acts xv. I (Christ) will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called.

Motive for the Serving of God.

The following is cut from the Chicago (Daily) Times-Herald, and is suggestive of the motive used in popular theology to induce people to serve God:

"When preachers preached hell fire
The men would stay away.
For they had no desire
To wriggle and perspire
All through the holy day—
They didn't care to know
Of horrors down below—
Such preaching left them so
Unstrung, they used to say.

The doctrine of damnation
Is seldom preached to-day;
A higher revelation
Has brought obliteration
To the devil, so they say—
Yet the men decline to go;
What's the use, they want to know,
Since the fires down below
Have been smothered anyway?"

How different is the Divine motive as revealed in God's Holy Book? We find it there recorded that the mainspring of such service is love, and not a cowardly fear of torment. Our God is not a cruel tyrant, who takes pleasure in the torment of sinners. "Beloved let us love one another; for love is of God; and every one that loveth, is begotten of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love."

Love never springs from slavish fear as its root. The whole plan of this Bible method of salvation, is conceived and born of love.

It is no wonder that popular theology presents false motives for God's service seeing their hope and faith is as false as their motives. Their whole system is false from beginning to end.

Tell me, how can the children of the light have fellowship with such darkness? Are they our brethren in Christ? By no means. Let us be consistent, and not only know our place, but keep it, having our eyes constantly fixed on the blessed hope.

Building the Church.

I have read somewhere, of how some devout Christians had met for worship at the plain little school-house and how they lingered after service, wondering if they could ever build a house to hold meetings in. It was not thought possible and no plans were made, but the next day a little boy came with a few brick and when asked "What they were for," he said, "For the new meeting-house, we are going to build."

This was the starting point. Others brought bricks, some gave money and some timber, and all worked with a will, till a neat church stood complete on the village square.

That is the way to do things. Set about them in faith. Bring in the brick, pay over the money, wheel the mortar, work with earnest hands.

"For the church we are going to build." It is this child-like faith that we want. There is too much doubting, there are too many "I can't's."

We can! We will! We can pay off the indebtedness. We can send out evangelists. We can rescue orphans. We can send the Bible to the Jew.

It is good to have the privilege. We are happy in that God has chosen us for this blessed work. We have glorious opportunities. No people have ever had such opportunities before. Let us seize them as they fly. "The night cometh when no man can work." How much will you give this year for God? What belongs to him? Thank-offerings beside? Free-will offerings?

What if it is hard times? What if there has no wheat crop been grown? Why has there not? Why has the fly been sent? Why has the frosts of spring destroyed the farmer's hopes? Because God has been robbed of his own.

"Return unto me and I will return unto you saith the Lord of hosts." The returning is to be in this very thing of tithes and offerings. We are "cursed with a curse" as a nation, because we have robbed God.

When we bring all the tithes into the storehouse, he will "rebuke the devourer for our sakes and he shall not destroy the fruits of our ground, neither shall our vines cast their fruit before the time in the field."

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Editor Restitution:

I left home on the 12th of August for Pleasanton, Kan., where Brothers Myers and Darby were with the tent. I spoke in the tent on Thursday and Friday evenings. Had a good meeting. From here I went to Bosworth, Mo. On Sunday I preached in the Fairview Schoolhouse, near Brother Samuel Hoffmans. Was met with a kind greeting, and a house well filled with anxious listeners. Preached here until Friday, the 20th. While here I baptized two sisters into Christ. On the 21st I spoke in the Christian Church in Bosworth. I left another appointment at this place for Sept. 15th. Scattered ones, take notice and come to our meeting at Bosworth and let us do all the good we can and as little harm. Let us prepare for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Truly as ever in hope of life, when Jesus comes.

JOHN FOORE.

To the Brethren who love the Lord Jesus Christ, in Canada:

Who will be willing to form an association in Canada for the defence and spread of the truth? "In union there is strength." The time is short till the Master will come when we will have to give an account us to how we have used our talents. Will all those who are anxious to work in the Master's service communicate with me, stating what best can be done in their neighborhood to interest people in the truth. Address me at 42 Gloucester St., Toronto, Canada.

DR. A. WALLACE MASON.

Let no one think that a thousand dollar check in favor of the Conference treasurer, from some one, or more, who might see fit to draw the same, would so startle the Conference as to render it inactive. If you wish you may try it and we will report results.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPT. 5, 1900.

We need what is due us on subscriptions, and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

GIVE heed to the call made by Bro. Austin, and attend the Conference.

IF we are for the truth, we cannot encamp with the enemy, and co-operate with them.

THE Hebrew word meth and translated death, in the Old Testament, signifies to fail, to faint. Death is consequently a failure or cessation of life, —the cessation of the life of an earthly body.

NO fountain pours forth at the same mouth sweet water and bitter. What matters professions of faith in the gospel of the kingdom if that faith do not develop righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit?"

"THE seal of God in the forehead is to be impressed in the understanding and affections with the Divine mind or teachings as expressed by Jesus and the apostles, and all the prophets who previously arose in Israel." Rom. vii. 3; ix. 4.

THE burden of Jehovah's message to the world is an invitation to God's kingdom and glory. It was first sent to the Jews, but a sufficient number did not accept it, to answer the necessities of the kingdom; and, therefore, the invitation was graciously extended to people of other nations.

AN article on the Swedish situation declares the Czar meditates a conflict with that country. It is set forth that the Russian military schools are studying Swedish and Norwegian territory, and special stress is laid on the examination of the wars between Sweden and Russia, and procuring of military maps.

IN the Chicago Tribune of Sept. 2, is a map with statements compiled concerning Jerusalem in the light of the Zionist movement. It shows Jerusalem as the center of the earth, and states that if the "dream of the Zionists" could be realized that 11000000 Jews would be settled in the Holy land. Also that four lines of railroad pierce that country, and the "quiet valleys echo the hooting of the locomotive whistle."

IT is reported that Lord Roberts has issued a proclamation formally annexing the Transvaal to the dominion of the British crown. Presidents Kruger and Steyn are hastening away, the English have possession of the territory to the Portugese frontier, and it is the general belief that the war is about over, though there may be raiding that will require the presence of a strong force. One thing is favorable for peace—the time of year is come for planting, and the Boers will have to go to work raising crops, and cannot fight and work at the same time.

ON Aug. 27, Sister Hugh W. Barnhill, with her youngest son, Earl, left Plymouth to go to Waterville, Wash., where her husband and another son have been for some months. They expect to make their future home in that country, and while we regret losing them from our local Church and Sunday School, yet we trust their good words and deeds among those left behind will not be lost. To the new friends whom they will meet we recommend them as conscientious, God-fearing people, who can be depended on always to do their part in the service of the Master. Farewell, and may God's blessing attend you.

THE equivalent of the words "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him," 1 John iv. 15, will be found in the words of the previous verse, "he that loveth not his brother abideth in death." That is, as we understand it, a man's continuance in a brother-hating, and therefore murderous state of mind will at last lose him the kingdom, and all possibility of eternal life. Paul classes murder with envy, heresy and drunkenness, as representing states of mind that exclude from the kingdom unless repented of. "The sin unto death" is the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit illustrated in the Jewish attribution of the wonderful works which Christ did, to the mythical power of Beelzebub.

SAID Jesus—"O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken!" Is there an intimation here that they had an understanding of the truth and gave intellectual assent to it, but that heart-belief was wanting? Or, were they so thoughtless and inconsiderate as to pay no attention to matters relating to their everlasting interests? In either case it would be equally fatal. Now, as then, men and women fritter away time and talents and means for things that perish with the using, to the neglect of the incorruptible crown offered without money or without price. Our heart goes out in love and sympathy to our blessed Lord as we read his sorrowful lament, —"Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." How often are we turned away from when out of the cup of salvation we offer water of life!

IN China matters are very much mixed. After getting possession of Pekin the question of restoring order and establishing a government, came up for consideration. There being no Chinese government in view there is no one to treat with who is vested with authority. The Czar has proposed to the powers that all foreigners withdraw from Pekin and allow the Chinese to restore order and set up a government, Li Hung Chang to be the one to deal with. This proposition seemed to be so fair it met with favor from the United States; but the other powers did not regard it as feasable, and the concert of action is again broken. Jealousy makes them suspicious that the Czar is playing a double part. His troops are still pressing on and occupying different points in Manchuria, and he now has well nigh the entire province occupied. It is not at all likely if the foreigners leave Pekin and establish themselves at Tsin Tsin pending final settlement of the question, that Russia will withdraw her forces from Manchuria. So that England and Japan are both quite likely to oppose the yielding of a point that gives Russia the advantage. American officials are willing to take Russia as acting honorably, but judging by her history, we cannot help being of the opinion that if Russia aids China it will be only at China's expense finally. It is well to remember that the Northern Bear never befriends any one—except for a consideration. Some of the powers have learned this, but the United States is slow to realize it. We can only watch the development of affairs, and see the unfolding of the plan of God.

Conscience.

"Conscience has furnished a theme for discussion by thousands from different points of view—philosophers, theologians, scholastics, rationalists, skeptics and evolutionists have attempted to define it, and have given definitions as widely different as their schools of belief or thought. Its relation to the mind has constituted the chief ground of dispute. Many seem to teach that conscience represents a faculty in man that discerns the right or wrong of actions. We do not think that conscience holds any such office. We do not understand that conscience is a knowing faculty at all, and therefore it cannot discern the right or the wrong of actions. It might be objected here that the Scriptures use the word as if we were expected to obey it, and that that fact must militate against our position. We do not think so.

We hold that the conscience incites one to do what is believed to be right. A person being taught that such and such things are right, and that such and such things are wrong, conscience bids that person to do what is believed to be right, and not to do what is believed to be wrong. But all must allow that a person may be wrongly educated, and therefore may believe that wrong is right, and right is wrong.

Conscience, as we understand it, takes its cue from the intellect and urges one to do what he has been told is right; if that be correct, all can see that conscience of itself, is far from being a safe guide for our conduct. Our readers will be conversant with the fact that the same Paul who lived in all good conscience before God while persecuting the saints of God, also lived in all good conscience before God a little later, as one of the class which he labored night and day to exterminate; and not only that, but labored more than any one else to call others to saintship. In a word the same conscience impelled him to pursue two opposite courses of conduct. His intellect having been enlightened he discovered that he had been making a grand mistake, and this led him to cry out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Being told what to do, he at once did it.

The lesson for us, in view of this example is, to be sure, as children of adoption—son and daughters of the Lord God Almighty to ascertain what the will of the Lord is, and what the commandments of Jesus are, and then we can give conscience full play, and our acceptance will be assured.

Conscientiousness enables those in whom it is strongly developed, to be just in judging of the conduct, opinions and talents of others. They are scrupulous in the performance of promises; and when they make mistakes that subject them to criticism, they are as ready to condemn themselves as others, who may be guilty of similar errors. Great crimes have grown out of good intentions. Even veneration for God and the Bible have prompted wrong doing and brought people to greater crimes than a mistaken sense of duty. Morbidly excited religious feelings have frequently led to murder. And the most sanguinary pages of history are those that record the religious wars of nations, and the persecutions of religious zealots.

At first thought we would be inclined to ascribe downright insanity to Spanish inquisitors, and English authorities who counselled the horrible outrages against the Scottish covenanters, but they were not insane in the proper sense, but, fired with zeal in behalf of their faith, it was deemed commendable by vast numbers of people.

Brothers and Sisters, in the Anointed One, let us praise and magnify the Lord for having found the Key of truth, which enables us to regulate and balance the faculty under consideration,—and then praise and magnify him more, by the diligent use of it." Amen.

"Antipas" vs "Satan."

"Dear Brother Joblin:

I would be greatly obliged to you if you could find time to tell us through THE RESTITUTION what the Word "Antipas" means, and also what sort of a Satan it was that lived at Pergamos in the apostle John's day? Rev. ii. 3." J. S.

In reply to the above we would say, —We are obliged to get our ideas from the words used, and the connection in which they occur; and, proceeding upon that principle, we find that Antipas means "against all." This was the appropriate name of one who stood as a faithful witness for God till it cost him his life,—he was faithful unto death, and is entitled to the promised crown of life. Why he was singled out from the church at Pergamos which never denied the faith or let go the name they had taken, does not appear; but we think it safe to conclude that it was intended to strike terror into the hearts of that community, by way of warning of a like fate.

It will be seen by the 9th verse that there existed in those early days even, some who called themselves Jews, but were not. This is not said of natural descendants of Abraham.

Natural children of that patriarch could be nothing else but natural children of him. But they were not what Paul calls Jews inwardly, (Rom. ii. 29,) they were not Abraham's seed faithwise by the putting on of Christ, Gal. iii. 29, and hence became a bitter opposer of those who witnessed for God faithfully; they were the adversaries of those who stood for the truth as it is in Jesus. Their synagogue was a synagogue of adversaries, and that furnishes the meaning of the word satan.

The words "my faithful witness," show that those composing the synagogue of satan, and saying they were Jews, had partly accepted the gospel of Christ and considered themselves Christian, but they did not witness faithfully; and the Spirit regarded them as satans,—i. e., adversaries, and when the pagans pressed them hard they saved their lives by denying the faith.

No one at all intelligent in the truth will deny that the adversaries of apostolic times are abundantly represented in ours. We claim to be the antipas Christians of the last days; we are really against all human inventions that to any degree detract from, or dispense with faith in the covenants of promise to the fathers of the Hebrew nation. Let us beware of the blinding, bewildering fog that is palmed off for gospel on our every hand. As surely as we have the Word of the Spirit, only the gospel of the Anointed Jesus has power to save. "Sincerity will save," is never found in the book of God.

Paul After the Flesh and After the Spirit.

After the flesh Paul could say,—"In me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." As regards his knowledge of the law, and his honorable character and ancestry as a Jew, Paul was "not a whit behind the very chiefest apostle." But he only referred to his standing in Moses when compelled by boastful detractors whose sole glorying was after the flesh. In all things constituting natural advantage Paul had equal ground for boasting with any, if he had been so-minded. That it was far from his mind, apart from the compulsory circumstances referred to, is evidenced by his parenthetical interlarding of such references with the exclamations, "I speak foolishly, "I speak as a fool." The Paul he glorified in was not the flesh-proud Paul of Pharisaic genealogy, but the patter-Paul who had obtained mercy of the Lord, and such abundant revelations—"of such an one," says he, "I will glory."

Change of Location.

The friends will please make a note of the change of address of Brother J. S. Hatch. He has moved from this state to Tustin, Orange Co. California where letters should be addressed. We commend our Bro. Hatch to the brethren on the Pacific Coast, and add if any desire his labors in the gospel field he is ready to answer calls.

IT is estimated that the cost of sending ships to China, with the land forces, and all expenses of maintaining them there, will reach over $15,000,000.

Song of Praise.

Our bountiful Father thy name we will praise,
For mercies and blessings that hallow our days.
We'll talk of thy love in the gift of thy Son,
And the life-giving hope through the crucified One.

We'll sing of the Savior who now is above,
And joy in his mercy and goodness and love.
We'll speak of the hope to the faithful he gave,
And how he the chiefest of sinners can save.

We'll sing of his word and his spirit to bless,
And guide in the way of salvation and peace.
We'll talk of his power to save and restore,
And cleanse from all sin, and give life evermore.

We'll sing of the spirit of love he has given,
To strengthen and cheer, as a foretaste of heaven.
We'll joy in the ransom he purchased and gave,
To rescue the fallen from sin and the grave.

We'll sing of his glorious coming again,
To gather his saints in his kingdom to reign.
We'll hail the glad day when oppression shall cease,
And the world shall be blessed with the gospel of peace.

We'll sing of the City whose God is its light,
Where there is no sorrow nor darkness nor night.
We'll talk of life's tree and the river that flows
And the deserts that blossom and bloom as the rose.

Without an Answer.

In an address some time ago, the late Dr. George P. Hays told a story of an old German in Pennsylvania who, meeting a young infidel who was to speak at the schoolhouse in the evening, said: "Is you de young man vot iss to schpeak dis ebening?" "Yes sir; I am." "Vell, vot you schpeak aboudt?" "My subject, sir, is this: 'Resolved, That I will never believe anything that I do not understand.'" "Oh my! is dot id? Vell, now, you shoost take von leedle egg-sample. Der, you see dot field, my pasture ober dere? Now, my horse he eat der grass und it comes up all hair ober hees pack. Den my sheep he eat shoost der same grass, und id grows vool all ober him. Und now, vot you dink? My goose he eat der grass too, und sure's I tell you, it comes up all ober him fedders. You understand dot, do you? Heigh!"

"The Honest Truth."

Some persons pride themselves on being blunt, or as they call it, "honest;" but very blunt people do little good to others, and get little love to themselves. The Scriptures recommend gentleness and kindness. There is nothing in all this world of ours half so mean as a vindictive and malignant disposition. Yet many Christians gratify this spirit, and deceive themselves with the idea that they are rebuking sin. Christians should take heed of getting fond of the work of "rebuking." Such "spiritual constables" do a great deal of mischief without intending it. They are in the church what a very witty and sarcastic person is in society, or what tell-tale is in school, and approximate very closely to that class which the apostle terms "busybodies in other men's matters." Such Christians, in time come to be regarded as nuisances in society, constantly to be avoided, and the little good they may do is thrown away. Our manner must be tender and winning. The nail of reproof, says an old writer, must be well oiled in kindness before it is driven home.

Vital Questions.

1. If only one-tenth of our income belongs to the Lord, to whom belongs the nine-tenths and also the capital stock?

2. Have we any capital to do business with, except what was loaned to us by the Giver of all good?

3. Whose is all the silver and the gold, and also the cattle upon a thousand hills? Psa. l. 10, 12.

4. Have not we ourselves been bought with a price, even the precious blood (life) of the Son of God?

5. Did not this purchase include all our chattels, mortgages, bank stock and other property, and cover even our talents and every thing that we possess?

6. If so, have we any right to use one dollar without asking the wish of him who has purchased us, and to whom we are glad to confess before men that we belong?

7. How can God's professed people who by their own acknowledgement are poverty-stricken and have nothing that they can truly call their own —how can they recklessly use for selfish purposes what belongs to another?

God, help thy people, in these perilous times, that they may be faithful stewards in the use of their Lord's money; and at last may hear him say to them, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Lay Aside Every Weight.

This means that Christians should remove all which would obstruct progress in the Christain course. The weight is not the same thing in all persons. In one, it may be pride; in another, vanity; in another, a violent and ungovernable temper; in another, a heavy-laden, insensible heart; in another, some improper and unholy attachment. Some persons would make much more progress if they would disencumber themselves of the heavy weight of gold which they endeavor to carry with them. Even a feather or a ring may become such a weight that they never will make much progress towards the prize. The thing that you cling to; the sin that besets you; the temptation that ensnares you—these are the things to be laid aside if we are to run with patience the race that is set before us.

Of all human frailties there are none so base as ingratitude, none so infamous as to return evil for good—to debase the purest friendship extended to us by life-long friends.

Faith Increased by Use.

God feeds our faith as fast as we use it. Faith is not directly the gift of God. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." It is not faith, but salvation by faith that is said to be the gift of God in Eph. ii. 8. It was because of the Word of God spoken by Elijah that the widow of Zarephath believed that she and her boy should be supported. It is because of the Word of God that we believe that our sins are forgiven.

Though God does not directly give us faith, it will increase as we use it. As in the case of the widow's meal and oil there will never be a lack so long as we go on using what we have. There are people who are religiously inclined who have doubts as to certain portions of the Bible. Particular teachings or miracles they cannot readily accept. But let such persons use the faith they possess, let them carry it out in holy living, their faith will be fed and the truths which they have received and acted upon in faith will so expand as to take in other truths which they could not at first accept. Let them pray, so far as they believe in prayer, and their faith will so increase in time that it will embrace all truth. There may at first be no felt need of some things in the Scriptures that will just meet the wants of a later time. Faith will then grasp them, if it has not been weakened by inactivity. As with the blind man who was given his sight by the Savior, things may not be clearly discerned at first. But the use of the faith already possessed will lead to clearness of vision. Some fail to have faith in Christ because they do not use the faith they have. Many a poor sinner might have Christ clearly presented to him as an all sufficient Savior if he would take the steps toward Christ in which he already believes. Skeptics who have doubted even the existence of God, on honestly seeking him in prayer, have been convinced of his presence and convicted of their own selfishness and guilt. Let any man act on the faith he has, it will increase. God is not afar off. If we want him, if we want to draw nearer him, by using the faith we have it will enlarge, and from day to day, and from year to year the barrel of meal shall waste not, neither will the cruse of oil fail. Our faith shall be abundantly fed as we grasp the fulfillment of the greatest promises of God. Beyond are many rich blessings. By faith we may have them. One step more in faith may lead us to the very richest experiences. A child cannot see all the benefits of an education when he is first sent to school. As he pursues his studies there are always studies ahead that he does not understand. No matter how he advances, in continuing his studies he must go step by step in faith. He can not know any faster than he learns. If he should go on forever there would be something more to learn. So it is in the Christian life. All must begin with the alphabet or with elemental truths. They cannot know all that is ahead of them from the beginning. They must proceed by faith, and their faith will increase as they advance. They will have faith as fast as they need it. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear."—Morning Star.

True Riches Amidst Poverty.

An aged man was sitting before the embers of an almshouse. He was very deaf, and every limb shook with palsy. Deeply poor was he.

"What are you now doing?" said a friend who called upon him.

"Waiting, sir."

"And for what?" asked his friend.

"For the coming of my Lord."

"What makes you wish for his coming?"

"Because, sir, I expect great things then. He has promised that when he shall appear he will give a crown of righteousness to all who love him."

"On what foundation do you rest for such a hope?" again questioned his friend.

Rubbing and putting on his spectacles, he read: "Therefore, being justified by faith," etc. Rom. v. 1, 2. Happy old man! so poor in this world's goods, yet so rich in faith.

There is many a Christian who feels the irksomeness of the duties of life, and feels his spirit revolting from them. To get up every morning with a firm resolve to find pleasures in those duties, and to do them well, and finish the work which God has given us to do, that is to drink Christ's cup.

As well find a living man without breath, as a living Christian without prayer.

The Last Gathering.

Ocean and earth restore
All that your arms entomb!
From every distant shore,
Come to the gathering—come!

Sages of days gone by,
Long mouldering in the tomb,
Haste to the realms in light.
Come to the gathering—come!

Warrior with laurelled brow,
Who fixed a nation's doom,
Come to the judgment now,
Come to the gathering—come!

Maiden with lips of rose,
And brow of purest stone,
Haste from thy long repose,
Come to the gathering—come!

Bright was thy dark eye's gleam,
Fair was thy cheek of bloom,
Again those charms shall beam!
Come to the gathering—come!

Mourner with tearful eye,
Haste to thy long-sought home;
A peaceful rest is nigh!
Come to the gathering—come!

Loved ones of days gone by,
Haste from the grave's cold gloom,
Again we meet on high!
Come to the gathering—come!

Ocean and earth, restore
All that your arms entomb!
My clods from every shore,
Come to the gathering—come!

Strong Faith.

No faith, little faith, and strong in faith, are Bible phrases. On more than one occasion Jesus upbraided his disciples for having "little faith." On the other hand wherever he found strong faith he freely commended it, though found in a Roman centurion. Matt. viii. 10.

His disciples lacked the faith or trust adequate to the emergency of the hour. When the storm had lashed the Galilean sea into fury they imagined that they were about to perish though the Master was abroad.

There must have been reasonable grounds for the exercise of the faith Jesus demanded, and on which to base his rebuke; for such he intended his words to be. They surely had seen some displays of his power in miracles wrought prior to this point of time in his ministry. He had turned water into wine at Cana. Could calm the winds and still the surging sea. How could they imagine, even though Jesus lay asleep in the hinder part of the ship that they all were going to the bottom, including this prophet like unto Moses. Such a fate would have proved disastrous to the plan unfolded by the personal ministry of our Lord, abetted by the service of these same disciples.

STRONG IN FAITH.

Abraham appears before us on the inspired page as a notable example of this. It was the exercise of strong faith by him in God's promises that has won the admiration of Bible readers and expositors in all ages since his call to the high and holy destiny of becoming the father of a posterity numerous as the stars of heaven and the sands upon the sea-shore.

Paul bears witness to his faith in these words: "He staggared not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God." Rom. iv. 20.

A law of nature—of man's and woman's constitutions would seem to bar the possibility of the birth of a child at the advanced ages of the faithful pair. The promise and this, humanly speaking, immutable law were in conflict. Will the notion that law is supreme in this matter settle the question? It would today with the infidel; and quite as true with many bright lights (?) that adorn the American pulpit. Many a learned man in clerical cloth eulogizes the faith of Abraham while stumbling over the miracles of Jesus. The great Creator who subjected all nature to the control of law made the promise that the aged patriarch should have an heir in whom his (Abraham's) seed should be called. What was law to the unscientific mind of this father of the faithful He had gone out of the land of Ur of the Chaldees and from his father's house, on the ground of faith! Many today would say "he went it blindly;" and this is true in a sense. "And he went out, not knowing whither he went." Heb. xi. 8.

He journeyed over an unfrequented road. Some things above and beyond the realm of natural laws had fallen to the lot of his experience. He knew that according to nature he was as good as dead. Heb. xi. 12.

"Though he regarded his own body deadened.....he did not dispute against the promise of God." Diaglott. He did not reason about the impossibility of fulfillment. He believed God and entertained no fears that all nature would become chaotic if something should occur in a sphere where science can not even now push her investigations. This Abrahamic faith is the kind that pleases God. The professed faith in the Word of God that haggles, and doubts, and questions when called upon to consider the supernatural as a part of God's revelation to men as belonging essentially to the great scheme of redemption, is no faith at all. Saving faith is strong faith; and strong because it accepts the seemingly impossible on the bare promise of God. To those who deny that miracles were wrought in the past, alleging as a reason that none are wrought today, the future is an utter blank, and all such, like Hobbs must say, at the close of life, "We take a leap in the dark." And what better is the condition of the man in the pulpit, titled D. D; or the man occupying the professor's chair of theology in some great college, who doubts or denies the inspiration of whole chapters and books of the Bible, and styles, as big fish stories, certain miraculous occurrences found therein? The faith (?) of this class of men is the shallowest pretense, parade it as they may, under imposing and pompous titles.

In the midst of infidelity and scepticism there is, thank God, a simple minded people entertaining the faith of Abraham; believing that in times long past when God was inspiring men to speak and write his Word marvelous things were performed such as giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, strength to the weak, steadiness to palsied nerves and life to the dead—climaxing the long list of miracles and wonders by raising his Son from the dead and exalting him to his right hand in the heavens. They also believe that this same highly exalted and glorified Son is coming to earth in person, that at this grand epoch in the history of redemption is to be wrought a miracle at which angels may well wonder, the resurrection of the righteous dead and their immortalization, and the change of the living remnant to a condition of incorruptibility. The supernatural on a prodigious scale is what this people of Abrahamic faith believe in, expect to witness, and the result of which, they hope to share.

"Jesus is coming, O blessed the thought
Well may the soul unto rapture be wrought
After the sorrow, the woe and the tears
We shall be like him when Jesus appears."

JOHN L. WINCE.

How I Read Matt. xxv. No. 1.

This chapter is divided into three sections; each section with its lesson and application, placed on record partly in parable and partly in literal language. And for the instruction of the disciples during the Lord's absence. And is, as it were, a synopsis of Scripture teaching according to the prophetic records, and each section with its distinctive characteristics. The first, relating to Israelism at this particular time. The period between the Lord's presence as a thief, and immediately before his public manifestation in Jerusalem. The first word of this chapter is the key to open up the first section. The "then" takes its significance from the last verse of chapter xxiv., and winds up with the admonition verse 13. The thoughtless virgins lost their opportunity, and therefore it becomes the disciple to watch and utilize his opportunity, which means, be on the alert all the time, not knowing the day nor the hour when the Son of Man cometh.

The second section is an elaboration of the admonition of verse 13, and has an individual application, appropriate to a long period of time in which grave responsibilities are incurred on the part of servants of Christ, during his absence, in the management and disposition of his goods—"Not walking in craftiness, nor handling the Word of God deceitfully." Utility according to the ability. Otherwise "unprofitable," as in verse 29. The third section—from verse 31 to verse 46 refers to the nations outside of Israel, and whose standing depends at this particular time upon their previous attitude, as nations toward Israel during their dispersion.

Our reading of this chapter calls for abundant quotations from the Old Covenant Scriptures, and to which we do well to take heed, as to a light shining in a dark place. Because, as Peter wrote: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known to you the power and presence of our Lord Jesus Christ."

"Behold he cometh with the clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they who pierced him, and all the tribes of the land shall mourn on account of him." Rev. i. 7.

For clouds, consult 1 Thes. iv. 17 and Heb. xii. 1, "Taken away in the air in clouds to a meeting with the Lord"—"a cloud of witnesses" as is the usage. Clouds of attendants, when he makes his public entry into Jerusalem.

His coming as a thief, and settlement with his servants, as recorded in the preceding context, having been completed: "Then" the order is, the unfolding of the things associated with his apocalypse, or public manifestation, with a view to planting his authority on the Mount Zion in Jerusalem. "The kingdom of heaven," at some time long or short, between his presence as a thief, and his public revelation may be compared in oriental imagery, to "ten virgins who took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." "Then" refers to a period rather than to a point of time. Sometime during this period—the bridegroom being away from home, and expected to return with his bride; the virgins, according to previous arrangement, intend to meet him and his party some distance away from his residence; where it is understood that all necessary preparations have already been made for his reception. "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." And while in this state they were aroused from sleep by a cry at midnight: "Behold the bridegroom, come ye forth to meet him." ("Come" instead of "go" is considered the better reading) "While the thoughtless virgins went to buy oil, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage feast; and the door was shut. And, addressing the disciples, he said—verse 13. "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour in which the Son of Man cometh." In this particular they were admonished to be always on the watch and make the most of their opportunity, and not be unprepared as the virgins who found themselves without oil in their lamps when most needed. And just here is wherein the difference lay. An illuminated reception on the one hand and darkness, amounting to no reception at all on the other.

In harmony with the parable teaching of our Lord, and for the purpose of identification; we consult Psa. xlv. read the whole Psalm and study its contents in the light of prophetic teaching with reference to the apocalypse of the Lord and Savior. The Author's heart is bubbling over with matter concerning the King, who is blessed forever on account of his splendid characteristics. Compare verse 3 with Rev. xix. 11, 15, 16. "Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O mighty One." "In righteousness doth he judge and make war." He has to fight his way from the south, through disaffected provinces; Edom, Moab and the children of Ammon prostrate themselves before him. Verse 5 and Is. xi. 14 compared with Dan. xi. 41. The duration of his throne and the character of his rule. Verse 6, and the reason verse 8 as being descriptive of a bridegroom's preparation for the things involved in the coming ceremonial. The appearance of the queenly bride to be. The most precious and costly clothing, elaborately embroidered with tissue of gold interwoven with needle work, for glory and beauty. 13, 14. Advice to the queen, addressed as "daughter" by one not the king, with reference to her attitude and state of mind in relation to the king—"For he is thy Lord." Compare verse 12, with reference to the daughter of Tyre, with Psa. lxxii. 10, 11. Read the whole Psalm. "The king's daughter is all glorious within the palace. The term "daughter" is in keeping with all the circumstances of her development and new relations —verse 13. The representations of future things, though clothed in oriental imagery, does not come up to the real state of affairs, in relation to the glory of the kingdom, and the royalties thereof, as depicted in the Holy Scriptures. Here we have the King, bride and her virgin companions—verses 14, 15. These are presented to the King with gladness and rejoicing, and "they shall enter into the palace of the king," as intimate friends of the bridegroom and bride. Compare with Matt. xxv. 10, and Rev. xix. 7, 8, 9. Here we have the Lamb, the bride and the invited guests; a happy company filled with joy and gladness. Having in mind former afflictions and the glorious prospect before them.

These invited ones associate with bride and bridegroom on intimate terms; they are related to the royalties as [illegible] people. They are nearer the [illegible] others—"A first-fruits [illegible] and the Lamb: as it is written, [illegible] sanctified to the Lord the first-fruits of his increase." Jer. xl. 3; [illegible] xiv. 4.

Jesus announced the "acceptable year of the Lord" as recorded—Isa. lxi. 2. When the Lord "will comfort those who mourn in Zion, and give them beauty for, or instead of sackcloth and ashes—the oil of joy for mourning; the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord for glory." Compare Jer. xxxi. 12-14.

There will be a people in Jerusalem and surrounding country who will be looking for the Messiah, and many of them will be sufficiently enlightened to give him a hearty and honorable welcome. And with manifestations of true repentance proclaim: "Blessed he who cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 39. Many of the prophecies will be in process of fulfilment during [illegible] Compare Isa. li. 11, 12, 22 and lvi. 7 and ix. 8, 12, 19-21 and compare Isa. lxi. 6 with lxvi. 22, which places the nation of Israel in a priestly relation, mediatorially affecting other nations, and as already referred to, Matthew must be studied from an Israelitish point of view.

The "companions" of the "king's daughter" will agree with the invited ones to the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb;" and the "wise virgins" of Matthew xxv. 2. Being a little lower in rank and nature, yet fit associates as ladies in waiting upon her majesty, the queen. They are on intimate terms to the degree that they are welcomed to the king's palace and the festivities of the occasion. The approved Israelitish nation will stand related to the royalties of the heavens, in the epoch of the regeneration, as no other nation will. They will occupy a mid-heaven relation: having the heavenlies above them and the earthlies below them, but themselves identified with neither. For as the new heavens and the new earth which I will make shall remain before me, saith the Lord; so shall your seed and your name continue." Isa. lxvi. 22. The comparison is, as to the duration; as the new heavens continue so does Israel continue. But Israel is not the new heaven. And the same is said as compared with the new earth. And therefore the position of Israel will be mediatorial, as mentioned in relation to the "first-fruits." In reading Matt. xxv. 14 we leave out the supplied words. It is not said that the kingdom of heaven is like the parable here introduced. The lesson is to the Lord's servants to whom are committed the Lord's goods to profit withal. "Having the treasure in earthen vessels." For, as a man traveling to a far country, calleth his own servants, and delivereth to them his goods." (14) And after a long time the lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them." This is an individual affair, in which each one gives account of his stewardship, and receive from the Master according as he has been faithful or unfaithful, as recorded in chap. xxiv. 45-51. When the Son of Man comes in his glory—this is not the time when he comes to settle with his servants. This judicial settlement has already been made, and the subjects thereof appointed their respective portions according to their works. Reference above. His coming in glory is a public affair—his apocalypse—heralded with the announcement, "Behold the Bridegroom." When he cometh—then he sits upon his glorious throne. The establishment of his authority upon Mount Zion having been accomplished, and acknowledged by the great powers. The next in order (verse 32) is the gathering of the nations in the valley of Jehoshophat. Joel iii. 2, 11, 12. For there he will sit to judge the nations and according to the verdict in the case he will separate the nations one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats—this comparison thrown in as an apt illustration.

The sheep, according to the comparison in the context represent the approved nations, who will be joined to the Lord. Zech. xi. 11. But the goats, on the other hand, represent the unapproved nations, at the time when Judah will be made the Lord's "goodly horse in the battle." Zech. x. 3. And this approval or disapproval as the case may be, depends upon the treatment which the King's brethren receive at the hands of these nations. "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance: when he separated the sons of Adam he set the boundaries of the peoples, according to the number of the children of Israel." Deut. xxxii. 8. Compare with Acts xvii. 26.

"Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the founding of a world. Verse 34. And after this invitation, gives reasons for the invitation and blessing, agreeable to the promise made to Abraham four hundred and thirty years before the law from Sinai. When the approved nations were doing good to the king's brethren, they did not know that they were doing service to the glorified Jesus. The unapproved also were not aware that they were refusing service to Jesus when refusing to do good to Jesus' brethren. Hence the sentence: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the fire pertaining to the age." This is the only charge laid against them.

We put the teaching of Jesus well to the front because he was anointed to preach—was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and not to the Gentiles, and his directions to the Apostles were "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter thou not." The approved nations here spoken of are not to be compared with the nations of the present age. Their standing with the Lord is harmonious, while that of the unapproved are adverse to the divine purpose. The approved observe the terms of the mid-heaven message. Rev. xiv. 7, with a view to the worship of chap. xv. 4. Read these two passages in the order referred to, and then read Zech. ii. 11, Having become joined to the Lord, by becoming his people—they worship him, as it is written. All the nations will not be cast into the age fire. But as affirmed, the sheep nations are to inherit the prepared kingdom. And in view of this possession Abraham was, in promise, constituted father of a multitude of nations, left over to be blessed in him and in his seed. The Lord said to Moses, (Ex. xix. 5) "All the earth is mine." And Deut. xxxii. 8, 9. He gives the nations allotments of the earth's territory, according to the number of the children of Israel. The Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance." But the adversary usurped the Lord's portion and squatted upon his land, as it is this day. But the "hope of Israel," and the Abrahamic promises demand the expulsion of the "unspeakable Turk" from the Abrahamic territory, as it is written, Matt. xiii. 41, in order to the restoration and reconstruction of the Holy Land, in the age and beyond.

Short Sermons. No. 4.

But the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. vi. 23. Eternal or endless life is not a human heritage or given at birth—that is a fiction of human origin, but it is all divine, and one of God's best gifts to man, and comes through his beloved Son who is the way, the truth and the life. Life and immortality was brought to light through the gospel. Aside from the gospel all is dark, all is lost. The Christian who becomes such by believing and obeying the gospel God's motive power unto salvation is seeking for glory, honor and immortality, and will in due time receive this eternal life which God who cannot lie has promised. Christians have it now by promise, and will have it in fact when Christ who is our Life-Giver returns to earth his reward with him. Then the sleeping saints will awake in God's likeness and be satisfied, and the living saints be clothed with immortality and die no more. Jesus says, I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly, that is eternal life. His mission was in vain if all are in possession of immortal life. How did they get it? Tell me if you can. Remember that Jesus is the Life-Giver, and that eternal life is God's gift to man through our Lord Jesus Christ, who says "ye will not come to me that ye might have life," and why? Simply because they had been misled and made to believe they already had eternal life. See John v. 39.

Our Conference is called for Hillsburg, in Clinton Co., Sept. 6. to 9. We should make this the occasion for conferring upon the GREATEST QUESTIONS OF THE DAY., viz:—How can we make our calling and election sure, and how can we lead neighbor and friend into God's glorious truth? Now must we again confer upon these questions without your presence or assistance? Stop! Think! You do not realize the importance of the question. It is, How shall we let our light shine effectively amidst a crooked and perverse generation? It is, How shall we walk that we shall not be classed "Ye workers of iniquity," at the setting up of the kingdom? Are you satisfied with your record? Some have been giving the best they have to the cause of truth. The best of talent, the best of life, while others have been accumulating, or trying unsuccessfully, to accumulate wealth, ease, or worldly preferment. Which side are you on? Have you done your best? Listen! Less than half the number of those who profess to LOVE GOD'S TRUTH, are in the habit of assisting in efforts to spread that loved truth through an evangelist, while a still smaller per cent let themselves be seen at the conferences.

Now what I wish to propound is, Will you be present with us September 6.

WE NEED your presence.
WE NEED your suggestions.
WE NEED your influence.
WE NEED your money.
COME with love.
COME with prayer.
COME with action.
COME with liberality.

The first business meeting will be held early Friday morning, so COME Thursday. PLEASE COME.

Earnestly,

Obituary.

Norville Beall Wilson died at his home in Mt. Sterling, Ill., Aug. 27, 1900, after suffering several years of diabetis, which caused his death. N. B. Wilson was born in Brown County, Ill., August 7, 1852, where he lived until grown, from which place he went to Scott County, Ill., where he engaged in the manufacture of stone ware. He was married to Miss Mary Belle Clark of Winchester, Ill., Oct. 9th, 1878. After his wife's death April 8, 1895, he moved to Mt. Sterling, Ill. Deceased leaves four children, two boys and two girls, three brothers and two sisters, besides a host of friends to mourn his early death. N. B. Wilson united with the Church in Ripley, Ill., this summer and was baptized by Elder D. M. Hudler. Funeral services were conducted from M. E. Church by Elder D. M. Hudler. The last words I heard my brother say were, "I am not afraid to die."

T. M. WILSON.

George W. Murwin was born in Thomson, Delaware Co., N. Y., Aug. 6, 1829, died at his home farm in Regalton, Berrien Co., Mich, Aug. 21, 1900. Moved with his parents to Trumbull Co., Ohio, when 7 years old; when 11 years old he moved to Ashtabula Co., where he remained until he was 38 years of age. Was baptized by L. H. Chase in 1860, in Saybrook township, into the all-saving name; moved to Berrien Co., Mich., in 1868, and he resided on the same farm until his death. He has left a wife and five children, besides many relatives and friends whose hearts are made sad, for the cycle of death has cut down our dear one and grief hangs over us like a cloud. The funeral was conducted by Eld. John King, who read from St. John xiv. 1-7, with prayer and singing and a few remarks. The beautiful burial service written by J. F. Wagoner in 1892 and published in RESTITUTION was read at the grave, after which the beautiful casket, covered with flowers, was lowered into the grave, and our dear one sleeps until Jesus calls. The funeral was conducted according to his expressed wish and desire.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith will convene at or near Scircleville, Clinton Co., Thursday, Sept. 6, 1900, at 7:00 P. M. and continue over the following Sunday. We have been informed that the brethren there are generally anxious to have the conference meeting held there and that ample arrangements will be made to care for all who desire to attend from a distance.

We hope that as many as can will arrange to attend and that much good may result. This is the time for the election of officers for the following year and there should be a good delegate representation. Those going via Tipton over the Lake Erie, stop at Scircleville, those going via Frankfort over same road stop at Hillisburg. "Those going via Kokomo over Clover Leaf, stop at Forest, and those via Frankfort over Clover Leaf stop at Michigantown. All going by rail please observe these directions to avoid disappointment on your part, and also that you may respect the request of the church which has invited the Conference."

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Gospel of the Kingdom, an 8 page, double column tract, sold formerly at 10 cents a dozen.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 80 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

The Right Road.

"I have lost the road to happiness—
Does any one know it, pray?
I was dwelling there when the morn was fair,
But somehow I wandered away.

"I saw rare treasures in scenes of pleasures,
And ran to pursue them, when lo!
I had lost the path to happiness,
And I knew not whither to go.

"I have lost the way to happiness—
Oh, who will lend me back?"
Turn off from the highway of selfishness
To the right—up duty's track!

Keep straight along, and you can't go wrong,
For as sure as you live, I say,
The fair lost fields of happiness
Can only be found that way.

Bible Teaching vs. Popular Theology.

The comparison is so marked and decisive, that it is a wonder that any one at all can be led astray by popular fiction. A writer upon this topic said:

"Such expositors are totally disqualified to expound the mysteries of godliness in relation to him who was manifested in flesh and afterwards justified by Spirit. As they preach "another gospel" so they also preach "another Jesus" unknown to Paul, and who is as much a myth as the gods of Greece or Rome. With these blind guides, God is not one but three. In him, they teach, there is a trinity of persons, each of whom has a distinct personality, and that Jesus is the incarnation of the second person of this imaginary trinity. Again, if we enquire of these astute theologians, why did the second person become incarnate? they answer, To redeem immortal souls from the pains of hell forever, and to bestow a far away heaven on the few or many on whose hearts the third person of the trinity is supposed to operate.

This whole fabric is built on sand. There are no immortal souls to be redeemed, neither are there any "pains of hell forever" to be saved from. Neither did God become incarnate, or assume the human form."

Is godliness a "mystery," may be asked? To some it is, even an enigma so dark, that not the first ray of light appears to dispel the "mystery." Note the reply of Jesus to the question of his disciples: "Why speakest thou unto them in parables? Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." Why not? "For this people's heart is waxed gross, (and as a consequence) their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes are closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them. But blessed are your eyes, for they see (it is no longer a mystery) and your ears for they hear."

We see from this passage that the "mystery" relates to "the kingdom of heaven," in other words the good news of the kingdom the "word," or "gospel of the kingdom." "When any one heareth the Word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, (any open enemy to the gospel of the kingdom) and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart."

It is not possible for the "mystery" to be revealed, dispelled or taken away while adhering to "another gospel," and believing in a sky kingdom with their immortal souls, and a trinity of gods. There is a system which is branded "mystery" in the forehead: "And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and the Abominations of the earth." This "mother" has daughters, and both the mother and daughters are branded "mystery," they know nothing about "the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven."

To those of us whose minds have been enlightened by the gospel of the kingdom, it can be said,' (Eph. i. 9, 10): has "made known unto us the mystery of his will." What is "made known," is no longer a "mystery."

Life and immortality independent of Jesus is a part of the mystery of old Babylon. A writer says: "Man's mortality, his sentence to return to dust, must be taken into account if we would hold the truth as it is in Jesus. Death is one of the works of the devil, and must be destroyed. Now, to redeem a mortal man from sin and death requires a different sort of ransom than the redemption of an immortal soul from the pains of hell forever. Theologians maintain that the latter requires an incarnate god to die and suffer in the room and stead of those to be redeemed, in order to effect such redemption. To redeem mortal men from the curse pronounced on them, requires one whose nature first should be identical with those to be redeemed, and yet different from them in this respect, that he would be sinless, and without spot. The serpent's head had to be bruised, but the Seed of the woman must do it. To bring an angel or a god from heaven would be contrary to what the Spirit announced in Gen. iii. 15. This passage is fatal to all theories of a pre-existent Christ. Jesus is emphatically the woman's Seed, he could not as a person have existed before her."

The doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul is the foundation stone on which old Babylon has created her temple of mystery. It was conceived in a lie and born in darkness. The following quotation gives its history.

"Herodotus, the most ancient profane historian whose works have come down to us, testifies as follows: 'They [the Egyptians] are the first of mankind who have defended the immortality of the soul.' This writer lived as much as 400 years before Christ, and his history of the Egyptians extends as far back as 700 B. C. Bunsen, in his work on Egypt says: 'The Egyptians were the first who taught the doctrine of the immortality of the soul—a fact mentioned by all Greek writers, from Herodotus to Aristotle.' Here we have the incontrovertible evidence of standard history, that the immortality of the soul was 'brought to light' in Egypt, at least 700 years before Christ and his gospel. Here is an apparent difficulty; how shall we get extricated? One of two things is certain—either this historical fact invalidates the above statement of the Apostle Paul, or the two doctrines of immortality are not identical. Now we are coming to the gist of the matter. If we can show that the Egyptian theory is one, and the gospel doctrine another, and entirely different theory, we shall be able to exonerate the great Apostle, and be prepared to give the fullest credence to his statement. Herodotus says, 'They [the Egyptians] believe that on the dissolution of the body, the soul immediately enters some other animal.' Thus we learn that the primary element of their immortality doctrine was, that the soul survives the stroke of death, the idea of transmigration being a secondary feature. But there is no ambiguity in the terms employed by the historian in explaining their belief. They believed that when the body died, the soul lived on; and, in harmony with that faith, they regarded as sacred, and objects of worship, cats, dogs, rats, and crocodiles, because they supposed them to be receptacles of immortal souls; and Herodotus records the statement that, 'If a house was on fire, the father of a family would take more pains to save his cats than his wife and children."

Reader, do you "know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven?" A person may hear the "Word of the kingdom" expounded, and at the time, may not properly understand, or comprehend it, and at this stage some adversary may "catch away that which was sown in his heart," lest you should understand with (the) heart, and should be converted." God has given this "Word of the kingdom" to be preached for the conversion of people, but the enemy would catch it away out of your heart lest you "should be converted," and obey the gospel.

Be on the look out for the enemy, and have no fellowship with him.

DRAWBACKS AND HINDRANCES.

"That they all may be one.....that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

In the previous paper the subject of the Nature and Pre-existence of Christ, as discussed among those believers calling themselves Christadelphians, occupied our consideration. This was judged to be the most flagrant and fruitful cause of division among the brotherhood, and was well known to have been one of the greatest subjects of controversy in the past history of the so-called church. We left off with the establishment in England (Nottingham) of a monthly magazine to advocate the view that Christ was not in his nature "sinful flesh," or, as Dr. Thomas has been pleased to interpret the phrase in Elpis Israel "flesh full of sin." Closing with a reference to the editor of the Christadelphian describing the discussion as a "subtle controversy," from the "distraction" of which "the brethren required to be saved."

The controversy was prosecuted with considerable activity. The arguments seem to have been so fine-spun on both sides that Dr. Thomas, then two years in his grave, was claimed as a supporter by both disputants. Quotations from the Doctor's works were collected and published in the Christadelphian for August, 1873. In the first number of the Christadelphian Lamp, 15 pages of the 36 of which it consisted were occupied by Dr. S. G. Hayes on the subject. The Christadelphian policy to save the brotherhood from "distraction" necessitated considerable pamphleteering. I have noted the names of Dr. C. Nichols, London; John Hawkins, Grantham; W. Birkenhead, Sale, near Manchester; David Bairstow, Halifax, Yorkshire; David Brown, London; William D. Jardine, Stourbridge; Charles Smith, Edinburgh. A small hand-bill shows the zeal with which "gladiatorism" was worked. "The Slain Lamb. A Lecture in Temperance Hall, Birmingham, August 29th, 1873, by Robert Roberts, in reply to one delivered in the same place on the previous evening, in advocacy of the Renunciationist Heresy by E. Turney, Nottingham. This lecture which was instrumental in vanquishing the new heresy in the Birmingham ecclesia, will be published in the next number of the Christadelphian with wood-cut of a diagram used and especially drawn for the occasion.

I beg to make a special reference to the following:—

Wm. J. Jardine "a Christadelphian of many years' standing," an old contributor to the 'Herald of the Kingdom,' the 'Ambassador of the Coming Age' and the 'Marturion,' addressed a letter (May, 1874) to the editor of the Christadelphian.' This letter, with Preface, extends to 48 pages, and bears to treat on the subjects of 'Mere-Manism,' 'God Manifestation,' the 'Sacrifice of Christ,' 'Sin's Flesh,' etc. It was fruited as a pamphlet, "intended for all who are baptized into the kingdom and name of Jesus Christ, whether called Christadelphians, Marturionists, or otherwise; every brother and sister is invited to apply for a copy without payment."

In the Preface these words occur:—"The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what I aim to attain; and I believe it is also what you aim to attain; but as your course of procedure appears to me an obstacle in the way of attaining it, I take this mode of action as the best means of testing your statements by force of argument, and of protesting against that disposition of yours to anathematize, cut off, or withdraw from those who, while holding the gospel of the kingdom and the name of Jesus Christ, differ from you in matters which I consider, of expositionary detail. This bearing on your part infers the existence of no desire to encourage inquiry after truth, as if the knowledge of Scripture in the writings of Dr. Thomas had reached a [illegible] ality, and his books were the sole depot of the whole of Christian doctrine. On the contrary, the spirit of your action presents to the intelligent reader in no modest terms that such and such [illegible] whole truth, and you are [illegible] This indeed your [illegible] persecution, the bloodshed, with which the history of Popery, Episcopacy, and Presbyterianism is marked, I see the whole of it is traceable to that same spirit of dogmatism, intolerance, and infallibility with which your attitude to many brethren here and in America, is characterized..... What you, without reason call 'Mere-Manism,' has been, and is in your eyes a great and dreadful heresy, and the brethren accused of it have met with little favor from your hands. Take, for instance, your admission of the intelligence from brother Coffman into the March number for 1873 of the Christadelphian, (page 164), and your refusal afterwards to insert counter intelligence from other brethren in his locality. Next, again, take your refusal in words to myself, to insert my defence."

Brother Jardine has many statements worthy of quoting. Here is one with regard to a passage, the common rendering of which lies at the foundation of most of the argument on which what is termed "God-Manifestation" rests. Much of the confusion which exists regarding the nature and pre-existence of Christ has been due to an adherence to a doubtful translation in the Common Version of the text of 1 Tim. iii. 19, "Great is the mystery of godliness. God was manifest in the flesh." The Thomas maintained throughout this rendering of the authorized translation, although he must have known that it had been discredited by eminent scholars. Brother Jardine mentions the following:—"Sir Isaac Newton affirms 'that all the churches for the first 400 or 500 years, and the authors of all the ancient versions from Jerome, as well as the rest, read, Great is the mystery of godliness which was manifested in the flesh; and brother Jardine adds "and so Griesbach reads it; and asks, Wherein therefore lies the force of your speculation of the passage?"

Another pamphleteer named, John Hawkins, gives the following authorities:—"Drs. Campbell and Doddridge say, "and confessedly great is the secret of godliness, he who was manifested in the flesh."

"Dean Alford puts it thus, "And confessedly great is the mystery of godliness who was justified in the spirit." There is evidently an omission here.

"Tischendorf always prints the common text, his corrections are in his footnotes; this correction runs as follows, "of godliness who was manifest."

"Sharp's (6th edition) (the best edition of the New Testament we possess, according to the Athenaeum, because the most correct), "and confessedly great is the mystery of godliness. Ope who was made manifest in flesh."

"The Douai version (Roman Catholic) has, "and manifestly it was a great sacrament of piety, which was manifested in flesh."

"Dean Howson, writing in Good Words, for July 1878, upon the literature of this passage, says, "There has been much debate among theologians upon the first word of this passage; and it is now agreed among the best critics, that this first word, is not 'God' but 'who.'"

Other testimony might be adduced, but this is reasonably sufficient for men who seek the truth, and have no man's fancy to prop up.

J. CAMERON.

We are nearing the troublous times of the end of the world; and there are signs and tokens of a shaking and convulsion which I trust I do not err when I compare and even identify with the predicted indication of the second and glorious coming of the Son of God in his kingdom.

Short Sermons. No. 6.

"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7.

This is supposed to prove the spirit a conscious entity, but it is only supposition based on tradition, as the text does not read that way. Note, this is a general statement, and includes mankind, good and bad. To get the idea correctly, we must go back to creation, and learn what and who man is, and what his make up, and what it was that God gave him. The record says, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7. This man was made of dust, and made to live by inhaling the air—the breath of life. Mind and thought were simply the result of this combination. Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust." Psa. civ. 29. This explains or makes plain our text. It was breath when God gave it to man. It is spirit when it returns to its Giver, breath and spirit in this case must be one. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. Death is not the gate to endless bliss, nor opening key to heaven as the poet fancies and the people sing. Death is not a friend, but an enemy, a dark and cruel foe, the result of Satan's work at the outset of this world's history. If the spirit be an immortal thinker—and a part of God, and can think in or out of the body, how is it we so often cannot think at all? Death will stop this thinker as sure as you live now, and can think a thought. And if the spirit is a part of and the responsible part of man, why think so much foolishness, and so much evil. And why does man array himself against man in deadly conflict, worse than the brute creation? And why so many blunders all through life?

What Whiskey Did.

Hark! do you hear a wail arise,
It curses earth, it grieves the skies;
The bitterest sound that e'er was heard,
All horror centered in one word;
'Lost, hope and heaven forever hid,
By cruel things that whiskey did.'

'It took all manhood from my face,
And hurl'd me down with headlong pace
To lowest depths of sin and shame,
Tho' bearing husband's father's name;
My feet all swiftly downward slid,
Ah, monstrous wrong that whiskey did.'

'My suffering wife forgot to smile,
Hopes long deferred no more beguile,
That once could make her pulses start,
So cruel life had broke her heart,
Her face betrayed what proud lips hid,
All dreadful things that whiskey did.

'It made my little children cow'r,
And turned our home all dark and sour,
That should have been life's paradise,
My poor babes grew in want and vice,
All beauteous things for them forbid,
But cruel things that whiskey did.

'Poor fool, I thought I had no need
The anguished pray'rs and tears to heed;
I laugh'd or cursed, could I not stay
Where'er I would, my impious way?
O worst mistake, no more is hid
The hellish work that whiskey did.

And Oh, that wail we hear once more,
All chance, all hope, forever o'er;
All good in life destroy'd for aye,
In liquid shame all washed away;
Eternal life itself forbid
By heaven-curs'd things that whiskey did.

The Woes of a Drunkard.

Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contention? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine. Prov. xxiii. 29, 30.

We do not think that any one ever intended to become a drunkard; but by associating with the drinking class and trying to keep up with their associates, they soon formed a habit that brought to them all the woes of a drunkard, and after the habit was formed they found themselves a slave to the drink habit instead of being master, and we know that the woes of the drunkard are the most appalling of any that is known. It destroys all love for wife, children, friends and relatives, and no love for anything but that which causes more misery, more death and suffering than all the wars we have had, and it costs more in money, even, than the wars that are now waging.

For the year 1893 tobacco cost the people of the United States $515,000,000 and liquors 1,080,000,000. We look with horror upon the record of the battles fought, and so many killed and wounded, but these records shrink into significance by the side of the killed and wounded that march under the banner of 'King Alcohol' and the heart wounds of a loving wife and mother are the hardest to heal of any wounds known. We all have within us the elements of evil, which, if allowed to take their own course would make the worst; but there is also in all of us a something which prompts us to resist the bad in our natures, and will, if we obey its commands, make us what we should be. In our lives either the good or the evil nature must dominate and it is for us to say which. The choice must be a deliberate one on our part and if we choose to resist the evil, we surely are not as bad as those who from choice resist the good. It is promised that the drunkard shall not inherit the kingdom, and as a means of avoiding that which brings woe upon all related to the drunkard, and shutting him out of the kingdom of God, it should be the duty of every one that is seeking to do good to try by every means in their power to warn and entreat every one that is inclined to associate with evil companions to forsake their evil ways, and call forth the good in their nature to resist the evil. A very safe rule is to touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using.

If the girls would take a stand only to associate with young men of truly noble character and lives, do you not think our young men would refrain from going in the path that leads to the drunkard's woes? and would cause many to return and reform and become good, honorable citizens? Certainly young men wish to associate with good girls, and it is in the power of the young ladies to make young men what they would wish them to be. Will they do it?

E. W. KNAPP.

Some people are asking, "to what college shall I send my boy?" It is not half so important what college you shall send your boy to, as what boy you shall send to college; for one boy will get out of a poor college a great deal more than another boy will get out of a college that is richly equipped.

There are some persons who are constantly asking for special rules of life. They would have an individual Bible, with particular instructions for each hour of their lives. But Christ dealt with great principles which are to be the basis and motive of all action, and from these, with the aid of his Spirit, we are to draw our own applications.

Like all the noblest things, the Christian life is only a hard service to those who serve it grudgingly. Take hold of it hesitatingly, and like a nettle, it seems all prickers and stings—all restraints and sacrifices. But take hold of it with the grasp of a resolute, fearless purpose, and it will answer back like the strengthening and cheering hand of a friend. Face it manfully, and it is full of blessing. Stand for it openly and it makes the way clear and the heart strong. Take up its crosses with a brave and steady cheerfulness, and its very crosses change into a crown—the crown of duties that grow easier with doing—the crown of happy, onward everlasting life.

They that desire to be truly good and wise, are the most ready and willing servants in breaking the bread of life, and feeding the hungry multitude; and they that give the most, instead of impoverishing themselves, do increase their store, for God's storehouse of provision is always overflowing in like manner as his love for his children.

We need what is due us on subscriptions, and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

"MAY it be ours to trust religiously, to hope humbly, to desire nobly, to think rationally, to will resolutely, and to work earnestly."

IT is reported that the bubonic plague is in Glasgow, and has been in southern France for months, and will likely spread over Europe.

BROTHER Booth, secretary of the Illinois Conference informs us he will be unable to furnish a report of their meeting for two or three weeks, as he is away from home.

THE coal miners in Pennsylvania to the number of some 120,000 are on a strike, and in consequence the price of coal will be greatly advanced, if indeed it does not amount to a real famine in fuel.

THE disaster by storm and flood at Galveston and other Gulf cities grows in magnitude as more details are learned. The dead cannot be numbered accurately, and are being burned in order to prevent a pestilence.

"PRAISE no man too liberally when he is present, nor censure him too lavishly when he is absent; the one favors of flattery, the other of malice, and both are reprehensible. The true way to advance another's virtue, is to follow it. The best means to decry another's vice, is to decline it."

IT has been well said that "one should be alive as long as he can, and as much alive as he can. He lives most who thinks most, and lives longest who thinks to most purpose. We should not too early make acquaintance with death, and stagnation comes pretty near being a death. Only by thinking is one resolved into power. His energies then go to the head and heart; he is then set into action, whereas without thought his forces slumber in the stomach, and produces only waste."

"IN order that all men may be taught to speak truth, it is necessary that all should learn to hear it, for no species of falsehood is more frequent than flattery, to which the cowardly is betrayed by fear, the dependent by interest, and the friend by tenderness. Those who are neither servile nor timorous are desirous of giving pleasure; and while unjust demands of praise continue to be made, there will always be some, whom hope, fear or kindness, will dispose to pay them."

PRESIDENT Kruger is virtually a prisoner in the hands of the District Governor of Portugese South Africa. He had fled to Lorenzo Marquas with his retainers, and was directing the work when the British Consul objected to Mr. Kruger using Portugese territory as a base for directing his executive. He is held and all intercourse is stopped. Lord Roberts reports that General Botha had given up the command of the Boer army, and it is likely that all official resistance to British supremacy in the Transvaal is at an end.

THE trouble is not ended in China by any means. A company of the U. S. Fourteenth Infantry while on the road to Pekin on Sept. 14, were attacked by 2000 Boxers, but held them at bay till a detachment of Bengal lancers came to their aid, the Chinese losing 200 killed, the Americans none. Large bodies of troops will be kept on Chinese soil this winter, and already agents of the different governments are preparing for quarters. England will withdraw a large force from South Africa, and send them to India where they will be made ready for the conflict she expects soon. Japan is landing more troops, and gives notice that any encroachment or interference with her will be deemed an "unfriendly act." Germany is making large preparations, and Russia has quit building railroads to use all her energy toward getting a better hold on the northern part of China. Meanwhile the diplomats of all nations are figuring on a basis for settlement. There is no peace in sight.

GERMANY is evidently not well fixed for war, as she has already had to make a loan outside of $20,000,000, which was taken in the United States.

DR. Dowie, who it will be remembered, went to London a few weeks since, is having trouble over there. The Daily Mail takes him to task in an article headed "Dowie comes for the dollars. The faith healer's appeal to credulous Christians." He has issued an appeal which the papers say is to those who have money to aid him in his schemes, instead of to the poor whom he might benefit were his claims true. He threatens all who oppose him, saying he has conquered Chicago, and will have London.

"MAY we not accept this great principle—that as our bodies, to be in health, must be generally exercised, so our minds, to be in health, must be generally cultivated? You would not call a man healthy who had strong arms but was paralytic in his feet; nor one who could walk well, but had no use of his hands; nor one who could see well, if he could not hear. You would not, if you could help it, reduce your bodies to any such partially developed state; much more, then, you would not, if you could help it, reduce your minds to it. Now, your minds are endowed with a vast number of gifts of totally different uses—limbs of mind as it were, which, if you don't exercise, you cripple. One is curiosity, —the capacity to take pleasure in knowing—destroy this and you become cold and dull. Another is sympathy, the power of sharing in the feelings of living creatures; destroy this and you become cruel; and so on of beauty, wit, etc., etc. So that in choosing your way of work you should aim to bring out all those faculties; and the way to do this is to concern yourselves with the subjects of each faculty."

Vulgar Fractions.

Ruskin says:—"If you will not amuse, nor inform, nor help anybody; you will not amuse, nor better, nor inform yourselves; you will sink into a state in which you can neither show, nor feel, nor see anything, but that one is to two as three is to six. And in that state what should we call ourselves? Men? I think not. The right name for us would be—numerators

Recent Discovery at Babylon.

A discovery of extraordinary importance has been made at Babylon by Prof. Hilprecht of Pennsylvania University, who went out in the spring to superintend new excavations. His own account of it in a letter recently received by one of his colleges must be quoted:—

"The results of our researches exceed everything that has been so far known about Babylon. We found the great temple library and priest school at Nippur, which had been destroyed by the Elamites 228 B. C. The library consists of 16,000 volumes, written on stones, and covers the entire theological, astronomical, linguistic and mathematical knowledge of those days. We also unearthed a collection of letters and biographies, deciphered the inscriptions of many newly discovered tombstones and monuments, and copied finally, best of all, 5000 official documents of inestimable value to the students of ancient history. The net result of our journey consists so far of 23,000 stone writings." Since Layard's day, nothing in this field of research has been so interesting as the examination of that mass of monuments must prove."

Shadows of Coming Troubles.

A representative of "The Morning Herald, (English) has had an interview with an ex-member of the Russian diplomatic service, with a view to eliciting his opinion on China's audacious move on the confines of Asiatic Russia.

"Ah," said the Russian, with a characteristic shrug, "This is indeed, no small matter, but one of the most serious import to the history of the world. It is the most significant move on the part of a colossal power since Napoleon put his Grande Armee in motion toward Moscow. We are on the eve of great events, of which historians will talk to posterity for ages to come. You British hardly know it, scarcely realize it, but the shadow of the dark day is at hand when your men will have to cast aside their pens and their tools and fight for freedom and fatherland."

"Do you think, then, that a general European conflagration will result?"

"The time has gone for thinking. The time has come for people to know, to realize the actual state of things. Listen to me. The inevitable outbreak between Russia and China will set the world ablaze with war, and the Power—eastern or western—which comes best out of it will wield a sway in the councils and disposition of the world which historians will only be able to parallel to Napoleonism. It is not only the West fighting against the East, for civilization's sake, for even if the East succumb—and she will die hard, I tell you—even so a period of internecine war will supervene among the nations of the West, which is of itself a horror to contemplate, and which suggests to the historian the recurrence of another and bloodier Thirty-Years' War. Every nation around is armed to the teeth, is arming still, and will continue to arm. To what end? To maintain peace you say? Bah! our own Czar with his suggested world's peace has proved the futility of it all. Each nation has armed because it knew the inevitable must come. The inevitable is here on our thresholds, we are hardly conscious of it, and God only knows how it will all end."

"And the immediate result—what do you think it will be?"

"Bad for Russia, certainly" was the prompt reply. "If our Trans-Siberian railway had been completed we could have put 300,000 Russians around Port Arthur before the Chinese forces could have availed. Now, however, the railway system will probably be destroyed before we can put a strong force in the field. Thus we are obliged to give way to Japan which is playing for a predominant on the Yellow continent. Our territorial acquisitions in Manchuria which we have won during the past six years are, to all intents and purposes, lost to us. Russian statesmen are fearful that these territories will eventually fall into the hands which finally impose their weight upon China, and speaking humanly, that can be no other Power but Japan."

"Do you believe in the report that Prince Tuan can put 1,000,000 troops in the field?"

"If you mean effective troops—no, I certainly do not. It is an established fact that since the China-Japanese war, the Chinese have been arming steadily. But they have not modern equipment for 1,000,000 troops. Recently they took great from the ammunitary authorities of St. Petersburg many thousands of cast-off rifles which were used in the Crimean and Russo-Turkish wars. These, of course, are not effective, except in so far as they may serve to arm overpowering numbers of Chinese. But you mark my word for it, we are on the eve of the most terrific world-upheaval of modern times."

There has been a massacre by Turkish soldiery in the Sasson district of Armenia. It is reported that a whole village of 800 inhabitants has been swept away. The Porte at first scouted the truth of the report, then agreed to send a commission of inquiry, which was followed by an intimation that no commission would be appointed. Probably owing to the difficulty of quieting public opinion; the announcement is now made by Reuter's correspondent at Constantinople, that a committee will shortly leave for the unfortunate district.

The Son.

Jesus the Christ is not the second of three persons in the Godhead. He is the FIRST of the 144,000 sons of God to be developed or created anew out of children of a mortal race by means of the Spirit of truth. For this reason he is styled:—

"My first-born." Psa. lxxxix. 27.

"The first-begotten." Heb. i. 6.

"The first-begotten of the dead." Rev. i. 5.

"The beginning of the creation of God." Rev. iii. 14.

"The first-born of every creature." Col. i. 15.

"The first-born from the dead." Col. i. 18.

"The forerunner." Heb. vi. 20.

"The first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. xv. 20.

"I looked, and lo a lamb stood on the Mount Sion, and with him an hundred and forty-four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads." Rev. xiv. 1.

"Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born of many brethren." Rom. viii. 29.

"It became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things in bringing many sons into glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings, for both he who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren." Heb. ii. 10-12.

"He (the Son) is the head of the body, the ecclesia, who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead,—that among all he might have the preeminence." Col. i. 18, 19.

"Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him." 1 John iii. 2.

"The Lord Jesus Christ shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii. 20, 21.

"The earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." Rom. viii. 19.

"Behold I and the children which God hath given me." Heb. ii. 13.

"As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." 1 Cor. xv. 49.

(Read at Indiana Conference.)

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I want to say a word to you though I have never seen your faces. We belong to the same dear Savior. The same dear God is our God. We have the same blessed hope, and are working toward the same end,—"the hastening of the coming of the day of God." We love and pray for one another. Our hearts' desire is that each dear one may be kept true to his Captain, till the battle is won, and the golden crown is placed upon his brow.

How can we be true? By sitting down, a laggard at the wayside, a drone in the great hive of busy workers? Never would the kingdom come with such soldiers as these. To "hold the fort" each watcher must be at his post. All are needed; no pass must be left ungarded. What are you doing for Jesus, brother? In all your daily labor are you thinking how the Master's cause may be advanced? Are you counting your gains as so many precious talents to be invested, that his truth may be sounded out, and dear, perishing souls won for his cause and his army? Do you lay by in store something of all that you earn, that you may help to forward every [illegible] He who sincerely loves Jesus, will think it a delightful privilege to do this. He will be ready to give for evangelistic work, without being asked. He will plan that he may be ready to give, just as he plans to be ready to supply his family with needful food and clothing. How blessed it is to give when we think of what the results may be! How blessed it is to work; to be in our places in the Sunday service, in Sunday school, in prayer meeting, in family worship, in faithful personal effort.

O may such be your lives! May you receive showers of blessing at this present Conference. May each dear one be made stronger, and more able to endure. For the day of the Lord is near, it hasteth greatly. It is nearer than any of us are aware. Marvelous things are happening. God is working fast. He is in the battles that are being fought in the far away east. It is the beginning of the end. We can trust while the whole world is afraid. We know in whom we have believed. Be faithful to the end, not only in saying but in doing, "keeping that which has been committed to your trust," "warning every man and teaching every man." "The Lord himself give you peace always," and "preserve you unto his heavenly kingdom."

Dear ones of like precious faith:

I feel so overjoyed about our good meeting that I must write to you through our dear old RESTITUTION that we may all enjoy it together. At the time our Conference convened I was feeling very much down-hearted over the departure of my father and brother, C. E. Hatch, for southern California; brother came out here on a visit and father went back with him. I feel that nothing could have encouraged me like this meeting has done. I feel more built up and more like working for the Master than I have for a long time, having heard such good discourses and conversing with those of like precious faith whom I used to meet in my younger days when father and I used to travel together and also those whom I had not met before. How much we enjoyed the discourses from our ministers we will never just be able to tell. There were those we never had expected to meet in this life and very likely would not have met them if the Conference had not convened here. We trust we may hear their voices again and that they may be spared to proclaim God's precious truths until his Son shall return and reward their faithful and untiring efforts. I can say for my husband and myself, we never enjoyed a meeting better, it is the first Conference meeting he ever attended, but we trust it will not be the last we will attend. There were no additions to our band of believers but we feel confident that the good seed was sown that will later reap a good harvest. I think one and all enjoyed the meeting and the weather was delightful. I wish the isolated ones could have such a feast, but dear ones if we are faithful until the end, it will be one endless enjoyable meeting. O let us strive to be in that throng that will sing praises in that glorious land where there is no sadness of any kind to mar our happiness and where partings will no more be known. Pray for us that we may be accounted worthy to enter that glorious kingdom.

Your Sister waiting the return of the Nobleman from the far country,

AZUBAH M. SCHOONS.

On the night of September 3, Bro. John Foore preached his closing sermon at this place, Morse Mill, Mo., having given us eleven very interesting and instructive discourses during the previous week. The attendance was fair and the undivided attention paid by the congregation was proof of their interest in those splendid Bible lessons. Quite a number pronounced their belief and five of them were willing to come out and "put on Christ," by being lead up to the water and buried by baptism. Brother Foore also assisted us in organizing a Sunday school, which consists of about thirty-five members. If any of the brethren are passing through this part of the State we will gladly welcome you in our midst, should you find it convenient to stop with us.

Your Sister in Christ,

MAY WAGNE.

Poor Italy.

Poor Italy! Her troubles are multitudinous and great. The pope's special organ at Rome, the "Osservatore Romano," recently stated that the late King Humbert had thought of giving up again the city of Rome to the Papal Hierarchy—that is, restoring it to the temporal and political sovereignty of the pope. This has been vigorously denied by the political leaders, and may be said to bear the stamp of untruthfulness on its face. But the clerical journals have been instructed to repeat the statement, and to give confirmatory details. According to this account, King Humbert some months before his death wrote to Cardinal Giuseppe Prisco, Archbishop of Naples, requesting that a trustworthy priest be sent to hear his confession. A priest was sent, but absolution was refused unless Humbert would agree to abdicate and to give up Rome. The king asked for time to consider, as he was anxious to receive the sacrament, and, according to the clerical version, "it was this communication to the priest that induced the Holy See to grant Christian burial." This does not say that King Humbert had decided to surrender the city to the pope, and remove his capital to some other place, but only that he was meditating it. In fact he had no more power to make such surrender of Rome to the pope than President McKinley has to make a similar transfer of Washington. Rome is the capital of United Italy by the action of the nation, and such it will remain. But the pope and his advisers think that now, when a new and young king has been suddenly raised to the throne, is a good time to re-open the intrigue for the restoration of temporal power. We are told, therefore, that "a circular note from the Vatican to the Catholic Powers (France, Austria, Spain, etc.) declares that so long as Italy contests the rights of the Holy See, the pope will only recognize Victor Emmanuel (the new king of Italy) as king of Sardinia. The note appeals to the Powers to relieve the pope from an intolerable situation, declaring that the condition of the Papacy under Italian rule is steadily growing worse, and that none of the Papal rights over Rome or the Provinces which composed the patrimony of St. Peter are renounced." This circular note shows that the new king is not disposed to surrender any of his rights or the rights of his people. Otherwise there would be no necessity for issuing it.—Baptist Commonwealth.

The Nations and the Jews

One of the delegates at the Zionist congress in London made a statement, according to report, that, if true, will have the utmost effect on the future of Zionism, and, for that matter, upon the coming history of the entire Jewish race. This delegate, who was from Philadelphia, is said to have made this statement:

"I am in a position to know that our general committee is in possession of diplomatic secrets showing the scheme is favored by many European governments which might be supposed to oppose our occupation of Jerusalem. These are inclined to believe we might not only solve the Jewish but the Eastern question simultaneously. I do not know that we are yet ready for a charter, but I believe it may come at any time."

ITEMS.

While the representatives of the powers were besieged in Peking, and the attention of the world was centered on the efforts to rescue them, Russia was conducting a campaign of her own along the Amur river, which has until the present at least, formed the boundary between Siberia and China. As a result of this campaign the right bank, or Chinese side of the river, has been conquered by the Russians, and it now looks as though this stream would no longer form a boundary line, but lie in Russian territory. In other words, it is thought that Russia has added another strip of China to her Asiatic territory by annexing Manchuria. This action is practically conceded by many observers, though as yet no formal announcement relative to such acquisition of territory has been made.

The Philadelphia North American says: As the leading spirit in the peace and arbitration of the world, the United States seems to be doing its share in war, if its performances are to be judged by the money it is spending. In round numbers the government has appropriated for the present fiscal year $115,000,000 for the army, $7,700,000 for fortifications, $6,580,000 for the military academy, $63,000,000 for the navy, $9,000,000 for urgent deficiency, war, navy, etc., altogether a sum exceeding $200,000,000. With the pension bill of $145,000,000 a year, and the millions of interest on war expenditures, the total comes to nearly a million dollars a day for every day of the year.

Russian merchants and manufacturers are becoming alarmed over the activity of Americans in Siberia. The Russians had looked forward to a great market in the East when the Siberian railroad should be finished, but find the Americans are also on the ground and competing successfully for the trade of that part of the world. Agents of Russian firms with branches in Siberia reported to their home offices this American invasion of what Russians regarded as their own territory, and forthwith a committee was appointed to appeal to the government for protection from the Yankees. This may result in checking the development of our Asiatic commerce.

"The Holy Spirit can not live in the heart of a coward. When he abides, men and women become brave and noble and unworldly and unselfish. Cowardly Peter becomes a moral giant when he comes in to abide. Whoever is a spiritual coward, will be made a heroic power when he is received. He saves from cowardice."

We are not our own; but we are bought with a price; and nothing short of an unreserved surrender of self-interest to God's interest in humanity is moral or just. Not to be self-sacrificing in other's service is justice. To be unloving, even to the unlovable, is to be ungodly.—Geo. D. Herron.

Poetry.

A Song of Trust.

I cannot always see the way that leads
To heights above;
I sometimes quite forget he leads me on
With hand of love.
But yet I know the path must lead me to
Immanuel's land,
And when I reach life's summit, I shall know
And understand.

I can not always trace the onward course
My ship must take;
But, looking backward, I behold afar
Its shining wake,
Illumined with God's light of love; and so
I onward go,
In perfect trust that he who holds the helm
The course must know.

I can not always see the plan on which
He builds my life.
For oft the sound of hammers, blow on blow,
The noise of strife,
Comes me till I quite forget he knows
And oversees
And that in all details with his good plan
My life agrees.

I can not always know and understand
The Master's rule;
I can not always do the tasks he gives
In life's hard school;
But I am learning with his help to solve
Them one by one,
And when I can not understand, to say,
"Thy will be done!"

Australian Letter. No 3.

After passing Samoa we were deluged with tropical rains. How useless and futile they seem in this world of water, but they cool the atmosphere and relieve the monotony. Nothing is more majestic and awful than the gathering of a storm in mid-ocean; when the windows of heaven are opened and the fountains of the great deep are broken up.

We have been isolated from the world so long that we feel it is standing still while we sail on forever and a day. But one morning, February fourteenth, we are awakend from our Rip Van Winkle sleep.

At Auckland we join hands again with the world, for we here come within reach of the cable. Long before we are permitted to approach the dock a row boat is hailed and anxious inquiries made for news. Soon the tossing of hats and exclamations of satisfaction announce that: "Ladysmith still holds out."

Here a new and very droll experience awaits us. We are again impressed with the fact that the Briton will conform to the letter of the law, though the spirit may be extinguished in the process.

After much answering and reanswering of signals we learn that we can not go ashore without inspection by the Health Department. We now felt a glow of satisfaction that our Captain had been wise enough to keep the vessel a full foot from touching the dock at Honolulu, and we were sure of clearance, having simply passed an infected port.

The sailors were drawn up in line on deck and the passengers in the dining saloons, and amid much laughter and bandying of jokes answered to roll call. The bare possibility of quarantine took the pith out of the jokes, and every one breathed more freely when the gauntlet was passed in safety and we were pronounced all right and ready to begin our preparations for a day on shore.

The prospect was anything but alluring, for the day promised to be murky and disagreeable. Not being in the habit of stopping for weather we went ashore as soon as possible. By the time we had found a place where we could breakfast the sky had cleared up somewhat. We were in a climate differing but little from our own. As the season was reversed it reminded us of a windy, dull day in Chicago.

The slight difference in customs and use of the English began to make itself felt, at once.

After coming in collision with several New Zealanders we notice the sign "keep to the left," and valiantly try to overcome the habit of a life time, but find like other habits, it can not be done in a single day.

As we pass up the long pier which leads to Quay street from the wharf, we meet a procession of carting vehicles. These clumsy one-horse affairs look like nothing else and are unique in ugliness, wasted horse-power and jolting capacity. They look like nothing American unless it be a hand-cart turned backward and hitched in very close proximity to the horse. The occupant sits directly over the wheels and gets the full variety of sensations produced by the topography of the ground.

We soon make the acquaintance of the bus or van, a compromise between a horse-car and an old-time English stage-coach in which there is no conductor, but on alighting each passenger must pass around to the front and pass up his three pence over the muddy wheels to the driver on his perch several feet above. We find we have left the street-car behind and will henceforth travel in trams while in Australasia. The tram is a compromise between a bus and a street-car. Also that we are on the foot-path as sidewalks are not of this world.

Among the buildings the first to attract attention are the dirty-looking Coffee Palaces which are not at all palatial in appearance, and in which tea is almost the exclusive drink. The bill of fare will soon convince the most skeptical that sheep-raising is carried on extensively in this corner of the universe. Passing these by we come upon the more pretentious hotels of Queen and Victoria Streets, from the windows of which large gilt letters stare at us through a screen of paint. We receive the impression that the Bar and the Bar Parlor is the most conspicuous institution of the Antipodes.

We see a window labeled "Private Parlor," and thinking it a waiting-room we step in to rest until dinner time. Here we come in contact for the first time with the British Bar Maid, who upon seeing us enter, obligingly comes forward and asks what we will take? Thus we learn that a Parlor is a private drinking-room. We should have found the Drawing Room on the second floor where also are located the Dining Rooms in all the best hotels.

We spent an hour wandering in and out of by-ways into back streets and peeping into the queer little shops. They have no stores. The whole front of the box-like room is removed every morning, so they have the appearance of being stalls and so overflowing that they seem likely to empty their contents upon the foot-path at any minute. In fact, in many places one's steps must be picked with difficulty in order to avoid trampling the profusion of merchandise spilling itself on every side, while in the back the shops were comparatively bare. Very interesting were the new varieties of vegetables and fruits. On account of its name, perhaps, the passion-fruit attracted most attention. The relish for it must be acquired. Taken directly from the tree there is a rankness in the taste that is not to the liking of one accustomed to the milder flavor of our northern fruits.

We procured some delicious white grapes which we learned from the dealer can be cultivated only under glass, as the climate is not conducive to their culture. The peaches we did not like, but the pears and plums far excelled those of our western coast in richness of flavor. Strawberries were large and lustious. We did not take time to imitate the fashionable ladies of Auckland, who go to the gardens in the suburbs and wait for a plate of berries to be picked from the vines. They are served in the adjoining Tea Rooms. The berries are buried in a thick paste of whipped cream and powdered sugar.

The general appearance of Auckland reminds one, for some indefinable reason, of a Canadian town.

For sturdiness of manner and feature there is a strong resemblance in the people of these two British dependencies.

The radical difference in the vegetation soon removes the impression. On every hand are acacias, pepper-wood, eucalyptus, palms and gum-trees; very different in foliage from the rhododendrons and maples of our northern neighbors.

The low houses with tile roofs and verandas speak of comfort more than elegance. The high sounding name with which each was adorned being a tribute to the motherland.

British conservatism is manifested in the great precaution taken to prevent intrusion. A little yard or patch of a few feet of ground is surrounded by a high wall, of wood, stone, or iron, the heavy front gate being secured by a padlock. How discouraging to a book agent.

We dropped into the Art Gallery and Museum for a few moments to see the large and interesting collection of specimens and paintings relating to the aboriginal life of New Zealand. The implements used indicate a high degree of intelligence. Perhaps the highest of the aboriginal races. One painting "The Landing of the Maoris" especially invited our attention. In the gaunt horribleness of its starving crew, it is only surpassed by The Flagellants.

Here and there in our strolls we met a Maori but all in the civilized dress. Those we saw were stalwart, fine looking fellows. The women we met on the street were less attractive, being cheaply dressed in unbecoming combinations of color. We have since seen some of magnificent form and presence. Terangepar is of queenly beauty and dignity as well as queen of song. Her princely cloak made of feathers taken from millions of birds is of priceless value.

Mount Eden towered gloomily in the distance, inviting us to scale its height. We took a tram and in a short time found ourselves deposited at the foot instead of the summit as we had expected. We remembered Lady Macbeth, and "Screwing our courage to the sticking point," began the ascent.

A spiral, pony path leads to the top of the mountain. We frequently took advantage of the rustic seats for the double purpose of looking down upon the scene below and gaining strength for the task above. The grandeur of the view fully repaid us for our arduous efforts. On one side we could look across the plain which stretched six miles away toward Tasmar Sea, and think that we discerned the water through the hazy atmosphere. From another point of view a beautiful fertile plain spread out before us, where are located the race courses and other places of amusement. Turning again the city lay deathlike and misty below us, the public buildings and cathedrals lifting their towers and spires heavenward out of the gloom.

Out on the harbor boats were gliding about aimlessly like phantoms of the waves, while beyond could be faintly descried in the distance the mountains of North Shore. A picture never to be forgotten.

Higher up we paused to look down upon the wooded slope of Mount Eden and admire the plume-like tops of the trees, now swayed like undulations of the ocean waves.

We had been at the highest point only long enough to peer with an inquiring glance into the extinct crater showing by the lava that it had once been a scene of violent activity, when the wind which had been angrily increasing in fury as we advanced upward, now became a perfect gale, and a cloud suddenly burst over our heads. We could fully realize what it was to be literally "Up among the clouds."

We found refuge behind a ledge of the crater where we enjoyed the fury of the storm until it abated sufficiently for us to descend the mountain, and seek the Moana once more. With reluctant steps we went down Quay Street and lingered as long as possible on the wharf, these half dozen hours having given us but the desire to return at some future time and visit this "Corinth of the South Pacific."

We weighed anchor at three o'clock in the afternoon. As the sky had cleared we had a delightful evening on deck. Though we were doubling back on our course for two hundred miles it was new to us, as we had passed it in the night. The shores of the Coromandel Peninsula could be seen for a long distance. The pilot carefully picked his way between Great Barrier and Little Barrier Islands.

Placing my deck chair within easy hearing distance of "The Old Captain" who "knew every foot of the sea" I listened while he graphically described the wreck of a vessel on the shore of Great Barrier Island we were then passing. The awfulness of the scene as witnessed from his boat and his inability to rescue the hundreds of drowning passengers whose bodies were washed ashore in the morning.

"The Captain was a fine sailor when I knew him" ventured a dilapidated old soldier-sailor who had figured in the Crimea and the Sepoy Rebellion and was now carrying his scars and wooden leg on a journey around the world. "So he was," responded the Old Captain, "but he had been drinking before he left port, and gave orders to see how near they could go ashore without foundering." The under officers protested in vain. The impression became so realistic that I moved to the other side of the deck leaving the old men deep in a discussion of the right of mates to disobey orders under such circumstances.

We kept so far out to sea that the forests of gigantic Kauri Trees looked like a green carpet on the mountain slopes. The smoke filtering through the tops reminded us that thousands of workmen were buried in these depths digging the solidified turpentine deposited by the burning of these forests in by-gone ages.

Night closed in with a storm and our thoughts returned to the sea. After the dangers of North Cape were safely passed and we no longer thought of the possibility of a hurricane we began to feel that the journey was nearing its close. Time flew on rapid wings. Every one seemed to feel that the moments were precious.

Conversation never lagged. Early in the morning and late in the evening hours, newly acquired friends were exchanging regrets at the soon coming separation, making notes in memorandum books and getting addresses for possible meetings in the future.

At day break on the balmy Sunday morning of February eighteenth we join the eager expectant crowd on deck and find ourselves in front of Sydney Heads.

Coming through the imposing entrance into this remarkable harbor for the first time in the early dawn of a mid-summer morning is enchanting. It is like "The realization of some half forgotten dream." We think of Andalusian days as dimly defined spires and domes greet us in the limped uncertain light. The mystic boats gliding before us are Argonautic expeditions. We wind in and out of the sinuous curves of this multiplied harbor until we reach Darling Harbor.

With subdued though joyful hearts we step for the first time on the shore of this Sunny Southland.

Conference Report.

The Indiana Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith met this year for its annual session with the Church of God at Hillisburg, Ind., continuing from Sept. 6-9, inclusive.

Bro. Austin, President, opened the meeting with devotional services, after which, in the absence of the Secretary, the Conference chose A. H. Zilmer as Secretary pro. tem.

The following churches were represented by delegates: Argos, Plymouth, Bracken, North Union, Rensselaer, Hillisburg, and Gospel Grove. There were also present two delegates from the Green Grove Church, organized last Spring, who requested that the Church be received into the Conference, which request was granted.

Visiting brethren and delegates were present from the following places: Plymouth, Argos, Pierceton, Burr Oak, Denver, Indianapolis, Windfall, Rensselaer, and Green Grove.

The ministers in attendance were: J. L. Wince, D. T. Halstead, Chas. Fish, F. L. Austin, G. W. Smith, S. T. Hook and A. H. Zilmer.

Increase in membership was reported as follows: Argos, 8; Rensselaer, 2; Green Grove, 1; Hillisburg, 10; Burr Oak, 2. At the last named place the brethren are engaged in building a new house of worship. Altogether there seems to be an increased activity among the churches, and correspondingly better results. The ministers present also gave reports of their labors in the past year, which showed that some planted, and others watered, while God gave the increase. Surely our labors in the Lord have not been in vain.

A. H. Zilmer and G. W. Smith gave a report of their efforts at the city of Remington. They began on the 15th of August and continued till Sept. 2nd. Though there was some prejudice the attendance was quite good and considerable interest manifested. As a result of the meeting, two persons were baptized.

The following is the financial report of A. H. Zilmer: receipts from tent work, from Conference, July 5, $25.00; at meeting, $22.45; total $47.45. Expenses at meeting: for tent, etc., $25.25; paid to G. W. Smith, $15.25; total, $40.50. Due 17 days work, $34.00; balance on hand, $6.95; balance due, $27.05.

Following is the report of G. W. Smith: receipts from Conference, $10.00; money received at tent, $15.25; total, $25.25. Expenses: car fare $2.80; modering, $.05; total, $2.85. 20 days work at $1.25 per day, $25.00; total $27.85; balance due $2.10.

On motion an order is to be drawn on the Treasurer to compensate Bro. Zilmer at the rate agreed upon, $2.00 per day. On motion an order is to be drawn on the Treasurer to pay Bro. Smith the balance due him, $2.10.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, D. T. Halstead, Rensselaer; First Vice President, Wm. M. Huffer, of Michigantown; Second Vice President, John L. Wince, of Pierceton; Secretary, Ezra K. Baruhill, of Plymouth; Treasurer, Thomas O. Tuber, of Argos.

A previously appointed Committee on Ways and Means, consisting of D. T. Halstead, Wm. Ruilsback, A. R. Underwood, J. L. Wince, W. M. Huffer, W. H. Thompson, and Leonard Osborne, made the following report, which was, upon motion, adopted:

"To the Conference of the Congregations of the Church of God assembled. We, your Committee on Ways and Means, beg leave to submit for your consideration, the following matters, to wit:

1st, How best to secure the interest and active co-operation of the Brotherhood generally in the Conference work, and especially in Evangelical work in uncultivated fields?

2nd, How best to raise funds according to the ability of the members?

3rd. How to most successfully use Evangelical funds when raised?

We therefore would submit the following resolutions for your consideration and adoption, as expressive of your wish to be carried into action:

1st, RESOLVED, That past experience demonstrates that preaching to those in Christ has been entirely too much one-sided. I.e., What God has promised to do for us, and leaving entirely too much untaught, just what we are required to do on our part in order to secure those promises. Thus creating an interesting in the former, and very little in the latter. That we deem the preaching of the Good News, Repentance, and Baptism of no more importance than clearly teaching what constitutes the new life (way of living) in Christ, inasmuch as this constitutes the fruit-bearing of the branch. ("I am the Vine, ye are the branches," says Jesus). That both in preaching and literature we earnestly recommend and urge that the fruit-bearing be kept more vividly to the front; thereby creating more interest in co-operating with Christ in letting the light shine ("Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus). Thus creating an interest in this behalf to an extent that it will be a pleasure to use of the means the Lord has entrusted us with, and a willingness in each and everyone to co-operate according to the extent of our means.

2nd, How to raise funds according to the several ability of the members?

RESOLVED, That the Apostolic teaching and practice, to wit: "Every one of you lay by in store as God has prospered him," be suggested as an essential part of the new life in Christ. If we turn sorrowfully away from his requirements, it is to our own peril. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me," and again, "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings." Therefore to this end, we recommend as the best way, not only to arouse each congregation to equal co-operation according to ability, but to accomplish this, to present the opportunity of co-operation to each member of the congregations, which way will not impose a burden on any.

RESOLVED, That to this end first, the congregations of Indiana should not consider they have raised Evangelical funds until they have at least sufficient to keep one man in the field at work all the while, and also enough to send someone in response to urgent calls from places where too weak to help themselves. The ability financially to do this is not wanting, and even to keep two men in the field.

RESOLVED FURTHER That inasmuch as the Conference Board have an over abundance of labor to perform, that they be relieved from this seeing after the expenditure of the Evangelical fund after raising the same, and this Conference by appointment constitute a separate and distinct Evangelical board for this purpose. That said Board be constituted official members, any two of whom, with the President or Chairman, shall constitute a quorum to do business, all of whom shall be selected apart from the ministers, thus guarding against any possible suspicion of desire of preferment or of desire to have anything promulgated other than the gospel and its obedience.

This Board is to obtain information from over the State where best to work and in conjunction with the Evangelist direct accordingly. The means from each individual of the congregations to be paid to the Secretary thereof, by him sent to the Secretary of the Conference, taking his receipt therefor, and he in like manner to hand it to the Treasurer, who shall disburse the same by paying over to the Secretary of the Evangelical Board, as ordered by said Board; all of which is respectfully submitted by your Committee, D. T. Halstead, Wm. Ruilsback, W. H. Thompson, A. R. Underwood, John L. Wince, L. [illegible] Osborn, Wm. M. Huffer."

The Committee on Ways and Means made the following nominations for the Evangelical Board, which were confirmed by an unanimous vote: T. O. Tabor, of Argos; Benj. Harris, of Rensselaer; Wm. M. Huffer, of Michigantown; E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth; Cyrus C. Evans, Hedrick.

It was ordered that Bro. Halstead continue in his work of raising means for the Evangelical Fund.

Upon motion Bro. T. O. Taber was constituted Chairman, and Bro. Wm. M. Huffer Secretary of the Evangelical Board.

It was moved and carried that in case of vacancies in Evangelical Board, the Executive Board of Conference, be authorized and empowered to fill such vacancies.

Motion carried that the appointment of Evangelists be deferred until the November Conference.

The Evangelical Board was empowered to answer calls for Evangelistic work, if means for this purpose are on hand.

Requests for Evangelistic work were made by members of the Church of God residing at South Bend, Indiana, and also by the Church at Inwood.

Ministerial certificates were granted to the following: D. T. Halstead, Rensselaer; J. L. Wince, Pierceton; Chas. Fish, Argos; H. F. Cordill, Plymouth; F. L. Austin, Argos; G. W. Smith, Culver; A. H. Zilmer, Rensselaer.

The request of the Church at Plymouth for the next Conference (some time in November) was accepted by a unanimous vote.

This was a very pleasant Conference session. The brethren and sisters at Hillisburg did all in their power to make those from a distance welcome and at home among them, and these will long remember the kindness that was so generously bestowed upon them. Also the business sessions, that were held on Friday and Saturday afternoons, were pleasant and harmonious, and there was more business transacted at this Conference than at any former Conference in a number of years. The Conference gave a vote of thanks to Bro. Austin, who so efficiently served as President for several years past and very reluctantly acceded to his wish to be excused from serving any longer in this capacity.

"RESOLVED, That we as a Conference appreciate and hereby tender our thanks to Bro. Austin for his unfailing work and untiring effort to forward the Conference work as President of the Conference for the past year; and we hereby request that Bro. Austin suffer his name to be used for selection as President for the coming Conference year."

The preaching was done by Bros. J. L. Wince and F. L. Austin, and A. H. Zilmer, and embraced practical as well as doctrinal subjects.

Every one went from the meeting feeling that the time had been well and profitably spent.

"God be with you till we meet again."

F. L. AUSTIN, Pres.
A. H. ZILMER, Sec. pro. tem.

Request.

Once again we will ask of the dear readers of THE RESTITUTION to forward such good literature they feel disposed to contribute for distribution. We wish to gather what gospel truths we can and sow the good seed where we believe and trust it will fall in good ground and bring forth fruits an hundred fold. We have but a short stay at home and the offerings you wish to bestow to the Master's use must be prompt. A goodly number responded promptly at the other call, and the hours we spent in hurling the gospel of Jesus were pleasant and we trust a harvest is springing forth along some of the by-paths and sin swept streets of Pueblo. Our sowings will be along the winding banks of the Arkansas River, and we intend to set sail from Arkansas City, Kan., near Oct. 1, on our way to New Orleans by way of boat, and it will afford us many opportunities and we are told, "Go sow by all waters," and we pray the refreshing showers from Jehovah's throne may send forth that guiding care that may lead some one into the way of life. Address Oxford, Kan.

A. J. DAVIS.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Selections.

Little boats always totter about on the surface of the water, going all ways, as it happens, and overturning in a breath; while the great ship sinks deeply in and goes steadily on. The cause of its steadiness is its depth. So abiding in the great truths of God gives us steadfastness of motion. Under all the pressure of error and unbelief and false doctrine, we are abounding in the work of the Lord. We are not tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Eph. iv. 14. It is a great thing to take the truth, and hold to it. It is a great thing to know error and let it alone. Holding on to the fundamentals of truth and seeking God's help, thereof is sure to come into the light. Everything by turns and nothing long, what growth—what progress can be hoped for?

It is right for us to care what others think of us. The man who does not care for the opinions of others is not the man to influence others, or to be worthy of the sympathy or respect of others. But when the choice fairly comes between doing what is right or doing what others think we ought to do, the opinion of others must be defied by us, however much we may regret the necessity of losing the good will of our fellows. What God thinks of our conduct is of more importance than what is thought of it by all other beings in the universe.

All the mightiest leaders of human progress—the Pauls, Luthers, Calvins, Wesleys, Edwardses, Wilberforces, Lincolns, and Gladstones—have been open-eyed learners who have watched and waited to discover what God was saying to them, and what God would have them to do. The sun never changes his place; but for us everything depends on whether we live in the daylight, or down in a cellar.—T. L. Cuyler.

Perfect obedience does not need to know why. It is a blessed privilege to be trusted to obey God without being told why. God wants to see a perfect faith in us that will not ask why. Parents do not consider their children obedient if they hesitate till they are told why. If we always saw the reason, we would never have a chance to grow in faith.

If those who owe us would remit, we will appreciate the favor.

Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

"Out of" and "Into."

"He brought us out.....that he might bring us in." Deut. vi. 23.

Out of the distance and darkness so deep,
Out of the settled and perilous sleep;
Out of the region and shadow of death,
Out of its foul and pestilent breath;
Out of the bondage and wearying chains,
Out of companionship ever with stains:
Into the light and glory of God,
Into the holiest made clean by blood;
Into his arms,—the embrace and the kiss,
Into the the seeps of ineffable bliss;
Into the quiet, the infinite calm,
Into the place of the song and the psalm.
Wonderful love, that has wrought all for me!
Wonderful work, that has thus set me free!
Wonderful ground upon which I have come!
Wonderful tenderness, welcoming home!

Out of disaster and ruin complete,
Out of the struggle and dreary defeat;
Out of my sorrow and burden and shame,
Out of the evils too fearful to name;
Out of my guilt and the criminal's doom,
Out of the dreading, the terror, the gloom:
Into the sense of forgiveness and rest,
Into inheritance with all that is blest.
Into a righteous and permanent peace,
Into the grandest and fullest release,
Into the comfort without an alloy,
Into a perfect and confident joy.
Wonderful holiness, bringing to light!
Wonderful grace, putting all out of sight!
Wonderful wisdom, devising the way!
Wonderful power, that nothing could stay!

Out of the horror of being alone,
Out, and forever, of being my own:
Out of the hardness of heart and will,
Out of the longings which nothing could fill;
Out of the bitterness, madness and strife,
Out of myself, and of all I called "life;"
Into communion with Father and Son,
Into the sharing of all that Christ won;
Into the vessels full to the brim,
Into the having of all things with him,
Into Christ Jesus there ever to dwell,
Into more blessings than words can tell.
Wonderful lowliness, drinking my cup!
Wonderful purpose, that ne'er give me up!
Wonderful patience, that waited so long!
Wonderful glory, to which I belong!

Out of my poverty, into his wealth,
Out of my sickness, into pure health:
Out of the false and into the true,
Out of the Old Man, into the New,
Out of what measures the full depth of "Lost!"
Out of it all, and at infinite cost!
Into what must with that cost correspond,
Into the union which nothing can part,
Into what satisfies his, and my, heart!
Into the deepest of joys ever had—
Into the gladness of making God glad!
Wonderful Person, whose face I'll behold!
Wonderful story, then all to be told!
Wonderful all the dread way that he trod!
Wonderful end, that he brought me to God!

Paper Read at the Indiana Conference.

"When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

This language was spoken by our Savior in the form of a question and alludes to all individuals and nations. When the Son of Man first made his advent into the world he came in the form of a servant and many rejected him, and when he saw how they rejected the mighty work that he had done while among them, how they overlooked all signs that marked his first advent into the world, and above all how they rejected his mighty teachings he could well ask this question, Shall he find faith on the earth when he comes again?

Let our minds go back to when he was on earth and see how he was always found with the suffering and those in trouble; he was always among those who needed his help; his mission was to bring light into this dark, lost world; he came to seek and to save the lost. How completely he carried out his mission when here the first time. After finishing his work he took the keys of the tomb and went to his Father. Those who have wished to doubt his Word, have found a wide field in which to doubt and a broad road to perdition; while those who have wished to believe, have ever found an everlasting Rock upon which to rest their faith.

As we look over our past life with its varied experiences, its joys and sorrows, its battles and victories and remember that amid them all the Lord has ever been near and upheld us by his strong arm we are lead to exclaim in the language of the Psalmist, "Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness." He is my refuge and my fortress. "My God, in him will I trust."

Are there not some here who have not at some time during the years that are past into eternity, had golden opportunities which have been neglected and which as he looks back upon them today send a pang of regret to his heart? Dear friends, let this be a time of heart-searching and self-examination, and as we enter into new work for the Master may we realize more fully the mighty responsibility resting upon us individually, (and in the name and strength of him who has promised to be with us to the end) that we ought always to pray and not to faint. Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward. For ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. By some people, the evidences of the soon coming of Christ are considered insufficient to base faith upon. But the testimony and acts of one man in the case of Noah condemned the people destroyed by the flood. The evidence then was sufficient, otherwise the world would not have been condemned. But a hundred times more convincing evidences come pouring in upon us, that the day of the Lord is near, and hasteth greatly. But some will say our terrestrial globe moves onward in its course, as it has since the foundation of the earth. The seasons come and go in their turn. From the heavens come the gentle rain, the life-giving sun shine, the lightning's terror and the cyclone's deathly path, old ocean moans and lashes the shore as of old. The mighty river systems flow onward in their mad rush to the sea, as on the day of creation. The busy world turns neither to the right nor left in its seemingly endless search for riches and worldly honor. Man succeeds man at mill, in the factory, in the office, and at the plow; one by one they go to their long sleep; but onward still moves the gigantic machinery of old earth. Why should there be a change? What signs are there of Christ's soon coming?

Listen friends—there would be no need of a change if our world was sinless and its people were all lovers of the true God, but such is not the case. The devil has full sway; sin exists on every hand. The nations of earth are corrupt from the height of royalty down to the humblest peasant. Our large cities are the ideal homes of his Satanic majesty. Then ask what need of a change? Christ will come because he is the enemy of sin. He will put down the corrupt governments of earth, and establish peace, placing in their stead his own glorious kingdom. Hear what his Word promises, "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." Dan. ii. 44. Christ is coming again and coming soon, because God's Word cannot prove false. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my Word shall not pass away."

The assuring prophecies relating to the personal return of the Lord Jesus Christ to the earth are rapidly reaching completion of fulfilment, and soon his judgment car surrounded by an innumerable host of angels will speed its way down across the far stretching skies. The distinct rumblings of its swiftly rolling wheels, plainly bespeak the approach of the Judge of all the earth, as he rides in majesty the pathway of the unfolding heavens. Placing our ears at the lips of the Prophets, listening to their words of inspiration, "we almost" hear the shoutings of the angelic host. Looking about us scanning the condition of the government, and of the home life, and of business and finance, and of the Church, we see as plainly the sure precursors of the impending doom of the unpenitent. Surely, surely, we are rapidly nearing the end.

The saints can but sigh and pray for it. Like Job they can cry out for one hundred and twelve years and he the presence of God. Like David they died, (under sentence of death).
can not be satisfied until they awake in his likeness. Even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. Rom. viii. 28. Our eyes are open for its visions, our ears are waiting to catch the sounds of the heavenly music, and our hearts are beating in fond anticipation of its infinite joy. Our appetites are growing sharp for the marriage supper. We cry out for the living God and long to come into his presence.

In view of these facts may we be active in the preparation of ourselves to meet him; and not only active in our own preparation, but let us work with more zeal to prepare others. "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast plate of righteousness and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all taking the shield of faith, where ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. "For truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few." No news more welcome to the faithful than the announcement that the command has gone forth from the Lord to his angels, "Gather together unto me my elect from the four winds of heaven. The place of gathering has nothing but attraction. Jesus, the fairest among ten thousand, will be there. The throne of God and the Lamb, in the glory of which the sun disappears as the stars vanish in the light of day, will be there. The city of jasper and gold, whose builder and maker is God, will be there. The river of life, sparkling with his glory and flowing from his throne in infinite purity and peace, will be there. The tree of life, with its healing leaves and life-giving fruit will be there. Prophets, Apostles, and martyrs, the perfection of heavenly society will be there. Fields of living green, flowers that never fade, streams that never dry, fruits that never decay, crowns that never dim, harps that know no discord, and all comely things purified from sin will be there.

Brothers and sisters, let us fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life that we may drink from the life-giving fountain and thirst never more, bathe in its silvery spray and be refreshed. That we may walk in its golden sands, and feel we are no longer exiles. That we may exchange the cross for the crown and feel that our journey is done. That we may put off the rent garments of warfare, for the white robes of triumph, and feel that the conflicts are ended and the victory won. And let me say in conclusion to all that are present: Be watchful, be vigilant, for the shadows will never return a degree on your dial. When your watch is past, your record will be changeless, and sealed for the final judgment. Prepare to meet thy God, O ye servants of the Lord, for your day is ending, and the night in which no man can work, is drawing its curtains around you.

MRS. GEORGIA OSBORN.

Genesis. Chap. 5.

1. This is the book of the origin of mankind, on the day when God created Adam: According to God's magic created he him.

2. Male and female created he them, and blessed them; and he named his name Adam on the day when he created them.

3. And Adam lived two hundred and thirty years, and begot according to his idea, and according to his image, and named his name Seeth.

4. And the days which Adam lived after he had begotten Seeth became seven hundred years and he begot sons and daughters.

5. And all the days which Adam lived became nine hundred and thirty years and he died (under sentence of death).

6. And Seeth lived two hundred and five years, and begot Enoos.

7. And Seeth lived after he had begotten Enoos seven hundred and seven years, and begot sons and daughters.

8. And all the days of Seeth became nine hundred and twelve years and he died, (under sentence of death).

9. And Enoos lived one hundred and ninety years and begot Kainan: dibrels over the "f").

10. And Enoos lived after he had gotten Kainan seven hundred and fifteen years and begot sons and daughters.

11. And all the days of Enoos became ninehundred and five years and he died, (from a sentence or judiciaily).

12. Kainan lived one hundred and seventy years and begot Maleleel.

13. And Kainan lived after he had begotten Maleleel seven hundred and forty years and begot sons and daughters.

14. And all the days of Kainan became ninehundred and ten years and he died, (judicially).

15. And Maleleel lived one hundred and sixty-five years and begot Jared.

16. And Maleleel lived after he had begotten Jared seven hundred and thirty years and begot sons and daughters.

17. And all the days of Maleleel became eight hundred and ninety-five years and he died (judicially i. e. under the sentence pronounced upon Adam and his posterity).

18. And Jared lived one hundred and sixty years and begot Enooch.

19. And Jared lived after he had begotten Enooch eight hundred years and begot sons and daughters.

20. And all the days of Jared became nine hundred and sixty two years and he died, (the same as the rest, next to Mathusala in age).

21. And Enooch lived one hundred and sixty years and begot Mathousala.

22. And Enooch pleased God after he had begotten Mathousala for two hundred years and begot sons and daughters.

23. And all the days of Enooch became three hundred and sixty years.

24. And Enooch pleased God, and was not found because God had translated him.

25. And Mathousala lived one hundred and sixty-seven years and begot Lamech.

26. And Mathousala lived after he had begotten Lamech eight hundred and two years and begot sons and daughters.

27. And all the days of Mathousala which he lived became nine hundred and sixty-nine years and he died (the same way).

28. And Lamech lived one hundred and eighty-eight years and begot a son.

29. And named his name Nooe, saying, This one will give us an interval of rest from our works and from our sorrows and from the earth which the Lord God cursed. (He did, and the interval was "a flood").

30. And Lamech lived after he had begotten Nooe five hundred and sixty-five years and begot sons and daughters.

31. And all the days of Lamech become seven hundred and fifty-three years and he died, (judicially).

COMMENT.

This is a very important chapter in the divine order of revelation, and there is a great deal of evidence of tampering with the witness and alteration of the record in all the versions especially the C. V. and the R. V.

One clearly apparent alteration of the record and the one upon which the chronology of the whole Christian world has been based makes among other absurdities in the result Nooe and Habraam, living contemporaneously for fifty years. Another conclusion drawn is that we are now living in the 6th millennium of the human race on the earth when the record shows that we are in the closing period of the seventh, and that the next millennium will be an eighth, which it ought to be, according to the esoteric law of harmonies.

Ignoring the Kain genealogy, and we can safely do this, for the descendants were all wiped out in the flood, the divine record of humanity after Adam begins with Seeth or the "sifted seed" and each of the names in this chapter is significant in its order of the divine culture of this selected seed. The full exposition of this "divine culture" I gave some years ago in the columns of THE RESTITUTION, and I will now only repeat the interpretations of the names.

"Enoos," "Thrust in," that is as seed is thrust into the ground. "Kainan," "Renewed" as one renovates the soil at planting. "Maleleel," "made friable with mercy." "Jared," "made warm with the sun" (the Sun of righteousness meant). "Enoch," "Held in" (firmly rooted as grain is held when half grown) "Mathoosala" "Mercy learned" (the oldest man in the world ought to have learned it.) "Lamech" "weary waiting" (as the farmer does grow weary waiting for the crop to grow when he can do nothing further to promote it). Nooe "Apprehension" or "Gathering" (as of a crop, and God's crop is one man who apprehends his purpose and who has the courage of his conviction to become "a herald of righteousness" to a scoffing world.

The reader will observe that Adam was two hundred and thirty years old when he begot Seeth instead of one hundred and thirty in the R. V. and thirty in the C. V. and Enoos one hundred and ninety instead of ninety in R. V. And so on through this whole list upon which the human chronology is based. Compare and see for yourselves.

In the 24th verse instead of "Enoch walked with God and was not," R. V. it reads "Enoch pleased God and was not found," and instead of "For God took him," R. V., it reads "For God had translated him." This passage is quoted in Hebrews xi. 5, and "the translation" of Enooch given as the reason why "he did not see death." If it were true that Enoch "was not" as stated in the C. V. and R. V. then he not only was dead but annihilated and had no existence at all.

Notice the difference of reading in the 29th verse, for the statement contained in it is really a prophecy of the official career of the great patriarch Nooe. The flood gave the world a great "vacation," but there wasn't much "comfort" in it for the antediluvians I imagine.

The 32nd verse of this chapter in the C. V. and R. V. is part of the 1st verse of the text in the sixth chapter.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Conferences.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, in Michigan, will be held, the Lord willing, at the Tiffeny school house, Kalamazoo Co., Michigan, commencing Friday evening Oct. 5, 1900, and continue over the following Sunday. Tiffeny school house is 2 miles north of Vicksburg. Friends coming from the north reach Vicksburg via the Grand Rapids, and Indiana R. R. which leaves Grand Rapids at 12:30 P. M. and 1:50 P. M. Teams will meet all trains Friday and Saturday to convey all passengers to the place of meeting. Those coming from Hastings will take the Grand Rapids and Indiana R. R. at Kalamazoo. Those coming from the south will take the Chicago and Grand Trunk R. R. All that are interested in the truth are cordially invited to attend. The brethren and sisters of Michigan (and else where) are urged to make a special effort to be present at this meeting. Competent speakers are expected, to herald the good news of the soon coming King, and let all who love their gospel be ready to sacrifice something, be diligent vineyard workers.

Your Sister for the truth,
EMMA JACKMAN, Sec.

By a new mode of applying steam to the propulsion of vessels, the British torpedo boat "Viper," recently attained the speed of 87.113 knots, or 43 miles an hour. This is about the speed of an ordinary express train, and is considered as remarkable in the marine world as 112 miles an hour is among the railroads. It remains to be seen whether large vessels can successfully adopt this new form of engine. If so, the voyage across the Atlantic may be brought to within half a week.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the fine "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Selections.

Students, not Prophets.

From the Union Gospel News we clip the following item.

A study of the comments upon the great events of the world is second in interest only to the study of the occurrences themselves, and the Chinese situation has afforded a rich field of thisaert. After noting a multitude of such discussions, editorial and otherwise, one comes to the general conclusion that we are too anxious to interpret at once and in full the exact meaning of great movements, that are plainly to greatly affect history. A sudden check in the fulfillment of some great national purpose is at once hailed by some as a sign of its abandonment.

These things cannot be judged by a few separate facts. The growth of a civilization, the destiny of a race, the development of a religion, the future of a nation—all these are matters too complex and involved to be comprehended in the light of a few months' happenings. It is only after long observation of the general trend of events and the amount of power available for any purpose, that one can approach a proper estimate of even present day affairs.

It is a singular thing that the further we get away from an age in time, the better able we seem to judge it, for the years bring things to light that have an unexpected bearing on the situation. The Bible student finds in prophecy more or less help upon the most significant events in history, but even he, if he is thoughtful, will hesitate to be positive and exact in his predictions.

The Rev. Wm. M. Forkell, pastor of the First M. E. church of Green Bay, Wis., recently announced that he differed in his views from some of the articles of that body. The following is an abridged statement of the points on which he differs from the accepted dogmas of Methodism. He says in brief:—

1. "I differ in my opinions from the usual dogmas on the doctrine of substituted righteousness.

2. On the generally preached views of endless punishment.

3. I cannot accept the theory, and nowhere does the Bible allow the view that the death of Jesus reconciled God to man or changed God's mind; but rather it is intended to reconcile men to God. The cross was an obstacle which Jesus met in the performance of the mission of his life, and not a payment of a debt, obligation, satisfaction, or penalty he rendered to God in man's stead to satisfy his wrath.

As to the doctrine of endless punishment, it is to me unbelievable, not to say inconceivable in the light of God's love. I believe more than ever that sin is followed by punishment, either in this world or the next, but all rational punishment must be corrective in its aim, and loving in its motive. The thought of endless punishment for even the worst human being would drive me into dispair as to the power or love of God."

Mr. Forkell further said he believed there was a strong feeling generally in favor of what is called "the new theology," and he hoped that his action in speaking plainly, might encourage others to take a more liberal view of God and man. Many Methodist ministers had spoken plainly, and he desired many others to take a firmer stand. That there is a strong current of thought in the church along these lines, and many preachers as well as laymen are hoping and praying for an emancipation from dogmas and ideas that have long since proven themselves inadequate to meet the growing demands of truth.—Selected by A. J. Eychaner.

Brother Underwood:

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. Yes, please send your name, request and address, and they will hasten to your home penny or no penny.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPT. 26, 1900.

We need what is due us on subscriptions, and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

THOSE evils would break a proud man's heart that would not disturb the humble Christian's sleep.

GOD rises unmeasurably not only above our forgiveness, but above all our conceptions of his forgiveness.

THAT tenderness of conscience which makes a man hate sin because God loves him, takes its motives from God's pardon.

"MERCY is the spring of God's long-suffering; forgiveness is the activity of this mercy, and long-suffering is its quiet flow."

ANTISTHENES, the philosopher, being demanded by a young man, What was best to learn? answered, "to unlearn the evil thou hast learned."

TO endure present evils with patience, and wait for expected good with long-suffering, is equally the part of the Christian and the Hero.

THE end of learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge to love him, and to imitate him as we may the nearest by obeying his testimonies.

IT was a good reply of Plato, to one who murmured at his reproving him for a small matter. Says he, "Custom is no small matter. A custom or habit of life does frequently alter the natural inclination either to good or evil."

THE strike of the coal miners is not settled. Some interference led to the killing of a number last week, and now soldiers are on guard at the mines to prevent disturbances. The distress will be great if a settlement is not soon reached.

IT was a good saying of Seneca, —"So live with men as if God saw you; so speak to God as if men heard you; regulate your actions by this golden rule, thus shall you acquit yourself to God and men, and hereby comply with both either out of the fear or shame."

THE late Conference of the Church of God, held at Sciroeville, Ind., approved of a plan for raising evangelical funds, which all think if carried out, will not only be more general, uniform and equable, but at the same time far more ample than heretofore. Therefore they appointed D. T. Halstead to visit congregations to place the matter fully before them for co-operation by all the brotherhood. Believing the plan to be feasable and quite practical, we would bespeak for him when he shall visit you, your assistance and most hearty co-operation in bringing the matter into uniform practice.

THE Chinese problem is as far from settlement as ever. The concert of the powers seems hopelessly broken. Germany demands the arrest and punishment of the real leaders in the crimes committed before any talk of peace can be indulged in. The United States on the other hand, has sent an order for her troops except a few to guard the legation be not only withdrawn from Pekin, but from China, thus clearing the way for direct negotiations with the Chinese government for peace. This would look well from our standpoint were it not for another order just given to four more war ships to proceed to the China station, that ample force may be on hand to care for American interests there. England, France and Japan seem willing to withdraw provided the others do, and they are first assured that the Chinese government is able to cope with the Boxers, and punish the guilty. This will be difficult, as they disagree as to who will constitute the Chinese government. Russia says to withdraw, but every body knows how Russia does her withdrawing, and so each is suspicious of the other, no concert of action, and the Chinese see the weakness and are only made the bolder. It takes time to develop the national affairs, but the work goes on, and our duty is to watch.

LET your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand.

Fruit Bearing.

The Lord demands of the trees planted in his garden that they bring forth fruit! There are trees which never bear fruit. The green bay-tree is not noted for fruitfulness; the oaks of Bashan bring forth little fruit; but the trees chosen of God to represent his people are mostly fruit-bearers.

The good olive-tree, the fig-tree, and the true vine are famed for fruit-bearing, and like them the righteous should "still bring forth fruit in a ripe old age," and "be fat and flourishing." Psa. xcii. 14.

It is not enough to be planted in the courts of the Lord; it is not enough to have good soil and throw a grateful shade. The Master said, "Behold, these three years, I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none." "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." Failing in this we become cumberers of the ground, and when mercy has spared the fruitless tree "this year," the mandate may come, "Cut it down." An imposing presence will not save it; a commanding position will not protect it; beauty of foliage and abundance of shade will not supply the place of fruit for which the husbandman is looking so earnestly.

Let us take heed, dear brethren and sisters of the one faith, each one for him and herself, that the efforts of the husbandman to make us fruit-bearing branches may not be lost upon us; or else the axe will be laid at the roots of the fruitless trees, and they are hewn down and cast into the fire.

"Repentance Unto Life."

"Repentance signifies change of mind. In the Scriptures it generally denotes such a change as includes change of will, affections, life. Mind is changed by appropriate truth—truth which presents motives calculated to influence the will and affections. Change of action follows the change of the understanding, the will, and the heart. The outward change produced is or should be, the true index to the inner.

"But the truth effects no change unless it be accepted. Man is influenced by it just as he wills to, or wills not to attend to it. It does not force his understanding, will, or affections, but appeals to them. It comes with motives of love and good. The command to believe and repent implies ability to refuse to have faith and repent,—refuse to hear, refuse to let it operate on the mind, refuse submission to it in the life.

The gospel is the only truth fitted to produce this radical change in man. It finds man alive to sin, and dead to God. It appeals to his whole being, his mind, conscience, will. It behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead, that repentance and remission of sins might be preached in his name, among all nations. So Peter was precisely in the line of duty when he proclaimed to believing thousands on Pentecost who cried out, What shall we do? "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." This called for such a radical change of mind as would effectually change the heart and life; and those who gladly accepted the Apostle's word were baptized.

"But we must not omit to say that sorrow for sin is not repentance. All repentant persons do heartily regret having sinned against the God of love, but this sorrow is not repentance itself, but it leads to it; it is one of the fruits of the truth believed. Repentance is unto life; that is the grand outcome,—endless, glorious life; but what is called "newness of life," which is to be walked in after being raised out of baptismal waters, Rom. vi. 4, is said of the character growing out of, or the result of a mind renewed, changed, by the divine method, above.

Reader, if you are interested in the important matter of repentance unto life, it is of paramount importance to know that faith in the gospel of the kingdom of God, Matt. xxiv. 14, must precede it. You cannot believe what you please and be granted repentance unto life. You must believe what God promises to give. If the riches of his grace stored up in those promises for children of a mortal race do not produce godly sorrow, or true repentance, repentance unto life, you cannot have, the theological world to the contrary, notwithstanding. The reasonableness of this will be apparent by reflecting that if you do not believe what God offers, you believe what some one else offers, in preference to his, and therefore have no claim upon him.

WE publish this week an article illustrating the condition of many of the people in the famine stricken districts of India. It only requires a few cents to keep one of these people alive for a week. If we could realize their distress and bring it home to our hearts, we would gladly make the sacrifice of some little luxury such week, and keep one poor sufferer alive. Think of it brothers and sisters.

"VERILY I say unto thee to-day" Luke xxiii. 42. The objection that "This day" seems a needless addition to "I say" will vanish if the circumstances be taken into account. Moreover, though it may not be common among English speaking people, it is an idiom with which the Hebrews were familiar. For instance, "Sell me this day thy birthright." "Swear to me this day." "I testify against you this day." "I command thee this thing to-day." "I have set before thee this day life and good." "I am yet alive with you this day." "Even to-day do I declare," and numerous other instances.

THE Watchman has the following to say concerning the Tyranny of Weakness:—"The strong are commanded to bear the infirmities of the weak, but the weak are not commanded or even permitted to load their burdens on the back of the strong. The same apostle who exhorts Christians to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ, says in the same chapter: 'Every man shall bear his own burden.' Through a misunderstanding of these texts the impression has been widely diffused that the weak have a right to play the tyrant over the strong, and that something radical is wanting in the Christianity of the man who resists their forced exactions. In certain households we have known the weaker and less competent members of the family to be assisted and waited on and shielded, so that they came to take what was originally a display of kindness as their lawful due, and to receive, without gratitude the most unremitting service. We have seen wives become the slaves of their husbands, mothers of their daughters, and sisters of their brothers, through the mistaken idea that because they could do for them what they could not do so well for themselves, therefore, if they had a Christian spirit, they were bound to serve them. The truth was, these wives and mothers and sisters were doing these husbands, daughters and brothers a serious moral injury—they were building them up in selfishness and indifference to others. And besides this, if tombstones told the truth it would be recorded over many noble men and women that they suffered themselves to be loaded to death by letting their weaker brethren, to their own hurt, add their burdens to the strong man's load."

Horses Fight a Duel.

On Aug. 26, two horses owned by Jacob Johnson of Park St., Hartford, Conn., fought a duel. They quarreled in drawing a load of wood. The mare was suffering from colic, and did not pull her full share of the load, and this maddened her mate, a black gelding, attacked her, but Johnson separated them and thought the incident closed, although the gelding snapped his teeth and laid his ears back two or three times when he looked over the wagon-pole and saw his shirking mate. But soon after being put in their adjoining stalls, Johnson heard a racket, and on going to the stable found the partition down and the gelding was taking his revenge for her failure to pull the load in the morning, and she, stung by the kicks rained in upon her returned them a well directed hind feet attack. Her strength however gave out and she sank to the floor exhausted, and before they could be separated the mare had both hind legs and her back broken. The gelding stopped kicking when he was dragged away. He was however so weak that the same rifle used to end the mare's misery, terminated his life. Both were dumped in the same grave.

Do immortal souls still say matter cannot think? Do they agree with Dr. Sprecher, that it is an immortal part within them that thinks and remembers,—and which ensures for them life in another world? Believing as he does that it is an immortal entity in man that thinks and remembers for him, it is only consistent for him to say as we heard him say, "I expect to meet our intelligent domestic animals in another world." Has it come to this, that the beasts are naturally endowed with immortal souls, when the Scriptures say, "God only hath immortality?" Does the doctor forget that the Word of the Spirit tells us that beasts perish? Peter ii. 12; Psa. xlix. 12.

Is it not most ridiculous to think that man, can only attain to the divine nature of existence by a love that purifies the heart, while, brute beasts have it as part of their natural outfit? Seeing that Jesus declares that he came that men may have life after death by a resurrection, and that notwithstanding man's honorable position he shall perish, if he be without understanding, how can such teachers escape destruction for despising the Word? Prov. xiii. 13; Psa. xlix. 12.

Death's Doings.

The blows of the arch-enemy have been falling in rapid succession among the friends of God in Cleveland of late.

SISTER CHAPMAN

was the aged relic of our dear Brother Chapman who fell asleep in Jesus at a ripe age in September, 1892. Although for many years greatly afflicted Sister Chapman lived till she was, we think, in her 88rd year. About 1868 she was buried with Christ in company with her daughter Susan, Sister Jones, and Sister Morgan, of whom only the daughter survives. May they all soon awake and sing.

MELVIN E. MINOR

an infant of days, son of F. E. and M. E. Minor, passed out of life July 14, after great suffering.

MATTIE E. NEILL

in her 6th year, who was regarded as the healthiest in the family of our dear Brother and Sister Neill, had to give up the struggle for life after weeks of intense suffering. As the life of our Sister had for weeks been hanging as it were by a thread, and had scarcely been snatched out of the jaws of death when the little darling was stricken down, the case was peculiarly painful. It was remarked by a Sister that she had been wondering for some time where the silver lining to the cloud over Brother and Sister Neill's home was to be found; but had found it at last. The mother was spared, there are no orphans; the home is not broken up; and their smiles between the tears tell us that while they realize that man is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upward, they also realize that God was their "Refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble," enabling them to further say with the Psalmist, "Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountain be carried into the midst of the sea." In the dark and cloudy day the believer realizes that "the name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth into it and are safe,"—realizes that nothing anchors the soul like the hope set before us in the gospel. May that Blessed Hope be soon changed to glad fruition, and sorrow and sighing flee away, we pray.

WM. S. CREED

was born in the City of Cork, Ireland, 72 years ago, but for many years had lived in this City, (Cleveland.) We first met him a little over three years ago in the place where the poor have the gospel of the kingdom and life in Christ preached to them without money and without price. He started from home that morning not knowing whither he was going, but he walked straight into the house where he found the key to unlock the truth of God. It seemed to be the very satisfying thing he had been longing for, —and continued to attend till he obtained a good outline of God's Eternal Purpose with earth and man, together with the new and living way whereby he could share the Great Salvation,—and was then anxious to put on the Sin-covering name of Jesus, which he did. And his walk and conversation from that time to the day of death testified that he was indeed a new creature in Christ Jesus. The goodness of God in inviting him late in life, to his kingdom and glory, filled him with gratitude and praise, and it is not surprising that the religion of Jesus thus recommended found lodgment in two of earth's loved ones. May they be faithful and be crowns of rejoicing to him in the coming day. We laid the dear brother to rest, fully assured the Lord will number him with his Jewels. Amen.

From Whence is Wisdom?

"From whence shall wisdom be found, and where is the abode of understanding? Man knoweth not its worth, nor is it found in the land of the living."

"The deep saith it is not in me,
And the sea saith, it is not in me.
Refined gold cannot be given in exchange for it,
Nor can silver be weighed out for its purchase.
It cannot be estimated by the ingot of ophir,
By the precious onyx or the sapphire.
Neither gold nor the diamond can compete with it.
Nor for vessels of pure gold, can it be bartered.
Rock-crystal and pearls, cannot be mentioned.
Yea, to draw forth wisdom is more than rubies can do.
The topaz of Cush cannot be compared with it,
Nor with the pure ingot can it be bartered."

Coleman's Trans. Job.

To the Brethren who love the Lord Jesus Christ, in Canada:

Who will be willing to form an association in Canada for the defence and spread of the truth? "In union there is strength." The time is short till the Master will come when we will have to give an account as to how we have used our talents. Will all those who are anxious to work in the Master's service communicate with me, stating what best can be done in their neighborhood to interest people in the truth. Address me at 42 Gloucester St., Toronto, Canada.

DR. A. WALLACE MASON.

"The truth is that we are at our best when we try to be it not for ourselves alone, but for our brethren; and that we take God's gifts most completely for ourselves when we realize that he sends them to us for the benefit of other men who stand beyond us needing them.

The Restitution

ON TRIAL.

Three Months for Twenty-five Cents.

WILL YOU TRY IT?

Dear brethren and sisters of the household of faith:

According to previous arrangements we met with the Illinois brethren assembled in Conference at Oregon, Ill. These are days of perplexity, discouragement and wonder as to the next event to take place as an omen of the visible presence of our Lord and Master; but amid it all we find little bright rays of joy and comfort and encouragement, here was one bright spot. If pleasant surroundings make any difference with the rise or fall of our spiritual life, the little body of believers at this place should be very happy, very spiritual minded and very strong, for aside from their beautiful landscape views they are thrice "anchored to the Rock." To the rock Christ Jesus they are clinging. On the banks of the Rock River the little church is stationed, and its walls are all of rock, then with their energetic spiritual minded leader, Bro. Lindsay, we see no reason why this church should not be led of the Lord, growing up into him our living head, our life, our all. We were pleasantly entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Morris and shall long remember their kindness. We returned to Michigan Tuesday after Conference closed, leaving with the brethren a promise to return some time this fall, if possible. May God keep them all faithful to the coming of Christ is our earnest prayer.

Poetry.

God Cares for Me.

I stood in the door at eventide,
My heart was full of fears;
And I saw the landscape before me lie,
Through mists of burning tears—
I thought to myself, the world is dark,
No light nor joy I see;
Nothing but toil and want is mine,
And no one cares for me.

A sparrow was twittering at my feet,
With its beautiful auburn head,
And looked at me with dark, mild eyes,
As it picked up crumbs of bread;
And said to me in words as plain
As the words of a bird could be:
"I'm only a sparrow, a worthless bird,
But the dear Lord cares for me."

A lily was growing beside the hedge,
Beautiful, tall and white,
And it shone through the glossy leaves of green,
Like an angel clothed in white;
And it said to me, as it waved its head
On the breezes soft and free,
"I'm only a lily, a useless flower,
But the Master cares for me."

Then it seemed that the hand of the loving Lord
Over my head was laid,
And he said to me: "O faithless child,
Wherefore art thou dismayed?
I clothe the lilies, I feed the birds,
I see the sparrows fall;
Nothing escapes my watchful eye,
My kindness is over all."

Communicated.

Faith, Hope, Charity.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

Again we have it in Col. i. 4, "Since we have heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints."

Again, in 1 Thess. i. 2, 3, "We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers. Remembering without ceasing your work of faith and labor of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God our Father."

We have these stated didactically to the Corinthians, and acknowledged as practically exemplified in the Colossians and the Thessolonians. I am not aware of their occurrence together elsewhere in the Word; but taken together they are the three characteristics, and distinguishing principles of Christianity, and as such they may well claim consideration. Very fully and blessedly the higher truths of the Word are set out before believers in these latter days—death, resurrection, union with Christ and standing in him in the heavenlies; the truth concerning the body and Bride of Christ, the indwelling of the spirit of God and of Christ; and concerning the assembly of God. But while we cannot very well be too much occupied with these truths—with all truth in its place—these three foundation truths which we have proposed to notice here, which are of so very practical and experimental a nature, so much need our individual consideration.

Throughout there is an obvious contrasting of love with gifts maintaining excellence of the former. There is deep admonition in this—even in the very place in which it occurs, the chapter of love, 1 Cor. xiii. occuring between that wonderful chapter, the body of Christ and gifts therein and the chapter of the exercise of gifts in the assembly. All gifts was thus to be properly exercised, and in right spirit, must first have its baptism in love—must pass through love. In other words, love must pervade and characterize the entire exercise of gifts, so to speak, coming up out of love as its animating principle. This contrast, but now including faith and hope, as sisterhood of three, has its climax in the closing verse of the chapter, now abide. The gifts being more temporary and less necessarily possessed—less of the charater of a Christian—these three graces are vital and essential as constituting the very nature of the Christian. Now therefore, these abide now here their sphere to be exercised, not set aside nor their use postponed.

Now a few words to each of the three distinctly. What of faith? This assuredly is essential. Rejection first of the Word, and then of him who was the Word, was the culmination of Jewish guilt. God simply claims credence for all he says, and if faith is properly speaking, simply an account of the veracity of him who speaks, then there is no merit of itself in my believing God. Nothing else than assent or credence ought for a moment to be; and if my soul assents to the testimony of God's Word, both as to what I am and as to what God and his Christ have done for me, then I am saved on the principle of faith. Heb. xi. There is thus the mixing of faith with the hearing of the Word, and there is rendered the due and resulting obedience of faith. It cant be otherwise. So Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness. Rom. iv.

God's complaint of old was, How long will it be ere ye believe me? for he was not believed either as to his promises or threatenings. This was man, and it reflects sadly exactly the historical character upon Israel's failure to have it said, as in Deut. xxxii. 20, They are children in whom is no faith; being the first occurrence, we believe of that Word of the Old Testament. Here was want of the first principle of that which should characterize God's people should be simply and necessarily believe. Heb. iii. 19. And it is only they who live, Heb. ii. 4. We see from the Word what is lost through unbelief; what, owing to their little faith, the disciples lost; the very sin and failure of believers being unbelief. This is, indeed, the cause of failure. See that picture gallery of illustrations and examplification of faith in Heb. xi. What scope faith has; faith in God; faith in Christ; faith for justification, deliverance, obedience, walk, service, as, indeed, apprehending what the Father, and the Spirit, and the Son are to me and for me, as opposed to the world and the flesh and evil against me. Hope. This is inclusive of much and has wondrous scope. It is living hope exercised upon certainties which have been revealed. The Lord's coming is the fulness of it. He himself is our hope. As to his coming, what is really the hearts expectation is himself, the person of Christ. Revelation and intelligence are needed to know all that will be brought to us, or we be brought into at that event, but he himself comprises it all and is superior to it all, and he suffices to the heart. Love. Who can tell it out? God is love. And it is because he is love, and we are the children of God, that love is the manifestation and development of the new nature which is of God. The expression of that nature and conformity with it is the acting and feeling, as another has said, according to his likeness. In 1st Cor. xiii. see how love is dilated upon. It results from birth and relationship as God's children. It is the exercise of the affections of the heart upon an object which is supreme. With the believer it is God himself, because he has revealed his love. We love him because he first loved us; and we love the children of God because they are his. This is the principle and its order in sequence. That it is to God and to be exercised towards his people down here, and now. See 1 John iii. 5. His saints are thus the objects given us to love next to himself. Without love the family characteristic, that which expresses the nature of the children of God—is wanting. A fully stated conversion is being turned from idols to serve the living and true God. And to wait for his Son from heaven, with the knowledge of sins forgiven, having these three elements and in its nature really including these three principles, faith, hope, and love; and while these three principles constitute the Christian character, the measure of these exercise results in the more or less developed Christian character of truest type. Faith sees him; love communes with him and realizes what he is, and loves those that are his; and hope looks for him and expects him. Faith in him, love to all his saints, and the hope of his coming are therefore very real exercises of the soul, person; and comprehensive enough, perhaps, but very briefly, we may have shown what we are to understand by faith and hope and charity, these three quoted Scriptures. They admonish us of liability to failure. Not that Christianity is a failure, but Christians, tested by these everlasting first principles are liable to be found failures.

Be it remembered, these graces have their places and are to be exercised now, and down here. They have a present, positive and active character, and as distinguished from gifts they are expected of all who are in Christ, whether male or female, without difference or distinction; and it is very blessed to know that these graces, which are so precious and so paramount, and which stand so truly in our individual responsibility as Christians and may be and are so fully exemplified by the sisterhood in Christ. Here is room for them—for all, for all the exercises of faith and hope and charity.

The practical question for our consciences and hearts is, Are these graces laid up on the shelf, so to say, unexercised, and unused, or are they in use and actively now abiding in each of us, not doctrines stored away, but exercises of the heart in daily practice? We are otherwise not acting in true and proper Christian character. These three must needs abide, and the greatest of these three is love, because that which expresses God's nature, that which most goes out towards others, that which continues and will have its fullest exercise in the glory and hope, which though satisfied when the Lord comes, may stretch onward throughout the glory. But love must have its largest scope in the glory.

But, nevertheless, more exactly speaking here, faith is in the Lord as the now absent one; hope is in the Lord as the soon-coming one; and love is to all his saints as those who are his, and are to be gathered with him.

Thus, these are the present tests of the present condition of the true church. The above are the three ruling tests of practical Christianity. The rule which we must measure ourselves by. Conscience may be exercised about them, as truly to be considered the foundation principles of pure Christianity.

JOHN FOOKE.

Kingdom of God—What is it?

This may seem a strange question to some folks, and to others very unimportant indeed, yet to those who can and do see and feel the stress laid upon it by the Master and his Apostles, and who have noted the variety and the diversity of opinions held by religious folks, it is not so strange after all. Brethren, I suggest for our good, that we examine ourselves and our faith once more on this grand old question, and see where and how we stand before God.

Passing by the "Pentecostal kingdom," which is now in the "divided state," and "rent in twain from top to bottom," and must ere long fall, like a house built upon the sand, the Master's word for it, we will come to our question, and offer a few thoughts for consideration, hoping to draw out wiser heads and abler pens, that we may have the best results. Question: The kingdom of God—what is it? I would answer, It is God ruling this world in righteousness through and by his beloved Son. When Daniel, the beloved prophet of God went in before the king of Babylon to tell him his wonderful dream and its meaning, which the worldly wise men could not do, he begins at the beginning and relates the dream to the king, then he proceeds to tell its meaning by saying, "Thou art this head of gold." Oh, the head of this wonderful image which was of fine gold represents this king of Babylon. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee (not quite so good and great). This was the Medes and Persians represented by the silver breast and arms of the image. Then a third kingdom represented by the belly and sides of brass which was Greece, or the Grecian kingdom, was to follow on and bear rule over all the earth. Then the fourth kingdom represented by the iron legs, which was Rome was to succeed and break in pieces and subdue its predecessors. And the feet and toes of this great image, which was of iron and clay, was to represent Rome in its divided and subdivided state—in its last days. Watchmen, what of the night? Where are we at in this world's history?

"We have passed the coasts of Babylon,
The Medo Persian heights;
We have left the realms of
Grecia far behind;
We've been sailing down the Roman shore
These eighteen hundred years,
And the chart declares
The port we soon shall find."

This king saw in his dream, what few ever dreamed of seeing. He saw till that a stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces, and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. Daniel in explaining this part of the dream to the king calls his attention to the feet and toes of the image and says, And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the Stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure. Note, this stone represents the kingdom of God and that it strikes the image upon his feet, or in the closing days of Rome's history, and that it breaks [illegible] pieces. And Rome having [illegible] and swallowed up its predecessors, they were all broken to pieces together as Daniel says. And you will please note that when or after this stone smites and breaks the image, it then becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth. It expands and grows, as represented by the parable of the mustard seed. Daniel in his dream a little later on, saw plainly the same great line of events as shown to the king in the great image. And when he had written the dream and told the sum of the matters, he says, I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. Note the object or reason why this kingdom is given to the Son,—that all people, nations and languages should serve him. This is good news and glad tidings to all who have ears to hear, and we can live and hope and pray for its realization—Thy kingdom come. "Thy will be done in earth as in heaven." Then the old prophets of God and all others whose faith had laid hold on the promises of God will realize their long cherished hope. When the mountain of the Lord's house as promised to David shall be established in the top of the mountains, and all nations flow unto it. And many nations shall come and say, "Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths, for the law shall go forth of Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people (yes, for a thousand years) and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. This is the bright side of the picture—the sunshine after the dark cloudy day of six thousand years has passed away. The nations must first be broken and subdued and then blessed, as God who cannot lie has so promised unto the fathers. When Rome like a wild, mad bull devoured the earth, and tread it down, and break it in pieces, and stamped upon and subdued his competitors, they were not all killed, but subdued or conquered. And when that little horn,—that blasphemous, papal beast is slain and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame, the rest of the beasts will lose their power, yet their lives will be prolonged for a season and time. Paul sees and tells part of it 2 Thes. ii., and I believe all of it, and wait and hope for the kingdom of God to come and bless the humble obedient ones, and subdue and destroy the obstinate ones as in Isa. lx. 12. When all must do right or perish; yes, I long for the day when the earth shall be filled with the glory and knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL.

[An Addenda to the Day-Star Article of 1846.]

Jesus did not break the law. The Pharisees thought he did. He fulfilled the law—filled it full—then repealed it. It was not thorough enough for his use. The object for which it had been given had been accomplished. Its self-fixed limit had come. It must give way to Jesus' higher law—the perfect gospel law. The repealed law embraced the ten commandments (as constitution), the book of the law (as statutes enacted from time to time as need occurred), and the ceremonial law—all one law, not "two laws"—all equally inspired and of equal authority; a new civil code for the Jews only to regulate outward conduct and social intercourse among themselves and between them and other peoples; in its field the best law that had been and incidentally containing model hints for all nations, and qualifying the Jews to mission all other people. This law, in terms, pertaining to this life only, its duties, advantages, and penalties, and not to future existence, rewards and penalties.

The Sinai law did not affect the law of righteousness by faith that had been in vogue from Abel to Moses and continued without interruption and still continues, the only possible law of salvation. This local, temporary convenience, exactly suited to their condition, was to last only till the Messiah should come. When he came of age it ceased by its own limitations; and yet he declared its cessation in the most positive terms. Study carefully, in his inaugural address. Matt. v. 21-48, his six quotations, two from the ten commandments and four from the book of the law, each followed by the repealing clause: "But I say unto you," and then Jesus' perfect gospel law applicable to the case. The old law had accomplished its purpose in helping to bring the church on to Christ.

Is it any wonder that in the estimation of many of its best members the Christian church comes short in Christian character and work? Is not making the ten commandments their standard one obvious cause? How can you make a perfect character by an imperfect law? "For the law made nothing perfect."

As to grade, the law of Moses was inferior to Abraham, was inferior to Melchisedec; so as a moral and religious code the law of Moses, however wise and good, was third rate. How unwise then to hold that law as supreme and eternal, as some do. Jesus is greater than all, and is the one final and supreme lawgiver. The Jews put the Sinai law above Jesus and murdered him to maintain their law. Some of "the law" partisans now show the same spirit, and yet fancy themselves superexcellent Christians. Self-conceited ambition can be quite inconsistent.

Jesus quoted for special correction the sixth commandment—"Thou shalt not kill"—and the seventh—"Thou shalt not commit adultery"—probably because of their great social importance, and in their stead announced that in his system "hate is murder," and "lust is adultery;" and distinctly indicated that treats this life in reference to the life to come; teaches the duty of strenuous self-control under his law, as Paul repeated it: "I keep my body under," and instructed Timothy: "Keep thyself pure;" and that no sacrifice or self-denial can be too great to secure perfect obedience to his law; and that the final reward is life everlasting, and the penalty of disobedience will be utter destruction in the Gehenna-fire—"will be liable to the gehenna of fire," "thy whole body cast into the gehenna of fire." Matt. v. 22, 29, 30.

THE SABBATH IN THE OLD LAW, AND IN THE NEW LAW.

It is easy to see why Jesus did not also quote for special repeal and correction the fourth commandment—(1) He would unnecessarily have assailed the prejudices of the Jews. (2) The time for the change of the Sabbath did not come till our Lord's resurrection. (3) That change had already been determined by a Higher Authority. It was done at the Jordan in the presence of Moses at the close of the "forty years' grief." Moses had already changed the Sabbath commandment by putting for its cause the deliverance from Egypt instead of the creation. Ex. xx. 11, compare Deut. v. 15. That change not securing obedience Jehovah determined to change the Sabbath to "another day" and give it to "another people." Psa. xcv.; Heb. iv. and Dan. ix. 26. Hence since the resurrection of Christ the first day of the week has been observed as the Christian Sabbath. Dr. Adam Clarke on Rev. i. 10, says: "The Lord's day, the first day of the week, observed as the Christian Sabbath, because on it Jesus Christ rose from the dead; therefore it is called the Lord's day; and has taken place of the Jewish Sabbath throughout the Christian world." See also Matt. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 1; Luke xxiv. 1; John xx. 1, 19, 26. ("After eight days. It seems likely that this was precisely on that day s'n night, on which Christ had appeared to them before—and from this we may learn that this was the weekly meeting of the Apostles"—Clarke.) Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

Fifty-three years ago a few Adventists pressed 7th day-keeping. They were effectually answered—(1) Neither Jesus nor his disciples showed any Sabbath scruples. (2) The New Testament does not command the keeping of any day as a weekly Sabbath. (3) Paul plainly justifies "regarding every day alike," under certain circumstances. This, however, was only the negative side of the answer. Not till within a few years has the positive side became strongly apparent by a more careful reading of Psa. xcv. and Heb. iv. The obvious sense of these two passages, herein stated, put with the many fair inferences from the New Testament, makes the argument for the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath quite complete.

But we are told that "history says the pope changed the Sabbath from the 7th to the 1st day of the week." Indeed! Is that the only thing that profane history lies about? God had determined that change 1800 years before there was a pope, and the Christian church had already respected that change 300 years.

Jesus did not condemn the Sabbath principle; he did condemn the old Seventh Day Sabbath and asserted and applied his authority to readjust it and adapt the principle to his system of religion—make it "for man," not man for it. make it contribute to man's comfort and yield to his necessities, in a spirit loyal to Christ—to be his servant in the highest sense, not his master to oppress him. So the Sabbath was not abandoned but changed. It [illegible] light, honorable"—Transformed from a Jewish to a Christian institution, it would still be useful. As Jehovah changed it, he exalted and consecrated it forever as a memorial, a weekly reminder of the resurrection of his Son from the dead—made it unspeakably higher, holier, more significant than the Sabbath of the wilderness. The quiet manner of the transition—just like Jesus—excites our admiration and reflects the majesty of assured power, the patience of an immortal Ruler whose rights are settled by innumerable promises and by irrevocable covenants. He could trust those he had called to his work. He left the Christianizing of the Sabbath, as he left some other things, very much to their discretion, under his providential—"Lo, I am with you always."

Notice in Heb. iv. the several contrasts between "they" and "them," and "we" and "us" the former having the old Sabbath and the latter having the new or Christian Sabbath which was given to the Christian Church, "the Messiah's future people" (Dan. ix. 26 margin). And Matt. xxi. 43: "The kingdom shall be taken from you—[the Jews] and given to a nation [or people] bringing forth the fruits thereof."

The argument in Psa. xcv. and Heb. iv. for the change. Those passages mean something. They both refer to the same thing, and that is the change of the Sabbath from "the 7th day" to "another day," and giving it to another people. That change was so important and God was so determined to make it that "he swore to it in his wrath," which means that the change would be a severe punishment to the Jews and a great blessing to the Christians.

How terribly—and even blasphemously—they belittle a great matter who say that the pope made that change! Is it not helping the man of sin to exalt himself above God? Are not some of our dear brethren making a cruel schism in the church without just cause? Will they be persuaded to reconsider this matter for Jesus' sake? And for their own sake? How can they feel safe or be safe trusting in an obsolete law and opposed to Jesus and the New Testament?

Request.

Once again we will ask of the dear readers of THE RESTITUTION to forward such good literature they feel disposed to contribute for distribution. We wish to gather what gospel truths we can and sow the good seed where we believe and trust it will fall in good ground and bring forth fruits an hundred fold. We have but a short stay at home and the offerings you wish to bestow to the Master's use must be prompt. A goodly number responded promptly at the other call, and the hours we spent in hurling the gospel of Jesus were pleasant and we trust a harvest is springing forth along some of the by-paths and sin swept streets of Pueblo. Our sowings will be along the winding banks of the Arkansas River, and we intend to set sail from Arkansas City, Kan., near Oct. 1, on our way to New Orleans by way of boat, and it will afford us many opportunities and we are told, "Go sow by all waters," and we pray the refreshing showers from Jehovah's throne may send forth that guiding care that may lead some one into the way of life. INDIA'S AWFUL FAMINE.

A VICTIM OF FAMINE.

In sympathy of Americans with India's sufferers would doubtless be greater if there was a clearer realization of the sort of people who are dying of starvation and exposure. In famine photographs the forms and faces almost forbid love or respect. I have scarcely wished that our people might have seen the people of India before the famine by drought came and made them the horrible objects which we are compelled to pity and help. The races, in India are many, an stock of the south, India, including the wild so faithfully described; so faithfully described; clearly akin to the Chi- clearly akin to the Chi- Hindoos of the noble Hindoos of the noble aces of the races of that some of the races of that literally prehistoric. Be- literally prehistoric. Be- dreamed of beauty, or dreamed of beauty, or the Roman of conquest, the inhabitants of India were skillfully cultivating the soil, domesticating useful animals, working metals, weaving cloth, wearing clothes and fashioning primitive forms of society and government.

The people of India are, in general, quite worthy of being regarded as our kindred. They are comely, intelligent, fond of home and devoted to the arts of peace. Many of their ways would please us, and many of their characteristics would win our admiration.

Such are they who are dying of starvation and exposure. Naturally gentle eyes are now fierce with hunger or weep themselves to blindness because no help comes. Hands that wrought pleasantly in work or worship now dig the earth for roots and vermin or strike the starving neighbor who would share the dreadful morsel. Mothers, crazed by want of nourishment, leave their children to perish. Children that sang and played and thought home the dearest spot on earth now wander helpless and hopeless until strength fails and the jackal finds his awful feast.

The outlook for the next few months is gloomy. Rains have come three weeks late. Many farmers are without seed. Their work cattle have perished. The men themselves, enfeebled by starvation, cannot properly prepare the soil. The autumn harvest will be inferior. Till these are gathered there can be no essential improvement in the situation. Clothing and shelter are urgently needed. Tens of thousands of orphaned deserted children must be cared for.

Yet the situation is not without favorable conditions. The greater part of India has been blest with rain, and the fields have yielded plentifully. Consequently there is a supply of the cheap, nutritious food grains on which the common people subsist, and those grains are poured into the famine district like a mighty river. Since last October more than three billion pounds of millet and rice and kindred grains have come in by way of Bombay alone, and not a bushel of wheat exported. So that it is still true that 2 to 5 cents a day will save a life, and 6 cents give food, clothing and shelter.

The British government cares for more than six millions each day. The people of Great Britain care for hundreds of thousands. There remain many more in mortal peril. This is America's opportunity. Contributions from the United States averaging one-tenth of a cent a day from each inhabitant, would abundantly meet the need. Oh, men and women and children of America, your kindred across the sea are dying of hunger and exposure! They are within your reach!

The great civic and national agency of famine relief is the New York Committee of One Hundred, William E. Dodge, chairman, and Brown Bros. & Co., 60 Wall street, New York, treasurers. This committee, with which similar committees throughout the country co-operate, has received over $200,000. Contributions are cabled weekly, without expense, to the American-Indian Famine Relief Committee at Bombay, United States Consul William T. Pee, chairman, and the veteran missionary administrator, Robert A. Hume, executive secretary. The New York committee will send illustrated literature, without charge, to all who will co-operate in its work. Correspondence should be addressed to L. T. Chamberlain, 78 Bible House, New York.

This paper gladly opens its columns for the receipt and acknowledgment of gifts to be forwarded either to the New York committee or to some co-operating committee.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 3, 1900. NUMBER 37.

Poetry.

The Bible Divine.

The Bible I—who plainly see:
Then it must have a pedigree;
It either is a book divine,
Or man to make it must combine.
Suppose the latter, then they must Either be wicked men or just.
Take either side and you will see
A proof of its divinity.

If wicked men composed this book,
Surely their senses them forsook;
For they the righteous man defend,
And curse the bad from end to end.
If righteous, then they change their name
For they the authorship disclaim,
They often say, "Thus saith the Lord,"
And testify it is his Word;
If it be not they tell a lie,
And all their righteousness destroy.

Could Moses and could Malachi
Unite together in a lie?
Could Job and Daniel with the rest,
Spread o'er the world from east to west,
Unite together and confer
When oceans rolled between them sir?
Not only seas, but ages too,
Hundreds of years and not a few!

Watchman, What of the Night?

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light and there was light. And God saw the light that it was good, and God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night.

We find that in this passage of Scripture that while earth was clothed in her mantle of darkness the Spirit of the allwise Creator moved upon the face of the deep, bringing order out of confusion, light out of darkness, and this beauteous earth into a fit condition for the residence of man and the substance of animal and vegetable life. The Almighty Architect said, "Let there be light and there was light." It is the most noble and lofty sublimity that imagination can conceive; it commands things into existence, speaks with the voice of supernatural authority and is the language of God. And God saw the light that it was good, and he divided the light from the darkness, calling the light day and the darkness night. And the evening and the morning were the first day. Light being formed, and the waters separated from each other, the Creator, on the third day, commanded that the waters beneath the firmament should be gathered together, and dry land appear. The waters accordingly, fled into deep valleys and recesses of the earth, the lofty mountains raised their towering heads, and the lesser hills displayed their pleasing summits. As the great Creator designed the earth for the future habitation for man and beast it was no sooner separated from the waters, than he gave it a prolific virtue, and endowed it with the power of vegetation, having prepared such necessaries as he thought proper on earth, for the use of its intended inhabitants, on the fourth day formed those two great luminaries of heaven called the sun and the moon, the former to rule by day and the latter to rule the night. The creation of the first four days consisting of things inanimate. On the fifth God pronounced his Omnipotent fiat, for the production of living creatures, and out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air. The Omnipotent Creator having made these abundant preparations, crowned his work with the formation of the grand object, man, for whose use they were designed, placing him as watchman over the works of his hands. Now, God had provided for man's residence a most delightful spot, called Eden, with the command that he dress and keep it. But at last man sacrificed his duty to satisfy his curiosity; his conscience painted his transgressions in the blackest colors, all his hope was banished, and nothing remained but dishonor and despair. Thus by his original pollution fell our first parents, who, from the happiest condition that can be conceived of, plunged themselves into a state of wretchedness and thereby brought misery on their descendants. And man grew desperately wicked and God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every purpose of man was to do evil. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth, but before doing so, the world must be warned of the impending doom; and there was found one man who would engage in the work. Noah, a faithful watcher, had preached for one hundred twenty years the message of warning and salvation. The flood came and all were lost but those who obeyed Jehovah's voice. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet moved him with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by which he condemned the world.

At a later period, when the nations had again become sunken in idolatry and crime, and the destruction of wicked Sodom and Gomorrah was determined, the Lord said, "Shall I hide from Abraham the things which I do; seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation and all the nations of the earth shall be blest in him. And the Lord made known unto Abraham the secret of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah because of their sins. The heart of that just man was greatly stirred, and he made an earnest plea for the Sodomites, for some of his dearest kin dwelt in that wicked city. He could not bear the thought and how earnestly he pleaded. Once, twice, thrice, yea, six times, he made his plea to the Lord to spare the city. The evening came and the last night of that once beautiful city had reached its final destiny, the alarm had been given, the watchman had raised the cry that the city should fall, but they heeded not the warning. Due notice was given to righteous Lot, who, with his daughters, was saved, and none even in that guilty city were lost without due warning, but "he seemed as one mocked." And they like the antediluvians persisted in sin and drank of the wrath of God. At a subsequent time the sins of Ninevah rose to heaven, and Jonah was sent to bear to that proud capital the startling message, "Yet forty days and Ninevah shall be destroyed." The conscience of those sinners told them that it was true and from the least of them to the greatest humbled themselves, and the overhanging judgment was averted.

Let us now turn our attention to Babylon where wickedness was very great. It was so strongly fortified against the attacks of the enemies, that the people thought themselves safe against the strongest foe. Babylon stood on the banks of the river Euphrates. It was once the most wonderful city in many respects, that ever existed. It was laid out in an exact square, which was fifteen miles on each side, and sixty miles in circumference. It was surrounded by walls three-hundred and fifty feet high and eighty-seven feet thick, which were arched over the river that its waters might not be obstructed. There were also walls of the same dimensions on each bank of the river, extending from the walls on the south side of the city to the north side of it. In these walls were one hundred and fifty gates of brass, which were so distributed that there were twenty-five gates at equal distance on each side of the city and on each side of the river. From each of the gates opening into the city a street extended, running in a straight line across the city to the gate opposite. There were fifty such streets in all twenty-five extending from east to west and passing through the gates of the walls on the eastern and western banks of the river and twenty-five streets extending from north to south crossing each other at right angles. Beside these streets there were four running along next to the walls around the city. These streets divided Babylon into six hundred and seventy-six squares. There were two structures in Babylon known as the old palace and the new palace. The old palace was located on the east side of the river and measured three hundred rods on each side of it four sides. The new palace stood on the opposite side of the river and measured six hundred rods on each side of it. While Nebuchadnezzar was at the head of this great empire Babylon was at the zenith of its glory, but he went down and from his death the empire began to decline. King succeeded king to the throne until Belshazzar became king and Cyrus was in command of the Medes and Persians. The Babylonian empire had now become weakened and many provinces and nations had thrown off the yoke. In Asia Minor the provinces were under the influence of Croesus, king of Lydia, whose capital was Sardis. Belshazzar goes to him and appoints him commander over Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt to lead them in his interest against the Medes. Meanwhile the favorable opportunity is nearing, and in a little while presents itself. Belshazzar dreaming of safety and thirsting for pleasure made a great feast to a thousand of his lords. Great excitement prevailed in the city as the feast was preparing, business was neglected and officers were off their guard. At the time appointed the guests arrived; the royal palace was brilliantly lighted; there was music and dancing, hilarity and mirth, the table spread with all the dainty luxuries that wealth could afford served to gratify their taste, and wine was drank to excess until the half drunken king orders the vessels of gold and silver to be brought in which had been taken from the temple in Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and those sacred vessels which had been once consecrated to the service of God were filled with wine and pressed to the polluted lips of Belshazzar and his drunken guests. But look! in the midst of their revelry when all hearts were light and gay there appears fingers of a man's hand and writes upon the wall. All eyes turn upon the scene, the music ceased, consternation prevailed. Belshazzar's countenance changed. He orders the astrologers, the Chaldeans and the sooth-sayers to be brought in. He says to them, "Whoever of you can interpret this writing I will clothe him with scarlet and put a gold chain about his neck and he shall be the third ruler in the kingdom." None could read it, and Daniel was called but he refused the gift saying, "Give thy reward to another, yet, I will read the writing and make known to him the interpretation, and he reads, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin" or "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it. Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians." While this scene was transpiring in the royal palace, Cyrus was improving his time. He ordered the trenches to be opened and the great river Euphrates was changed in its course; its willing waters separated, to rush in opposite channels around that great city, to unite below instead of flowing together, onward in its accustomed way, and the Persian general marched his army over a strange military road, the bed of that river under those massive walls into the city. The gates of brass which closed the streets that led to the river which were always required to be locked at night had been left open on account of the excitement concerning the feast, and the cry went forth, "Watchman, what of the night?" And as the glancing rays are leaping from hill-top to hill-top, the answer is returned, "The morning cometh, also the night."

If there ever was a time since the creation that a Savior was needed, it was now, but the time was not yet come, not until about the four thousandth year of the world, when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law. As the shepherds on the hillside were keeping watch over their flock at night, the angel of the Lord came upon them and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid; but the angel said unto them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord, and while they wondered amongst themselves, suddenly they hear a multitude of heavenly voices praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men. As he waxes stronger truth and sincerity shine throughout his whole conduct, though of heavenly descent, he shows obedience and affection to his earthly parents. He wins the love of friends and extorts the approbation and wonder of his enemies. Never was a character at the same time so commanding and natural, so resplendent and pleasing, so amiable and venerable. There is a peculiar contrast in it between an awful greatness, dignity, and majesty, and the most conciliating loveliness, tenderness and softness. He now converses with the prophets, lawyers and angels; and the next instant he meekly endures the dullness of his disciples and the blasphemies and rage of the multitude. Let us pause an instant and fill our minds with the idea of one who knew all things, both heavenly and earthly, searched and laid open the inmost recesses of the heart, rectified every prejudice, and removed every mistake of a moral and religious kind, penetrated the hidden events of futurity, gave promise of admission into a happy immortality, had the keys of life and death, claimed an union with the Father, and yet was mild, gentle, humble, social, benevolent, friendly and affectionate. Such an one is fairer than the morning star; but there comes a darkness over his life, but with all the gentleness of a meek and lowly Jesus we behold a firmness which no terrors could restrain. Go with me if you please to the garden of Gethsemane where he has taken his disciples to pray, he tells them to tarry here while he goes forward and prays if it is possible for the Father to remove the cup from him, "not my will but thine be done." He goes back and finds them sleeping. He saith unto Peter, "Simon, sleepest thou? Couldst thou not watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak." He goes the second time to pray and when he returned he found them sleeping again, but they did not know what to answer him. And he cometh the third time and saith unto them, Sleep on now and take your rest. It is enough, the hour is come. Behold, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. The previous week had been terrible in its demands upon the vital force of Jesus, in travel, in preaching, and teaching, in sleepless vigils, with the black shadow of the cross continually upon him. The strain had told upon him physically, young and vigorous though he was. The night just ended had been terrible; the midnight moon had looked down upon his face bathed in blood under the olives of Gethsemane, the loathsome lips of Judas had been reddened in that awful sweat, as with a kiss he delivered up the Master to the enemy. In all its vernal strength the newly risen sun flooded with light the ancient, three-hilled city of the Jews. Temple-crowned Mount Moriah, with its tier upon tier of glittering marble seeming to ascend straight from the tabernacle on earth to the tabernacle in heaven, was sending greeting in clouds of incense to the skies. The usual hum of traffic was not heard, for it was the time of the great annual feast of the Passover. Yet early though it was, an immense throng of people had gathered, not at the temple or the synagogue, but at the Roman hall of judgment. They did not enter the building for fear of a ceremonial defilement which would prevent them from celebrating the feast, so they stood without, a densely packed, tumultuous crowd. Members of the Sanhedrin, priests, lawyers, scribes and black-browed Pharisees mingled with the great body of ignorant and excited Jews, having learned by chance what was taking place. There were among those gathered there, men who a little while before were lepers, but were now sound and well, those who were blind but could now see, those who had gone more than a three days' journey into realm of death and returned, recalled by a voice the nation was now seeking to silence. Would these cry, "Crucify him?" At length Pilate yielded to their importunities and gratified the Jews with a death sentence.

Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe, and Pilate saith unto them, "Behold the man." His weary, sorrowful face surmounted by the emblem of the curse—the crown of thorns, the crown of sorrow—his mangled, bleeding flesh concealed under the mocking purple, and he, the Prince of suffering, the intensified picture of humanity in its guilt and pain—Behold the Man! Ages roll by. There comes another morn. The blue vault of heaven grows luminous with a light not seen on land or sea. Its sparkling depth of glory concentrate above the brow of Olivet. Before the astonished gaze of an awe-stricken world a kingly form is outlined. The once slighted, insulted, and crucified Savior, now King of kings and Lord of lords is coming near the earth! His glory blazes everywhere. What does this mean to the nominal Christian? That God is about to wind up human affairs? Have they seen the heavens rolled together as a scroll, and the sun darkened and the moon turned into blood? But, those who have taken heed to the sure Word of prophecy through the dark watching night, can now raise their heads in triumph. Glory is poured upon them till they can gaze on Christ. There is no mockery in the royalty that now adorns him. His countenance shining above the brightness of the sun has now been seen by human vision. A thousand thousand minister unto him and ten thousand times ten thousand stand before him. The Sanhedrin of heaven cast their crowns at his feet, the whole earth bows the knee before him. With one voice the universe of God proclaims: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor and glory, and blessing." Rev. v. 12.

Once more we behold the Man, what a change has come over him! On his head are many crowns, the scars left by the cruel thorns are covered by the incorruptible crown, the crown of glory, the crown of righteousness, the crown of rejoicing, and the crown of life. Blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; amen, and amen. Psa. lxxii. 19. May our lives be so hid with Christ in God, that we may be counted amongst those who came up out of great tribulation, having washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. And it will be then and not until then that the midnight cry will cease to be heard, for the darkness will flee before him and there will be no night there.

MRS. GEORGIA OAKLEY.

"Cease Ye from Man."

The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up. And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low; and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. And they shall go into the hold of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Isa. ii.

It is not very strange that a man of the world, who suddenly leaps from the obscurity of poverty, to fame and fortune should become haughty, especially if his mind and heart has not expanded with his business expansion. The arrogance of opulence is to be seen every, even in our fashionable churches. Indeed, a close observer will discover that it is more in evidence here than elsewhere. What a pity that this is true. Not long ago the writer plead with one of his daughters to accompany him to a mid-week meeting at his church. She consented to go, but remarked, "Now Pa, you'll find that not one of your bon ton church people will notice me in any way." She was right. We all wore cheap clothes there, because we could do no better. She never went back. Yes, the loftiness of church people has driven numbers of plain people away for ever. Some of the churches have found out their mistake, and are inquiring about how to get their empty pews filled up again. Perhaps when the Lord alone is exalted in our churches, the plain people will venture to return and occupy some of the empty seats.

A few Sundays ago I heard a preacher sermonizing on the horrible deformity of the natural man. He jumped on the floor like he was jumping on the monster man. I thought, all because the creature came into the world a human being instead of an angel. I wrote him that when he was ready to show us the provision God has made for the natural man, making him a new creature in Christ Jesus, I would be pleased to go and hear him. But so far he has made no answer. The lofty sermonizer (as a rule) will not allow a common "layman" to make any suggestions. This is his day. He must be exalted. Isaiah was mistaken—was he? Isaiah says, "Cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils," etc. Yes, here is our remedy. "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him," learn of him. He never sneered at a man for being natural, jumping to show how he would like to grind him into nothing like the jumping parson, just referred to. The story of the prodigal does not allow that boy to even reiterate his badness. The father's joy is so great, he cannot wait to hear it. What a grand picture of God's free grace to every son and daughter of Adam. This grace is free. Dear reader, let us turn away from the haughty, lofty, jumping parson and look up to God, exalting him in the church, in hearts and homes, and so make Burn's prayer effective.

"And let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that,
That sense and worth o'er a' the earth,
May conquer still for a' that.
For a' that, and a' that, its coming yet for a' that,
That man to man, the world o'er shall brothers be for a' that."

ISAAC MCCURRY, SR.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I think our Letter Drawer is getting very low. Why is this? I know it is not because we do not love to hear from each other. In this day of small things, we who have the eyes of our understanding enlightened by the light of the glorious gospel, as it shines in the face of Jesus, ought to be living epistles, read and known of all men. Our good old paper often falls into the hands of others who fall in love with it on account of the kind and affectionate letters which appear in its columns, seasoned so much with the true spirit of Christ, and of Christian fellowship, and it is often the cause of some one saying "Well I would like to take THE RESTITUTION.

Just this week I was in the city of Winchester, Va., and there I met with one that I had been sending a copy of THE RESTITUTION to at intervals for some time. He said he would like to have the paper, and enclosed you will find money order to pay for it one year for him.

This is only one among the many new subscribers I have gained by thus sending extra copies to friends. Come brethren and sisters, let us send and lend our papers. I often hear expressions like this, "Well it is the best paper that I have ever seen or read." Another says "It gave more light on the resurrection than I ever saw before."

Now I hope we will all be willing workers in trying to get new subscribers for THE RESTITUTION. Let us work while it is day, for the night is coming when no man can work.

Your sister in hope.

S. F. MORGAN.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Restitution.

STOCKHOLDERS MEETING.

The Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association are hereby notified that there will be a meeting held at Plymouth, Ind., on November 17, 1900, for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before said Stockholders for consideration.

Signed:

A. R. UNDERWOOD,
Sec. Board of Directors.

We need what is due us on subscriptions, and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

IT was Pascal who said "When the truth is deserted and persecuted, this seems to be the time that the service which we yield to God in defending it, is peculiarly acceptable."

IT was Thomas Chalmers who once prayed, "Deliver me from the narrowing influence of human lessons, from human systems of theology. Teach me directly out of the freeness of thine own word. Hasten the time when, unfettered by sectarian intolerance, and unarmed by the authority of man, the Bible shall make its rightful impression upon all; the simple and obedient readers thereof, calling no man Master, but Christ only."

BROTHER D. T. Halstead visited the Plymouth Church last week and presented his plan for the raising of the Evangelist Fund. He reports progress wherever he has been, and if the brethren and sisters throughout the State will only realize how great the need is for work, and how short the time to do it in, then there will be no need for solicitation, for each will be anxious to do his part. Don't wait to be urged. Just do your duty, and all will be well.

BROTHER A. H. Zimer sent us a card last week saying he was at Denver, Ind., and would call on us Friday night on his way home. He failed to come, but a card Saturday morning explained that two young ladies, the daughters of Brother Kessler, were to be baptized, which changed the plan. We should have enjoyed a visit very much, but are glad it had to be postponed for this cause. May these new sisters ever be faithful, and be among the number who will hear the "Well done" spoken when Jesus comes.

As an indication of the progress being made by the Creed Revision committee of the Presbyterian General Assembly, the Chicago Presbytery have answered by saying they do not want any change from the Westminster confession, but recommend that a shorter and simpler supplementary creed be formulated that can be used in place of the longer one. To any one outside that would look very much like setting aside the old one, because the trouble all along has been that the Church has not lived up to its profession. Now when asked to state if they want revision or no, they answer we do not want revision, but a substitute. This is just a straw showing the way the wind blows.

THE plans of the nations regarding China are not clearly defined. Russia is as much of a riddle as ever. She goes on extending her lines of troops into Manchuria, yet denies having any designs on the province. Only last week her "railroad troops" had two hard fights with the Chinese, and won both. Germany is ready to back down from her position that the ringleaders be turned over to the powers for punishment. England is apparently absorbed in her elections, but as the indication now is, the government will be supported, and Britain will be in position to outline her policy so as to secure desirable pledges from the others. The United States is leaving a small force to protect her legation and sending all the rest away, but the warships will be near to enter the compact again should necessity arise. On the whole it is a for sure "Chinese puzzle." We can only watch for the next move, assured that whatever comes will but hasten us on to the coming of the day when Jesus will take the reins of government, for man as a ruler is a failure.

THE striking coal miners are still out, and their ranks are being augmented by small companies who have kept at work until visited by the strikers and influenced to quit work. It may not be settled for some time yet.

IT was Irenæus who said, "To leave holy Scripture, that pure and undoubted source of faith, is to determine upon exposing one's self to the inconvenient danger of falling into error; it is to build our house not upon a rock, but upon the sand."

AUBLIN, in his "Life of Luther," speaking of some of his disciples, says:—"They left Wittenberg and went to Geneva, where we found them, in 1571, sustaining in a crowded school, and in printed theses, that all which was said about the immortality of the soul was invented by Antichrist for the Pope's pot boil."

THERE are several ways of obtaining information respecting God; one is, by reading his Word and hearing what others have to say about him; the other, by drawing near, and having personal transactions with him. By knowledge from report we may learn that he is a Savior of those who trust in him, and be excited to admiration by his wisdom, faithfulness and power. But the knowledge of acquaintance enables us to say, "God my Savior," and makes the heart to glow with love and gratitude. Sugar read about, is not half as sweet as sugar tasted. "The Lord is good;" but, O, "taste and see," and prove it for yourselves.

"The Lord is at Hand."

What are we doing for him, brethren and sisters? Are we working for the salvation of our fellows—morally, socially and eternally? Or are we in a state of indifference? If the latter be our true state, depend upon it a theoretical knowledge of the truth only, will avail us nothing in the day of visitation. Woe, woe, woe to us if we are not found on the Lord's side, practically as well as doctrinally. Sin rolls down our streets as never before, and we want to remind you all, that WITNESSING of some sort devolves upon every one who has named the name of Christ. And it would seem that the very least expected of any one would be that he or she recommend Bible religion, by adorning its doctrines, or illustrating its teachings by its effects,—its transforming power over, or upon our lives. Of all sermons these are, we believe, among the most powerful; but there is something required of us by God besides living passive, godly lives, (if that be possible). We have to reprove wrong and correct error by other means than example. Are we working as we should to counteract the destructive influences of truth's adversaries? If not, we are not answering one of the purposes for which we were called. Do not let us forget the fate of slothful servants, and the unprofitable ones. The Lord is at hand! Let us awake to a sense of our individual responsibility. The times are pregnant with ominous signs.

Cause For Rejoicing.

Earnest contention for "THE FAITH" has ever been the duty of its votaries. The spirit through Jude declared in his day it was needful to write and exhort the brotherhood to keep up the contention; and the reason is obvious:—God employs the gospel as his power to save. It discloses his eternal purpose with regard to man and earth; his vast love and rich grace in dealing with rebellious man, that are calculated to draw him to himself; and having drawn him its exceeding great and precious promises sustain and comfort him through all the period of conflict. The gospel begets to a hope of life and keeps the trusting soul till it is consummated at the coming of the Lord, or mortal existence ends. Bad as the conditions were in apostolic times they are worse now in many respects; and we who have espoused the cause of God and truth must keep up the fight for the truth, which alone can sanctify, or set apart for God; we must "preach the Word," if we go beyond; or fall short of that, we shall come into the judgment.

The Church in Cleveland is trying to keep in the narrow way,—holding that a limited number sound in the faith can exert some influence for good if it be but little,—whereas if the standard be lowered, or the law of pardon and peace tampered with, and large accessions result the Church of God would disappear. As it is the gospel-net lands but few fish,—but the fishing goes on with the same old bait, and occasionally our hearts are rejoiced to find those who gladly receive the engrafted Word, and are baptised into the death of Jesus, the Anointed, and thereby secure a share in its benefits, take his sin-covering name upon them, and as children, acquire the rights and immunities of the only Begotten.

On Sunday, Sept. 16th, it was our privilege to assist Sister Jerow, once a Methodist, take upon her the only name under heaven whereby men can be saved. Moving into a new neighborhood she became acquainted with some of the great truths held by us. She was visited by others, and attended Bible-class and public preaching and having made the good confession now has peace and joy in believing. May she sacredly guard the name she has taken, and adorn the doctrine of the Anointed and at last enter into his joy, we pray.

On Sunday, September 23, we again had the evidence of the gospel's saving power exhibited to us, by the obedience to the faith of Mr. and Mrs. Heinrich Juergensen, formerly Lutheran and United Brethren, we believe, who, after months of investigation, listening to the Word preached, attendance at Bible-class and conversations and instruction with a view to casting in their lot with the witnesses for God and truth, concluded to forsake all to follow the Anointed, first in baptism, and then by a walk becoming the gospel till the end of life's journey. To the workers with God who sometimes have to wait long for fruit, it was delightful to see what love and gratitude they felt when they realized that the Son had made them free indeed, John viii. 36,—and were persuaded that what they had regarded as very adverse circumstances were overruled by a hand Divine, that "he who commanded the light to shine out of darkness may shine into their hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." We congratulate them for the better part chosen, and trust they will hold fast the beginning of their confidence steadfast unto the end, and at last meet the Lord's approving smile.

The bright spots on the way inspire us to increased effort while the door stands open. And we know it will cheer up those who have gone out east, west, north and south from this household, to learn that we still labor on, and not altogether in vain, are hopeful that it will not be long before others fall in with God's overtures.

Events in Foreign Lands.

The Chinese imbroglio is still within the diplomatic stage. The powers interested in the far East find the same difficulty in agreeing to the German proposals—i. e.: that the leaders in the anti-foreign demonstrations in China shall be given over to the powers for punishment before negotiations for peace begin—that they experienced in accepting the Russian plan for the withdrawal of all the troops from Pekin.

Up to the present writing it appears that only Austria and Italy have accepted the Kaiser's plan without reservation. The United States has rejected it, but has committed itself to the policy of demanding the punishment of the leaders responsible for the attacks on the foreigners. France and Russia have assented to the greater part of the German proposal, but do not insist upon punishment before negotiations are opened. Japan's position is similar to that of France and Russia.

Great Britain alone is silent. On Tuesday a news agency in London published a story to the effect that Lord Salisbury had verbally informed the German Ambassador that Great Britain would reject the Kaiser's proposals. This story still lacks confirmation.

In the meantime the German press has bitterly attacked the United States for refusing to accept the Kaiser's proposals. At the same time it is admitted by the more conservative newspapers in Berlin that the proposals will be modified to meet the varied ideas of the powers.

One of the most interesting features of the Chinese situation during the week has been the violent attacks of the foreign press on the American policy as revealed in President McKinley's reply to the German note. The French and German editors have been in a particular frenzied frame of mind while the English press has been little less acrid.

In his reply to the German note President McKinley stated that while the United States would demand the fullest reparation from China for the outrages on American citizens and the destruction of American property, this government preferred that the punishment of the instigators of the anti-foreign revolt should be left to the Chinese government.

Instructions have been sent to General Chaffee to send the American troops to Manilla. A regiment of infantry, a squadron of cavalry, and a battery of artillery will remain in Pekin as a legation guard. These troops will not be under the orders of Count von Waldersee.

Further than this, instructions have been drawn up under which Minister Conger is to begin negotiations with Prince Ching and Li Hung Chang to determine the indemnity and other forms of reparation due from China to the United States.

There is an increasing amount of gossip in the foreign press over the probability of war between Germany and China. Germany now has 26,000 troops in China and more are on the way. Close students of the situation, however, believe the Kaiser will not enter single-handed on a war which might tax to the utmost the financial resources of the empire. The cost of war with China would be enormous, even if of short duration.

It has been stated that France would join Russia in assisting Germany in a war upon China. Such an alliance engaging in actual hostilities with China would undoubtedly work the dismemberment of the far Eastern empire, unless Great Britain, the United States, and Japan intervened. Such intervention, however, is hardly to be expected, especially from the United States.

After all, the whole Chinese muddle at the present moment resolves itself into the single question, What will Great Britain do? Lord Salisbury so far has kept his own counsel. It is believed that he will make no announcement of his Chinese policy until the pending parliamentary elections are out of the way, or at least until it is certain that he will have a good working majority. He is fighting the parliamentary contest on a single issue—the Transvaal war. To announce his Chinese policy now would be to project a new and overshadowing issue into the contest—and the temper of the British public over the Chinese situation is yet unknown.

Two weeks hence, with the certainty of a strong parliamentary majority in Parliament behind him, Lord Salisbury may be in a position to define Great Britain's attitude with a force and vigor which will sweep away the present uncertainty, clear the atmosphere, and bring the situation to the point where the powers must drop diplomatic evasiveness and align themselves with Great Britain or against her.

There is nothing in the South African situation that warrants the belief that the Boer cause is any the less hopeless. The members of Kruger's Cabinet have sailed for Europe. The Auditor of State has taken the public records and archives, and the Treasurer has taken with him what funds are left in the strong box. There is no longer a Transvaal government. Seven thousand troops occupy Koomatie Poort, the town on the railway at the frontier. The railway from Delagoa Bay to Pretoria is practically open. British railway experts declare that within a few weeks 20,000 soldiers will be ample to police the two republics.

President Loubet of France seems to have completely won the loyalty and affection of the French army. A year ago the army was supposed to have been intensely hostile to him. During the year Loubet treated the army with the utmost rigor. He seemingly espoused the cause of Dreyfus. He gave friendly recognition to every man whom the army detested. Popular Generals were deprived of their commands and sent to distant stations. The army was ruled with an iron hand and not until it was made to know that France had a President determined to rule did it realize that it was no longer a disturbing element in French politics. Having brought the army into submission President Loubet seems to have drawn the glove of velvet over the hand of iron. General Negrier, banished last year, is returned to a higher position. Marchand, the idol of the Nationalists, is given an important post. The army sailing for China went on its mission with a message from Loubet that aroused the military enthusiasm of the nation, and at the grand review last Friday the President had the army at his feet.

The French army has been restored to its popularity in the minds of the people, and President Loubet, bourgeois as he is, is its recognized master.

News comes from Japan that Field Marshal Yamagata, who laid aside the sword to take up duties of state as Premier of the Cabinet, has resigned, and that Marquis Ito, the statesman, has again resumed control of the ministry. The change has not been unexpected. A year ago one of the best recognized authorities in Oriental politics made the prediction that ultimately Russia and Japan would settle their long standing quarrel by the arbitration of the sword, and that when the crisis came Yamagata would resign the Premiership to resume the sword, while Ito would take the helm of the ship of state.

At any event the resignation of the soldier and the return of the statesman at the present juncture of affairs in China is significant.

Ito is known to be opposed to any policy looking to the partition of China. During the last year, he spent much of his time at Pekin and by tact and diplomacy came into the closest relations with the Imperial authorities.

Japan has long been regarded as the natural ally of China and the enemy of Russia encroachments. The statements coming from Berlin, Vienna, and Shanghai that Japan has accepted unconditionally the German proposals, even if true, must not be taken as an indication that Japan will be with Germany if the latter makes war upon China.

War by the powers on China could only result in the dismemberment and the ultimate preponderance of Russian and German influence in the far East. With Russia occupying all of northern China, Corea would be absorbed as a morsel and Japan reduced to an insignificant island kingdom.

There are the best of reasons for believing that Japan will fight with Russia before consenting to the further growth of the Russian empire in the far East.

It is announced that Turkey has awarded an American company the contract for the steel rails for the proposed railroad from Constantinople to Mecca. The railroad, if it is ever built, will traverse western Asia Minor, Syria, and Arabia. Aside from its utility for conveying the hundreds of thousands of pilgrims who annually visit the shrine of Mecca, the railroad will traverse the only territory left to the Sultan in Asia. For it is undeniably true that the greater part of Asiatic Turkey has been divided between Germany and Russia. The Sultan has conceded Russia a sphere of influence beginning about 100 miles east of Constantinople and including all of Armenia north of the central mountain chain to Lake Van; and to Germany southern Asia Minor with Mesopotamia. All that is left to Turkey is Constantinople with its region about the Sea of Marmora and all Syria.

Ultimately these spheres of influence will be developed by German and Russian capital, and when once developed they will have passed from the rule of the Sultan forever.

Russian and German commercial and political aggression in Asiatic Turkey and the vehement agitation for independence in all the European provinces of Turkey will unquestionably bring about the downfall of the Ottoman empire. Russia or Germany will some day sit in power at Constantinople.

With all this accomplished, where will the remnants of the Ottoman empire find refuge? Why not at Mecca? —Chicago Tribune.

Obituary.

Norman Roblee was born in the town of Granville, Washington Co., State of New York, on January 21st, 1815, and died Sept. 24th, 1900, making him 85 years, 8 months, and 3 days old.

When a young man he left his native town, and went to the Western part of the state of New York where he married Miss Adelia Soule, who still survives him.

They had six children, four boys and two girls, all living at the present time.

For some time previous to his death, Mr. Roblee had lived in the town of Canisteo, Steuben County, New York, where he was living at the time of his death.

Early in life Mr. Roblee became convinced that the religion taught by Christ and his apostles, was that which was then called "Adventism." He was one of the first subscribers to the "Millennial Harbinger" which afterwards was changed to THE RESTITUTION, and continued not only a subscriber, but a careful reader of this paper up to the time of his last illness. THE RESTITUTION has certainly lost one of its best friends. He was, without doubt, one of the best Bible scholars in this country.

The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Gates, a Baptist clergyman, from a text selected by Mr. Roblee himself, sometime before his death. It may be found in 1st Cor. xv. 42–44. He was an earnest consistent Christian. No one ever questioned his integrity, and he was always ready to help the poor and needy.

CHAS. ROBLEE.

Send me that which thou knowest is a blessing, though it may not seem a blessing to me; and deny me that which thou knowest is not a blessing, however ready I, in my ignorance, may be to think so. That is the spirit of prayer. When we are praying for blessings, we ought never to pray for them absolutely; we ought always to pray for them if they be good for us; if not God in answering our prayer would not be blessing us indeed.

Be polite or courteous to everybody. True politeness is giving attention to little things, little acts of self denial, kindness and love, striving to make every body happy. It is benevolence flowing from a noble, generous, pitiful heart. It is in a word, doing to others as we would that they should do to us.

Troubles frequently meet us in the way of duty; they are designed to try our constancy, courage and alacrity; think not, I am going wrong, because tried; but wait on the Lord, and he shall save thee.

Poetry.

Might Have Been.

I might have been more patient—
Ah! would the angry word
Upon my lips had perished,
Heartfelt and unheard!
Some heart would now be lighter
To wend its toilsome way!
Some life would be more cheerful,
More sunshiny today.

I might have been more kindly—
How trifling is the cost
Of simple deeds of goodness,
Whose power is never lost!
The golden moment vanished,
And never to return;
The glory of bestowing,
Too late, too late I learn.

I might have been more loving
To those who hold me dear;
What little deeds, neglected,
Had soothed their pathway here.
The hasty word or action
That pained a gentle heart,
Ah! will its mournful memory
From out our life depart!

"I might have been"—sad burden
Of life's remorseful song,
Within the heart forever
Its haunting echoes throng.
Oh, youth, upon the threshold,
To thee is sweet lesson bow;
For deeds of love and kindness,
Life has one lesson—Now!

Genesis. Chap. 6.

1. And Noce was five hundred years old, and begot three sons Seem, Cham, Japheth. And it came to pass, when men began to become many upon the earth, and daughters had been begotten by them.

2. That sons of God, seeing the daughters of men were beautiful, took unto themselves wives from all that they chose.

3. And the Lord God said, My spirit shall not abide in these men forever, because they are flesh; but their days shall be one hundred and twenty years.

4. And there were giants upon the earth in those days, and thereafter when the sons of God went in unto the daughters of men and they generated for them, these were the giants of old, the men who made a name for themselves.

5. And when the Lord God saw the evil-doings of men had become multiplied upon the earth and that every one was meditating ("thinking through" a subject) diligently in his heart upon the wicked things all the days;

6. God also became enthused because he had created mankind on the earth, and he meditated; (or thought the thing through).

7. And God said, I will wipe mankind whom I created off from the face of the earth, from mankind to domestic-animal, and from creeping things to flying things of the heavens; for the reason that I have become enthused because I created them.

8. But Noce found favor in the sight of the Lord God.

9. And these are the generations of Noce. Noce was a justified man being an initiate (one initiated into the mysteries of God as then revealed) in his generation; and Noce pleased (not satisfied) God,

10. And Noce had begotten three sons Seem, Cham, Japheth.

11. And the earth had become corrupt in the sight of God; and the earth had become filled with injustice.

12. And the Lord God saw the earth, and it had become utterly corrupt, because all flesh had utterly corrupted its way upon the earth.

13. And the Lord God said unto Noce: An appointed time has come in my sight for all mankind, because the earth has become filled with injustice from them: and lo, I am going to utterly corrupt them and the earth.

14. Make thee for thyself an ark of timber hewn four-square; thou shalt make the ark in compartments, and asphalt it within and without with asphaltum.

15. And in this wise shalt thou make the ark; three hundred cubits (the sacred cubit of 24 inches probably) the length of the ark, and fifty cubits the breadth, and thirty cubits the height thereof.

16. Bringing it together at the top thou shalt finish it a cubit in width; and the door of the ark thou shalt make on one side; with a lower a second and a third story from the ground shalt thou make it.

17. And lo, I am leading the water-flood upon the earth, to utterly corrupt all flesh in which there is a breath of life beneath the heavens, and whatever is upon the earth will come to an end.

18. And I shall establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt enter into the ark, thou and thy wife and thy sons' wives with thee.

19. And from all the domestic animals and from all the creeping things and from all the wild-beasts, and from all flesh two by two from all shalt thou conduct them into the ark, that thou mayest support them with thyself; male and female shall they be.

20. From all the flying birds genus by genus, and all the domestic animals genus by genus, and from all the creeping things that creep upon the earth according to their genera, two by two from all shall they come in unto you to be supported with thee, male and female.

21. And thou shalt take for thyself from all the kinds of food which ye eat and thou shalt gather together for thy self, and it shall be for thee and them to eat.

22. And Noce did all that the Lord God had commanded him; in this wise did he.

COMMENT.

First clause of the first verse in this 6th chapter the 32nd verse of the 5th chapter R. V.

"Sons of God" instead of "the sons of God" R. V. This is a common term for "covenant people" all through the Scriptures of the Old Covenant and does not mean "angels" as some interpreters have said and as believed by many people. "For unto which of the angels hath he (God) said at any time, Thou art my son, etc.?" It simply states the fact that Covenant people disobeyed God, and practiced polygamy instead of adhering to monogamy as Christ himself teaches in his words. "It was not so from the beginning," etc.—"but Mousses allowed it because of the hardness of your hearts." "Beautiful" instead of "fair," R. V. Give the original women their just due.

"The Lord God" instead of "The Lord" R. R. "My spirit shall not abide in these men forever" instead of "my spirit shall not strive with man forever," R. V.

"Giants" instead of "The nephilim" R. V. "Evil-doings" instead of "wickedness" R. V. A concrete idea instead of an abstraction. The same difference only worse in the last clause of the 5th verse. Read and compare. For the same word is used of man's thinking wickedly as is used of God thinking in the 5th verse and translated in the C. V. and R. V. "repenteth."

In the 9th verse "justified" instead of "righteous" "an initiate" or "one perfected" in the mysteries of God—a common use in the Levitical teaching of the Old Covenant. For instance Mousses "perfected" his brother Aaroon as chief-priest according to the instruction received by him from God in the Mount. So he "perfected" the tabernacle according to a pattern shown him in the Mount. And yet we are told by Paul that the law "perfected" nothing morally nor could it "give life." We have the same use of "justified" in the book of Job translated "righteous" there also and very misleading. "Seem, Cham, Japheth" instead of "Shem, Ham, Japheth." These names are a good illustration of the general muddle of all the names in the C. V. and accounts for so much ignorance and obscurity in regard to persons and their origin in all the versions.

In the 11th verse "injustice" instead of "violence" R. V. In the 13th verse "utterly corrupt" instead "destroy" R. V. and very significant as it is an exact statement of what did occur. Neither mankind nor the earth was "destroyed" in the flood.

In the 14th verse instead of "an ark of gopher wood" R. V. "an ark of timber hewn four-square," "asphaltum" instead of "pitch" one is a specific term and the other is a general term.

In the 16th verse R. V. "A light shalt thou make to the ark and to a cubit shalt thou finish upward" is a statement that I would like to have some ship-builder explain. Read this translation and compare.

In the 17th verse should read "story" instead of "stories." How many stories were there according to the R. V.? "To utterly corrupt" instead of "destroy" R. V.

"Will come to an end" instead of "will die." R. V. This was a consummation and there were more things that come to an end than those that merely died.

Compare the reading of the 19-20-21 and 22nd verses with the same in C. V. and R. V. For the differences are all of them important in one way or another.

How to Get the Most Good from Tracts?

Of the value of tracts there can be no doubt. I know of no more effective way of bringing before people the light and beauty of the gospel than this means. As one brother has said, "You cannot argue with a tract." It does its work better than a preacher can do it. A preacher's words are heard and, by many, soon forgotten. A tract is placed in the hands of some interested one and it stands ready every hour of the twenty-four to do its duty—and it always tells the same story. As a rule tracts are the result of deep thought and close investigation on the part of those who write them, and consequently they do not grow old—they are ever new. In them the story of the kingdom is told with simplicity and every truth told in them points the reader to Holy Writ for its value. Many who are anxious for the truths are so situated that they must study the Word at odd moments and at such times as the home duties and the other duties of the day will permit. At such time the tract can do its work. Sermons will not do this work. They cannot do it as effectively. In our work in Oregon, Ill., we are doing our best work with tracts. We are using Bro. Wiley Jone's "Gospel of the Kingdom," and others equally good. We have made some observations in doing this work, and these have led to the writing of this article. The promiscuous giving of tracts is a sad mistake. Tracts in the hands of disinterested persons are like good wheat sowed upon rocks. I have seen the sidewalk strewn with tracts that have been given promiscuously at the door as the audience dispersed. In all this kind of work that we have seen done, it cannot be recalled that any one has ever refused to take a tract from the hand of a friend at the door. They are taken as a matter of courtesy to the giver. Those who will be so ill-mannered as to refuse to take the proffered tract seldom go to church, but the majority who attend the regular services of the church never read the tracts after they receive them. I am sure this is no exaggeration. What are we do then with tracts? Do what the wise husbandman would do before sowing the seed. First find soil that has in it all of the elements of quick growth and productiveness. Then prepare the soil. Then sow your seed and rake it in. Be wise enough to know your seed. A question was asked recently by a member of one of the popular churches, "Where in the Bible do you find so much to harp about on the kingdom and its establishment on the earth?"

Nebuchadnezzar's dream as explained to him by Daniel is a good place to begin with such cases. Much to our surprise, the person asking this question had never read or heard of the metalic image there described. Having once awakened an interest we found a work, "What Jesus Preached," a good thing to put into such hands. After some instruction in what the Bible teaches concerning the kingdom, provide tracts that will show the terms by which we are to come into a saving relationship with this kingdom. In our estimation it is a bad thing to tell a believer in a sky kingdom and the present inherent immortality of the soul, that he is a lost man because he believes such paganism. It is a case where we must be wise as serpents, but as harmless as doves. By that process of love known only to the true Christian, we can lead the inquirer step by step until at last the light begins to dawn, and then he will either overwhelm you with eager inquiries, if he is honest, or drop it if he is dishonest. This treatment is the only thing that will bring out the former class, and it will do more for the other than abruptness and abuse would do. What a delight there is to the believer who thus spends his time preparing the ground and sowing when he sees in the faces of those with whom he has labored the consciousness of breaking light. We can tell of those who have spent the half of nights searching the Scriptures to find something to rebuke us for making the statement that the soul is not immortal. We have seen the conflict going on at some length, and at the close have heard it said, "I cannot begin to tell you how much you have done for me!"

Friends and brethren, let us put a little more self-sacrifice into our tract giving, and let us be sure that every one we give out is a pearl cast in the right place.

S. J. LINDSAY.

SEND THE RESTITUTION to some poor person as present for 1900. The cost is only three cents a week.

Editor Restitution:

After an absence of five weeks I am at home again, for which I thank my heavenly Father. On the 3rd of August I left for Blush, Mo. Brothers Graham and Cooper met me at Fredericktown and conveyed me to the church, which was filled with more people than there were seats to accommodate them, and we had crowded houses of nights. We had two sermons each day except two. While here we met with R. D. Logan, of St. Louis, Mo., who is quite a Bible Student. He gave us one discourse on Christ's coming in 1900, and gave us some strong arguments in its favor, and my prayer is that it only might be true, still as yet, I cannot see it clear; but we will soon find out its truthfulness or its error. If he is mistaken he is not the first one. After preaching eighteen discourses we left them rejoicing, except a few seemed a little cold. There were no additions, but the interest was good and I was puzzled to see such interest and no additions. The 3rd Sunday we spent at Vineland where we had a good meeting. There are only three members at this place, and as the men were very busy threashing, we gave them only two discourses. We spent two Sundays at Morse Mills, giving them twelve sermons, and baptizing five into the all-saving name of Jesus. We organized a church with the following officers:—John F. Williams, Elder. J. Gifford and Judson Town as Deacons, and Sisters Gifford and Town as Deaconesses. We also organized a Sunday School, with Sister May Warne, Superintendent, Sister Fila C. Gifford; Secretary, and Sister McAulie, Treasurer, Sister Nellie Gifford, Organist, and Brother J. F. Williams, Teacher of the Bible Class. This little band numbers twenty, and the Postmaster will hand out THE RESTITUTION, to six subscribers at Morse Mills, not bad and rather a model church. I arrived at Chelsea Park, in Kansas City on the 5th of Sept. Although the number was small we had a very good meeting. Three were baptized. I preach the gospel to the people which Paul said he was not ashamed of; for it is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth. Rom. i. 16. And when they hear this gospel and gladly receive it they are baptized. What is the gospel? Good news or glad tidings of a coming kingdom. I am aware that notwithstanding this plain, simple exhibition of the gospel, and of the testimony which sustains it, the minds of some may be so blinded by false teaching that they may yet be looking for some other power of God in some wonderful, physical operation of the Holy Spirit. "So many fell down and cried," and "So many stood up and asked the prayers of the church." Where do you find such as that in the Bible? All the converts to Christianity, however, in primitive times, became such by believing the gospel. Nowhere in all the oracles, do we find any other power or operation spoken of as turning men from darkness to light and from the power of satan to God, than the gospel he was not ashamed of. Paul gloried in that gospel, because it was the power of God to salvation, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile. May God bless the seed that we have sown, and may it produce abundantly for the Lord.

Submitted in love of the truth,

JOHN FOORE.

Dear Household of Faith:

I have just been reading the dear, old RESTITUTION, and I find so many good things in it that I feel as if I too must say a little. I was reading Bro. Zilmer's article, "As in a Strange Country." I too, am in a "strange country." There are none of like precious faith here, and it is hard to get to talk to others about our faith, but when I have opportunity I always say a word. My memory is too short to enter into any controversy. I can remember the words; but dont know where to find them. I wish that we could have a church near, but times are so hard. There are two in our family that I think would go with us, also a neighbor girl, if they could hear a few sermons; but if one should come this way and baptize them and then go on, they would be left out again. They like to read THE RESTITUTION, and from it they get a great deal of information. I wish we could have meetings here, at Englewood, Kan., like they do in other places. I know there are lots of good brethren in our churches in Indiana, that could go if they would only make the start. When the Lord comes we will all want to hear a welcome. I only wish I could do more.

Your Sister in Christ,

CATHARINE MILLER.

Selections.

Reading the Bible.

It is not necessary to gather statistics to prove that, in the tension and hurry of our times, the reading of the Bible has fallen almost entirely into disuse for hundreds of lives. It is neglected, as are all the great classic literature of the ancients and the masterpieces of our English tongue. The young men in our colleges are introduced to these, but in a few cases is the acquaintance maintained long after graduation. The mind needs composure—needs to be collected, at ease with itself, with poise and serenity—to be in the proper receptive mood for the deep thoughts of profound thinkers and writers. Once, in Seattle, we took up a volume of Mr. Browning, and after a vain attempt at reading put it by, with an amused feeling of the incongruity of poetry with that feverish and tumultuous atmosphere.

Yet, the more distracted our times, the more intense the strain of existence, the more do men need to calm themselves, to steady and hold themselves in hand, to check the reckless dissipation of reserve forces, to maintain sanity, proportionateness, right estimates of life, by contact with the world-thoughts of the loftiest literature. The hotter the pace, the quicker the pulse, the more nerve-racking the competition, the more should men ballast themselves with the massive and weighty truths of God's revelation.

It would be interesting, even if depressing, to know how many members of our churches, among the male constituency and among business men, fall under this indictment of neglect. In very many cases the only reading is of the morning and evening newspapers. While every intelligent man must read these for information, there is a necessity of "the literature of power." Newspaper-reading at its best is necessarily desultory, superficial, ephemeral. It rarely makes any tax upon the intellect. Men need to read something that will evoke their thought, stir the deeper nature, brace and stimulate the brain.

A friend of ours, on going into the Klondike with his wife a few years ago, took three books in his necessarily limited library: a cook book, a copy of Shakespeare, and the Bible. Here was provision for body, mind and soul. During those long winter nights, in those frozen solitudes, he read Shakespeare through five times, and the Bible correspondingly. Think of it! Would it not almost be worth banishment to the Arctic Circle to get away, for a time, from the suffocating and bewildering plethora of papers, magazines, and day-lived new books, in order to be shut up for nine months with Shakespeare and the Bible? Our friend "struck it rich" and became enormously wealthy, but we fancy his mental wealth from that experience was the greater part of his good fortune.

It may be that the Scriptures are not neglected absolutely entirely. A few verses are hurriedly read, perhaps, at night or morning; or it may be a chapter on Sunday. But it can scarcely be said that this is meeting the requirements of the case. There is no intent of shoving out the Word because of any disrespect or disbelief. There is but one plea made—that of "no time." It is the same excuse which applies to carelessness in devotions. Prayer, too, is dropped out of life. It too often goes simply by default in these over-busy times. But Jesus, under as great a pressure as the most occupied and care-ridden man of affairs of today, made the plea of "so busy" rather a reason for Scripture-reading and prayer than an excuse for eliminating it. The busier he was, the more laden, oppressed, driven, the more he felt the need of a spiritual corrective, alternative, support, and inspiration.

Men in commercial life are necessarily in the harness and under the whip. If they are to succeed they must be devoted, energetic, incessantly active, planning and working continuously. We honor and applaud them for it. But nevertheless they must, even in their busiest seasons, take time for their person, for sleep, eating, bathing, exercise, appareling; they must take time for their proper duties to their families and to their neighbors in social relations; they must find time to discharge their obligations as citizens; and none the less must they either find time or make it for the imperative necessity of spiritual culture. The soul has its inalienable rights. If it is not to be overwhelmed by the material; if it is to realize its declaration of independence from the world and its crushing exactions; if for it there is to be life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, its way must be left open to the place of prayer and to the inspired Book, which has strengthened the generations of men. Business is good, and success and wealth are good, but there is something more and higher. There must be the Bread of Life and the Water of Life; for the life is always more than the meat.—Christian Advocate.

Put in your Bible.

Here is a handy table, furnished by the Christian World, which it would be well to cut out or copy for reference in Bible studies:

A day's journey was about twenty-three and one-fifth miles.

A Sabbath-day's journey was about an English mile.

A cubit was nearly twenty-two inches.

A hand's-breadth is three and five-eighths inches.

A finger's-breadth is equal to one inch.

A shekel of silver was about fifty cents.

A shekel of gold was $8.

A talent of silver was $538.50.

A talent of gold was $13,809.

A piece of silver, or a penny, was thirteen cents.

A farthing was three cents.

A mite was less than a quarter of a cent.

A geraph was one cent.

An epah, or bath, contained seven gallons and five pints.

A hin was a gallon and two pints.

An omer was six pints.

To the Brethren who love the Lord Jesus Christ, in Canada:

Who will be willing to form an association in Canada for the defence and spread of the truth? "In union there is strength." The time is short till the Master will come when we will have to give an account as to how we have used our talents. Will all those who are anxious to work in the Master's service communicate with me, stating what best can be done in their neighborhood to interest people in the truth. Address me at 42 Gloucester St., Toronto, Canada.

For or against, is the saying of the Master himself. "We shall not excuse ourselves by saying, 'I was never openly bad;' for we should have been openly good." If by a word of mine I could have influenced a soul to accept the Lord, and if that word was not spoken, am I then not responsible?

Obituary.

James J. Corbaley was born near Indianapolis, Marion County, Indiana, on the 23rd of January, 1832, and died of a cancer on his face on the 4th day of August, 1900. His age was 68 years, 6 months and 12 days. He grew to manhood in that County, and became a member of the Church of God when a young man, and he continued in that faith until his death. Shortly before his death he requested his wife to inform the writer and others of his friends that he hoped to meet them and all the redeemed ones in that beautiful world, where sad partings would never come, and where there would be no more sickness, pain or death. He left a wife and one son, and three brothers, and many sorrowing friends to mourn their loss. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope.

After leaving Indianapolis he lived several years in Marshall County, Indiana, where he married. His wife's maiden name was Louisa Shirley. From there he removed to Illinois, near Rock Falls, and from thence to California, and finally settled at Wyandotte in that State, where he died. Our friends are falling around us, and we should not be unmindful of the fact that the shafts of death are liable to find us—and as the sentence of death has been passed upon Adam and his children the wise thing for us to do is to prepare by developing the Christian graces so that whether living or dead we may be prepared to meet the Lord at his second coming, to be the recipients of immortality and eternal life. The signs of the times surely indicate that the end of this present age is near. Soon may it come. In hope,

RICHARD CORBALEY.

Dear Restitution:

Death has again visited the Church of God in Cleveland and taken away our aged Sister Chapman. Her age was 85 years. She was born in England, grew up, and was married to Wm. Chapman, to whom were born two sons and one daughter who all survive their mother. In 1854 they came to America, residing in this, Cuyahoga County, Ohio, ever since, with the exception of about two years. Soon after they came to this country, they became Disciples, and a few years later, having learned the way of truth more perfectly, they obeyed the gospel and were united with the Church of God in Cleveland, and remained worthy members to the end. For many years they lived near Berea, some twelve miles or so from our place of meeting, but no matter what the weather, or how bad the roads, they were seldom missing at our meetings. Brother Chapman fell asleep some eight years ago and was laid away in a Berea cemetery, by whose side we laid our aged sister, Aug. 20, she having died Aug. 18, 1900. I cannot say she died of any particular disease except old age. For quite a time she had been gradually failing mentally and physically—fading away till she ceased to breath. Sleep on, dear sister, till you hear the voice that shall wake all the sleeping saints to life eternal.

GEO. ELTON.

Change of Location.

The friends will please make a note of the change of address of Brother J. S. Hatch. He has moved from this state to Tustin, Orange Co. California where letters should be addressed. We commend our Bro. Hatch to the brethren on the Pacific Coast, and add if any desire his labors in the gospel field he is ready to answer calls.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 634 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

Editor Restitution:

I wish to announce through THE RESTITUTION that I go to Redington, Neb., Oct. 4th, to hold a discussion with a minister of the Christian Church, D. W. Thompson, who challenged our brethren to discuss the doctrines of the kingdom spoken of in Daniel II. 44. We will also discuss the origin, nature and destiny of man. The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 10, 1900. NUMBER 38.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION ... plate the final "restitution of all things ... God hath spoken by the mouth of all ... prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalsaints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

Poetry.

AT LAST.

At last!
The night is at an end,
The dawn comes softly up,
Clear as its own clear dew;
And weeping has gone out,
To let in only songs
And everlasting joy;
At last.—Amen.

At last!
The Prince of Life has come,
The Church is glorified.
The sleepers have awoke,
The living have been changed;
Death has at last been slain,
And the grave spoiled for ever!
At last.—Amen.

At last!
The curse is swept away,
The serpent-trail effaced;
The desert smiles with gems,
And blossoms like the rose.
'Tis more than Eden now,
Earth has become as heaven!
At last.—Amen.

At last!
Satan is bound in chains;
The Church's ancient foe,
Old enemy of Christ,
Has fallen, with all his hosts;
And Babylon the Great
Has sunk to rise no more!
At last.—Amen.

At last!
Israel sits down in peace;
Jerusalem awaken,
Her King at length has come,
Messiah reigns in power;
The heavens rejoice and sing,
And earth once more is free!
At last.—Amen.

Genesis. Chap. 7.

1. And the Lord said unto Nooe, Enter thou and all thy household into the ark, because thee have I seen to be justified in my sight in this generation.

2. And from the clean domestic animals conduct in unto thee in sevens male and female; and from the unclean domestic animals in pairs, male and female.

3. And from the flying things of the heavens the clean in sevens, male and female, and from all the unclean flying things in pairs, male and female, to sustain seed upon the earth.

4. For in seven days more I am going to bring rain upon the earth for forty days and forty nights, and I am going to wipe off every standing thing which I have created from the face of all the earth.

5. And Nooe did all the Lord God had commanded him.

6. And Nooe was six hundred years old, and the flood of water occurred on the earth.

7. And Nooe and his sons and his wife and his sons' wives with him entered into the ark, because of the water of the flood.

8. And from the clean flying things and from the unclean flying things, and from the clean domestic animals and from the unclean domestic animals, and from all the creeping things upon the earth,

9. Two by two they entered in unto Nooe into the ark, male and female even as God had commanded Nooe.

10. And seven days afterwards the waters of the flood came to be upon the earth.

11. In the six hundredth year in the life of Nooe, the second month on the twenty-seventh of the month, on this day all the fountains of the abyss were rent open and the cataracts of the heavens were opened.

12. And it rained upon the earth forty days and forty nights.

13. On this day entered into the ark Nooe, Seem, Cham, Japheth, the sons of Nooe, and the wife of Nooe and the three wives of his sons with him,

14. And all the wild beasts according to their genera and all the domestic animals according to their genera, and every creeping thing that moveth upon the earth according to their genera, and every flying bird according to their genera,

15. Entered into the ark unto Nooe, two by two, male and female, from all flesh in which there is a breath (spirit) of life.

16. And they entered in male and female from all flesh even as God had commanded Nooe; and the Lord God closed the ark outside of him.

17. And the flood occurred for forty days and forty nights upon the earth; and the water was increased and raised the ark and lifted it up from the earth.

18. And the water got control over and was increased exceedingly over the earth; and the ark was borne up upon the water.

19. And the water got very exceeding control over the earth, and covered all the high mountains that were under the heavens.

20. Fifteen cubits (sacred cubits) was the water lifted up above and covered all the high mountains.

21. And all the flesh that moveth upon the earth of the flying things and the domestic animals and the wild beasts, and every creeping thing that moveth upon the earth and every man died therefrom.

22. And every thing that hath a breath of life, and every thing that was upon the dry land died therefrom.

23. And everything that had been stood up on the face of the earth from man to animal and creeping things and flying things of the heavens were wiped out, and wiped off from the earth. And Nooe alone and those with him in the ark were left.

24. And the water was lifted up over the earth for one hundred and fifty days.

COMMENT.

In the first verse "justified" instead of "righteous" R. V. and C. V. Nooe was no more righteous than Christians are now, and he was justified in exactly the same way that they are now—that is pardoned.

In 2nd verse "to sustain" instead of "to keep alive" R. V.

In the 4th verse "every standing thing that I have created" instead of "every living thing" R. V. not as specific as the text.

Compare the 8th and 9th verses in the C. V. and R. V. with the reading here as there is quite a difference.

In the 11th verse "the twenty-seventh day" instead of "the 17th day" R. V. And "cataracts" instead of "windows" R. V. and C. V. "The fixed condition" in the sky was loosened up evidently. "And it rained" instead of "the rain was" R. V. an idiom. How would it sound now to say "the rain was" instead of "it rained?"

In the 14th verse no distinction in the R. V. between the "wild beasts" and the "domesticanimals." Observe that "pneuma" (spirit) of life is applied here in the 14th verse to all the organic animate creation including man. Then where is the argument for natural immortality for mankind which is still advanced by the church at large? It proves too much. For if the breath of spiritual life was breathed into man at creation, then it was also breathed into all the rest of the animate creation. The better explanation is that the animating breath of all creation was the divine spiritual breath or "pneuma" of the Lord God, and that being so the two words for breath "psuchic" and "pneuma" are sometimes used interchangeably, where the animating breath only is referred to as in this case, as an illustration. God breathes the breath of life into all created animate life and it lives. He withdraws it and they die, mankind included. Book of Psalms.

In the 18th verse "was borne up" instead of "went" R. V. In the 22nd verse "upon the dry land" instead of "in the dry land." 23rd verse "wiped out" and "wiped off" instead of "destroyed" R. V. 24th verse "was lifted up" instead of "prevailed" R. V. It prevailed longer than 150 days, but began to decrease at the end of the 150 days.

CHAS. GARDNER.

The Cat and Her Kitten.

"Isaac, see what that dog is barking at?" I looked and to my surprise, I found our little four weeks old kitten, crouched and humped and holding her own against a dog, big enough to eat her up. She had every chance to retreat, as our back gate was open, but instead of retreating she seemed bent on charging. I was surprised at her courage, for she seemed to have no supports. But I was mistaken, for her mother was there, in ambush, behind some boards. I cannot tell whether the kitten saw her, but if not, her faith took the place of sight. The mother appeared to be giving her little one her first lesson in the costly art of self defense. I just wished that I could feel as secure in the presence of danger as this little kitten. It was no match for the dog in a rough and tumble, but faith in its mother's nearness and power to protect, banished all fear and made it bold in the presence of death. Yes, it was confidence in its mother, that enabled this little life to stand its ground, and be insensible to fear.

Why is it that God's little ones, when in danger have so many fears? Is it not because our Divine protector is not sensibly present with us? Jacob said, "God is here and I knew it not." This is the experience of too many today, we are not conscious of the Divine presence, and that is just why we are not more aggressive in Christian work and have so little sunshine on our faces. There is an enemy on our track and may be very near some of us, when he comes we all have to yield. We will have to go with him to prison. We cannot conquer him, but God can. This is his work, not ours. We sing:

"I fear no foe, with thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness;
Where is death's sting? Where grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if thou abide with me!"

We sing this and many other nice verses in our churches, not only so, but very many good but thoughtless people, back their religious views by quoting the hymn book. The churches attach as much importance to [illegible] prayer and hymn books as they do to the Old and New Testament Scriptures. This is true. Where is death's sting? Better ask, where is it not? Ask that mother turning away from that little short grave, Where grave, thy victory? Why, in holding our darlings against our wishes. Thank God for promised victory, but we cannot shout for victory until death and the grave surrender their prisoners. Some good church people believe they can obtain the future life without dying—can they? I believe some of our hymns teach this by implication.

Two Old Songs Wanted.

Forty and fifty years ago the Christian or Campbellite church that I attended, on Little Wild Cat, Ind., when a lad, used two old songs that were in their book then, the name of said book I have forgotten. They still ring in my ears, and I want them, and have been hunting for them a long time, and would be pleased to have some one help me find them. The first verse of one of them is this,

"My Christian friends in bonds of love,
Whose hearts the sweetest union prove,
But when I see that we must part,
You draw the cords around my heart."

The last two lines may not be here. The last verse of the [illegible]

"There we shall greet at Jesus' feet,
And all his wonders tell;
And triumph in redeeming grace,
No brethren farewell."

These were favorite farewell songs and it runs in my mind that they were very appropriate.

T. E. ADAMS.

Fear No Evil.

When Plato was told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him, he replied: "It is no matter; I will try to live so that no one will believe them." If old Plato could reason thus, how much more the Christian, who is made perfect in love! His good name, his personal reputation, have been placed upon God's altar. He has committed his all to him who "is able to keep that which is committed unto him against that day." No matter who may speak ill of us, or what ill they may speak, if it be falsely for Christ's sake, all is well. Rest in him. He will manage the case for you.

Hope in Evil Times.

In the opening sermon before the triennial session of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York, Bishop Whipple utterld these significant sentences:

"We are perplexed by the unbelief and gladness of our time. The Christian faith is assailed not only with scoffings old as Celsus and Julian, but also with the keenest intellectual criticism of divine revelation, the opposition of alleged scientific facts, and a Corinthian worldliness whose motto is, 'Eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.' In many places Christian homes are dying out. Crime and impurity are coming in as a flood, and anarchy raises its hated form in a land where all men are equal before the law. The lines between the church and the world are dim. Never did greater problems confront the council of the church. An apostolic church has graver work than discussion about its name or the amending of its canons and rubrics. I fear that some of this unbelief is a revolt from a caricature of God. These mechanical ideas about the universe are the outcome of a mechanical theology which has lost sight of the fatherhood of God. There is much honest unbelief. In these yearnings of humanity; in its clubs, brotherhoods, and orders; in their readiness to share all things with their brothers, I see unconscious prophecies of the brotherhood of all men as the children of one God and Father. Denunciation will not silence unbelief. The name of infidel has lost its terrors. There is only one remedy. It is in the spirit, the power, and the love of Jesus Christ. Philosophy cannot touch the want. [illegible] hand to grasp, no Savior [illegible], no God to save. When men see the hand, the heart, and the face of Christ, they will believe in the fatherhood of men and the fatherhood of God.

We are living in the eventide of the day, when all things point toward the second coming of our King. God has placed the English-speaking people in the forefront of the nations. They number one-tenth of the human family, and I believe God calls them to the work of the last time. The wealth of the world is largely in Christian hands. There never have been such opportunities for Christian work and never such a harvest as awaits the husbandman. You may tell me of difficulties and dangers. We have only one answer. Sin, sorrow and death are not the inventions of a Christian creed. 'There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.'"

Trouble Made Beautiful.

Most of the shells of the oyster are pearly in the interior; and as the true pearls are merely morbid growths, they may produce pearls of various qualities. The formation of pearls is caused by the introduction of irritating substances, such as grains of sand, between the mantle and the shell. The irritation causes the animal to cover the obnoxious object with layers of pearl, which generally attach the foreign body to the interior of the shell. The Chinese produce pearls artificially by placing substances in the position just described; and we have seen some shells in the interior of which small metal images were attached in this manner by the pearly secretions. When we look at a pearl, we look at an annoyance that has been ennobled. The oyster by itself is of merely nominal value. But the result of the oyster's own treatment of its irritation in this world—the pearl—is something "of great price." Apart from this its pecuniary worth, this gem has a moral significance. It suggests that trouble may be made beautiful, and reminds us that among mankind some martyrs are more remembered by the glory with which they have invested their sorrows than by any other portion of their lives. Biography has its moral pearls, which have been treasured long after the creators of them have perished, just as the material pearls are valued long years after the oysters have been discarded.—Great Thoughts.

The Wages of Sin.

"The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23.

The wages of sin is not eternal misery—eternal pain—eternal conscious suffering. It is not the gnawings of a guilty conscience in this world, and restoration to the favor of God in the next. It is not to be cast down to hell for a little while, until the divine wrath shall have been satisfied, and then the forgiveness and favor and patrimony of divine love. It is not to be cast out from the favorable presence of God until you shall finally have the fulness of the gospel and be saved. It is nothing of the kind; it is "death." "The Lord preserveth all them that fear him: but the wicked will he destroy." 'Tis the divine mandate, and no amount of explaining or twisting and turning, no amount of Platonic sophistry will make it mean, or read or teach otherwise. "The wages of sin is death." If it were otherwise God would have said so. He has never said differently, therefore it is not true. O ye teachers of false theology; ye perverters of the true way; ye corrupters of a pure gospel, ye discriminators of the falsehood "Ye shall not surely die," hear the words of the Most High; "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, cruel, both with wrath and fierce anger: he will lay the land desolate and destroy the sinners thereof out of it." Hear it! hear it!! "The wages of sin is death." Let God be true though it make some teachers, even masters in Israel, liars. "The wages of sin is death."

Some Features of our Time.

This is an age of brilliant pretensions, but sad realities. Its professions and practices, its facts and theories, present a climax of contradictions.

There never was so much of the form of godliness, and never so little of the power.

Never was there so many professors of religion, and never so little religion itself.

There never was a time when there was so much money in the world, and never a time when there was more widespread and distressing poverty.

There never was a time when there were so many remedies for every disease, real or imaginary, which profess to be sure cures, absolutely infallible, and never a time when there existed so much disease, sickness, suffering and death.

There never was a time when there was so much boasting of progress and advancement on the part of the race, and never a time when they gave more palpable evidences of fast descending into every depth of iniquity and sin.

And what does all this show? It shows that the pretensions on which men build themselves up are a sham, and their pretensions hypocrisy. They are willing to deceive others, and to be deceived themselves. This is the time when the prophet tells us that evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. We see this work going on before us, which proves that we have reached the time to which the prophet's words apply. There is nothing to which men will not put their hand for gain. With worthless nostrums, which the vendors know will not accomplish what they claim, the confidence of the afflicted is secured, and their means filched. Falsity and hollowheartedness exist on every hand. Truth is fallen in the streets, and equity cannot enter. Nor will this state of things improve till he whose right it is, the Prince of the house of David, takes the throne.

We rejoice that this event is at the door. Hasten, O King of kings, the glad day.

The art of listening is an art. But of all forms and phases of that art, spiritual listening is the highest. To listen to the voice of men—getting some knowledge from your next door neighbor, talking over the gate with the farmer, getting from every man you meet some new equipment,—this is art.

If those who owe us would remit, we will appreciate the favor.

Feeling Saved.

Salvation does not depend upon feeling, but upon faith—believing upon the only begotten Son of God. If it did depend upon feeling, there are times when it would be next to impossible to be saved. In times of sickness and of great suffering, or of great weakness, it may be impossible to "feel saved," although it may be easily possible at such times to know the fact and trust in it beyond all doubt or hesitancy. John Ireland Ward forcefully says: "St. Paul did not say, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt feel that thou art saved,' but 'thou art saved.' 'He that believeth on me hath everlasting life,' not 'shall feel that he has everlasting life.' 'Whoso believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God;' 'believeth,' not 'feels,' that he is the Son of God. 'God dwelleth in him, and he in God.'

"Suppose we read that we have to feel that God dwells in us, and unless we do feel it there can be no union! Few there would be indeed who would have this indwelling. There is no such word as feeling in any of these assurances. The Bible is not built upon feeling, but upon facts. The desire to feel and the reluctance in taking the Lord at his Word is what stands between many a repentant sinner and a life of great service. It stands between us often and a full in-dwelling of Christ. He wants to come and 'sup with' us, to enter in and dwell with us; but as long as we cannot feel that we are his, we turn away all unsatisfied, losing the great blessing he longs to give."

Martin Luther was once asked, "Do you feel as if your sins were forgiven?" "No," he returned stoutly. "I don't feel that they are forgiven, but I know that they are, because God says so in [illegible]

Preachers and Hearers.

The late Archbishop of York is said to have classified preachers of the gospel as follows: "There are three kinds of preachers: the preacher you can't listen to, the preacher you can listen to, and the preacher you can't help listening to." Of the three classes, the last is in a very decided minority. Old Thomas Boston, the author of "The Fourfold State," who died about 170 years ago, said that in his day there were four different kinds of hearers: First were the sponges, who sucked up everything indiscriminately, and let it run right out again; second were the sand-glasses, that let what entered at one ear pour out at the other; third were the strainers, that let the good go and retained the bad; and fourth, the sieves, that separated the good grain from the chaff, and retained it to feed upon. If all preachers and hearers were like the last of the named classes, what royal times there would be in the church of Christ!

A Belated Kiss.

She kissed the old man; she showered upon him kisses and tears. She told all the people how good he was. I thought if she had only given two of those kisses per quarter for the last ten years how the tender-hearted old gentleman would have smiled through his tears. But now he took it all very coolly.

He was dead. He was old and poor, and she was young and rich. She had ten rooms, but no room for father. Yet he made room for her when he had only two. The old man wasn't educated. She was—at his expense. He had fed and clothed her for twenty years at home and at college until she had risen into more refined and cultured society, and married among them. The old people's dress and dialect were too coarse.

She kissed him and buried him in a beautiful coffin. Dear father is to have a costly marble monument. A warm kiss while living is better than cold marble when dead.

"The best mode of keeping improper thoughts out of our minds is to keep those minds so filled with good thoughts that there will be no room for improper thoughts. He who acts upon this rule will generally have not much trouble with bad thoughts. Such thoughts will not be his usual companions."

Sikh, meaning disciple, was the name given to his followers by the Punjabi reformer, Baba Nanak, who commenced his mission about the close of the 15th century. He taught belief in one God, and that knowledge of him, the only true wisdom, must be attained by his favor.

The perfume of the rose lingers from the time the bud opens till the last leaf falls; it is an indestructible part of the flower. There is an aroma of sanctity in superficial Christian experience and observation that may attract for a while, but only where there has been a radical change of mind and transfer of affection through the power of the truth, does the fragrance of piety perfume the whole life.

"Our characters are formed for good or evil from the company we keep. Confidence in our power to refrain from the vices of others too often inveigles us into the risk of mingling with associates whom we know to be our inferiors both mentally and morally. The daily influence of such company will blind us to what we know to be wrong, and we are unconsciously led into acting in such a manner as we would have formerly condemned."

Ho Yow, Chinese consul-general at San Francisco, said in a recent address delivered there, that he feared the spread of Christianity in China, because his countrymen, being quick to learn, "will be able to manufacture guns and all the engines of warfare," and precipitate a terrible conflict. Ho Yow, like many people in this country fails to distinguish between Christianity and civilization. But we can hardly blame them, considering what passes for Christianity. Ho Yow and the rest should go to the Christian's guide-book to ascertain what it will do for those who believe and obey it, before they pass judgment, or speak at random about it."

A contemporary says:—"There is now a general feeling; which can be referred to no particular facts nor explained on any rational theory, that we are approaching a period of greater combats (than those of the preceding century), a world struggle, in which tremendous machinery which has been organized for war, is to be put to a full test between the rival powers who are grasping at the earth, or all of it that remains unattached to the great empires. There has certainly been no period in the past when the ambitions for conquest were so keen and widespread as at present; when so many powers armed to the teeth were watching jealously every movement of their neighbors, and looking about with so little scruple for compensations."

There has been a little more activity in the war business in the Philippines the past week.

The Chinese affair has gone through a deal of diplomatic fussing the last week. It is claimed Russia is to be given Manchuria if she gets the powers to "withdraw." A body of German troops were attacked a few miles south of Tien Tsin by 8,000 Chinese, and compelled to return. Alarm is felt at Hong Kong, as a village near there was attacked by a thousand of the rebels, who were repulsed.

On last Sunday Dowie opened his public meetings in London, and now proposes to overthrow the English Church. When asked he finally admitted he was not Christ, but that he was "one of the Anointed" Mr. Dowie will find different customs in England, and may have to change his tactics. He claims the privilege of making remarks and calling names, but resents return in kind. In America it is unlawful to thus disturb a meeting, but in England "heckling" as the interrupting of a speaker is called, is regarded as every man's right, so the "Dr." will likely get some back talk.

"Thy Testimonies."

"Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever; for they are the rejoicing of my heart. I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes always even unto the end." Psa. cxix. 8. A remarkable Scripture, surely, one would at first be apt to say. But on reflection we are led to ask if God's testimonies are not the heritage of all who are the children of God by adoption? If we are children, then we are heirs,—heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. The testimonies are the title-deeds, the doubly attested will under which, or by which we come into possession, the assurance that hope will be realized; the true source of joy on the way to life. Says the Psalmist, "They are the rejoicings of my heart;" and the result of having inclined his heart to perform God's statutes always, even unto the end of mortal existence. He had resolved to be governed by it. He had inclined his heart. It had been heading in another direction, but he had mastered his heart, (v. 161.) till it stood in awe of Jehovah's Word; and yet his experience was, that those who loved God's law had great peace."

A Few Facts.

IMMORTILITY,—The words immortal and immortality, do not occur at all in the writings of Moses and the Prophets, and only six times in the writings of the Evangelists and Apostles, where they are twice applied to God,—viz:, 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 16; twice to that bodily investiture to be granted to the faithful who are "alive and remain" to the coming of the Lord; and in the resurrection, viz:—1 Cor. xv. 53-54; once to that Incorruptibility brought to light in the gospel by the abolition of death in the resurrection of the Christ, 2 Tim. i. 10, and once to the eternal life, which is to be given to those immersed believers of the gospel of the kingdom who "seek for it" by a patient continuance in well doing. Rom. ii. 7.

These are all the places in the Bible where the words immortal and immortality occur; from which it is clearly evident that they are never applied to man as ah present constituted, either in body, soul or spirit.

For immortal soul, therefore, the reader must look elsewhere than in the Bible. He will find it only in the writings of men, but not in the Scriptures of the Prophets. He will find it in the sermons of the populars, but not in preaching of that apostolic ministry instituted by Jesus near 1800 years ago.

These are significant facts, dispute them who can. Let any mighty man in the Scriptures give a "thus saith the Lord," the soul is immortal.

Moses and the Land of Promise.

Moses may be fairly described (the man Christ Jesus alone excepted) as the most distinguished member of the human race. What historian shines so brightly as he? Others have added a few links to the historical chain, whereas the honor is his of having commenced it and of recording those marvelous events which complete the earliest stage in the human development. Or, where is there a conqueror who was so mighty and victorious as he? We must remember the position sustained by the Egyptian king—"the Pharaoh"—"the child of the sun"—"the hero of the primeval age"—represented by the colossal figure seated in scornful repose at the entrance of every temple and gateway in the Egyptian monuments—the king was deified and adored by his subjects: who reigned supreme: who was accustomed to gaze upon the sacred river as though it were all his own, surrounded by princes, priests, magicians, interpreters, reverently and obediently doing his bidding; by whose life people were accustomed to swear, and in whose protection they deemed themselves secure, and who maintained the struggle between his power and that of Jehovah, not like a mortal man, but as one who viewed himself as an equal, indeed as a superior. We see this mighty Pharaoh trembling in the presence of this representative of the Lord Almighty, again hardening his heart, and again acknowledging his defeat; we behold the distinguished leader conducting the immense company of the oppressed in safety out of the land; we watch with breathless interest the hasty pursuit, the cleaving of the waters, the passage of the hosts of Israel through the sea as on dry land, and the signal destruction of the pursuers; and as in imagination we see Miriam and her companions coming forth, with timbrels and with dances, to greet the deliverer of their people, and as we listen to the strains of the song of victory—"Sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and the rider hath he thrown into the sea"—we surely realise that we have in Moses the greatest and most triumphant victor over the despotism and tyranny of earthly rulers. As legislator, too, how distinguished is the position he occupies! He was the lawgiver, not only for Israel, but for the world—not only for ancient days, but for all times. Specially adapted to the circumstances of the people placed under his care, his code of laws embodied principles which lie at the very basis of all good government.

Moses, likewise, stands out prominently in view of his religious faith. "He endured as seeing him who is invisible." His holy trust rendered him proof against the temptation to worldly distinction, to ease and luxury, impelled him to spurn the gaiety and glitter of the court, and to cast in his lot with the suffering and oppressed servants of heaven: it fired him with courage; it sustained him amidst the waywardness of those whose good he sought, and it secured to him special mention among the spiritual heroes and saints of God who through their sublime confidence in the Lord their strength did so valiantly.

Yet, with all his greatness, he was but a man after all, with all the frailty and imperfection common to the race. When God, in the exercise of his unwearying patience, was about to open springs of mercy and compassion for the supply of the wants of the rebellious, he, the servant commissioned to act on God's behalf, yielded to the influence of a vexed and disquieted mind, and incurred the penalty of not being permitted to bring the hosts of Israel into the long-desired land. The sentence was irrevocable, yet mercy was to be mingled with judgment; the dark cloud was fringed with light; the blow was softened and the judgment mitigated. Though not allowed to lead the hosts of Israel into the promised land, he was permitted, from some prominent point in the heights of Moab, to behold the country so ardently desired, and to gaze upon its beauties, and thus to realize the usefulness of arduous life and the faithfulness of all God's promises.

The close of his remarkable and honored career came at length. He reviewed God's goodness and grace in words full of pathos, and preserved to us in what is called "The Song of Moses." He poured forth his soul's aspirations in hallowed communings with God. He addressed his parting words to the tribes gathered together in the plains of Moab. And, now leaving the desert plain, he ascends the lofty mountain range. He looks westward and northward, southward and eastward. He beholds in the distance the land upon which his heart had been so long set. He gazes upon the mountains round about Jerusalem—Hermon and Lebanon, Ebal and Gerizim—and the hills of Galilee rise before him. "And the Lord said unto him, This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, 'I will give it unto thy seed.'" Beneath him are the tents of Israel and the hosts he had so long guided, ready to renew the march and to enter the land upon which their hopes are fixed; but their leader was not to return to them. "I have caused thee," said Jehovah to him, "to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither." And the rest is wrapped in mystery. As one has expressed it, "The silence of the sacred narrative refuses to be broken." In that strange land, the land of Moab, Moses, the servant of the Lord, died according to the word of the Lord. He buried him in a ravine in the land of Moab, over against the idol-temple of Peor. Apart from his countrymen, honored by no funeral obsequies, visited by no grateful pilgrimages: "No man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."

In this divine concealment may be traced the truest wisdom. The probability is that had the burial place of this distinguished leader been known to the people whom he had so nobly guided they would have made his remains an object of superstitious worship and would have rendered to mortality the reverence which is due only to the Lord and Giver of life. It was not the body but the work of Moses which was permanently to abide in Israel. Notwithstanding the prevailing ignorance concerning the actual scene of his death, the superstitious have raised to him a tomb in the western side of the Jordan and which is frequented by thousands of devotees. And to prevent any such abuse among his ancient people, and to preserve them from a temptation, which, in their circumstances and at that stage of their development, might perchance have proved too powerful, the Most High concealed his doing and kept them in ignorance as to what had transpired. Let us learn the lesson that, as in this case, so in reference to all the divine concealments, our best interests are taken into account. It is infinitely better for us to wait the unfolding of the divine purposes concerning us than to have here and now the full disclosure. Let us be willing to be guided by the infinite wisdom and love, step by step, and to be trained thus to the exercise of calm and cheerful acquiescence, of holy and unfaltering trust:

"Father, take my hand,
And through the gloom lead safely home,
Lead safely home thy child."

There is something very impressive in the scene here presented to us of death coming to a man in the full vigor of life, actively engaged in the prosecution of his mission and having before him the prospect of realizing his highest and brightest anticipations. We read that "his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated." The mission of guiding the tribes of Israel into the full possession of the Land of Promise was not quite completed. There was the Jordan to be crossed, Jericho to be taken, opposing tribes to be subdued, the land to be divided, the government to be organized. There was, however, the near prospect of realization, for they had come to the very border of the land. And just at this particular juncture Moses died. So does it frequently happen; for God is not dependent upon any man for the fulfilment of his designs. His purposes cannot fail, but shall all be accomplished, and amidst all human changes he has agents ready to do his behests.

Moses on Pisgah has appropriately been regarded as in a sense pre-figuring the servants of Christ in death. As there was given to him a glorious vision of the earthly Canaan so there is imparted to those trusting in Christ, at life's close, bright visions of the heavenly land. It is then, often, that God makes to his servants the highest discoveries of his grace. They see the Canaan of rest and felicity, and can say, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace." The inspiring prospect, and the conscious presence of the Master they have served, robs death of its sting. This glorious and sustaining hope rests exclusively and entirely upon Christ, upon his teaching and upon his own victory over death and the grave. To those who do not rest upon his words and upon his personal triumph the future is full of uncertainty and full of dark forebodings. Life and immortality has been brought to light by him. The Jew as well as the Gentile needs him in order that he may have "hope in his death." Let us carry to him the glad tidings that "the Prophet like unto Moses," though so infinitely excelling him, came in the "fulness of time," and that all who trust to him shall never die but shall live with him forever.—S. D. H. in Jewish Herald.

Establish the Just. Psa. vii. 9.

Verily there is no truly Christian person who would not in the heart respond, Amen, to this prayer. The godly man, the godly woman, who has had dealings with the world, cannot desire a continuance of the existing state of things. Happy we say is the believer who earns a living by honest labor. No Christian parent, who understands how business is generally conducted, would advise a son or daughter to go into it. "The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Be content to remain in the humble capacity of an employee, O believer. Lying, deceit, and fraud, are so interwoven with business, that to keep the hands clean and the heart right, is, humanly speaking, almost impossible. The plain fact is, the business of the world is wickedness throughout, with but little exception. If the writer had the strength of mind he once had, he might extend on the view of justice triumphant in contrast to the cheating, the trickery, and imposition, now practiced. But the reality itself will only show the wondrous change.

We can indeed picture to our minds much that will be different from this evil state. Truth, righteousness, and purity, filling the earth! Yes, we can picture much; but the bright reality we can conceive only imperfectly. We believe the Word of God: and believing this we believe he is just. The foul infidelity of this age would have us view the God of the Bible to be unjust. Here brethren is one of the deadly dangers of the present day. Once give ear to infidel reasoning, and allow them a place in the mind, then our bright hope dims, and we are on the way to ruin. Believe is a command: God requires a belief. Unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out: but he declares himself just, merciful, and gracious; and though some revealed dealings with nations may seem on the face hard, we must never, never question the justice and mercy of Almighty God.

"Ye that Labor."

In the text, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," we often hear the word "weary" substituted for "labor."

Many persons are weary because they avoid labor. Shirking life's duties they become tired of an aimless existence, and find the burden of idleness harder to bear than God-appointed labor.

Not to this class does the Savior extend this invitation, but to the laboring ones who are manfully bearing the heat and burden of the day, doing cheerfully and with all their might the work which God has sent them. Such may claim the offered rest. Not the bodily rest of idleness, for many of God's children are sons and daughters of toil, but a higher, nobler rest, even rest to their souls.

We would not discourage those who are willing to labor, but who are denied the privilege, to those who occupy the darkened room of the invalid, or who are shut out from active toil by circumstances beyond their control; such triod once may be assured that "They also serve who only stand and wait," and it matters not how we labor, for if we only serve the Master in the way he has appointed for us, we shall find rest here and eternal rest in the many mansions of our Father's house.

A Pure Religion.

A religion with no Christ in it as a personal Savior from all sin is not worthy the name of religion.

A religion which does not purport a holy heart and life and which does not set forth or show a power sufficient to enable one to practice its precepts, is not the true religion.

A religion which does not afford strength and relief under affliction, joy in sorrow, help in time of need, deliverance in time of temptation, and satisfy the longing of the human heart, is not the religion of the Bible.

A religion which we cannot freely and safely recommend to everybody, and which will not fit every case, is not the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ.

A religion which we do not enjoy, but which brings us into bondage and only makes us miserable, is not better than no religion.

A religion in which we are not kept unspotted from the world and enabled to show a consistent and unselfish life, is not the pure and undefiled religion.

Any one who practically embraces the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ will have no use for any of the new-fangled religions of today, for "the old time religion" satisfies in every respect. Any one who claims to have the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ and is not saved and kept from sinning and does not find happiness and satisfaction in it is either a hypocrite or greatly deceived.

ITEMS.

To have one poor sinner own thee in the day of judgment, as the instrument in God's hands of plucking him as a brand from the burning, will be greater joy then than the reputation of being the greatest orator in the world.

Dost thou intend a kindness to thy beloved one? Do it straightway, before the future come, destroying the opportunity. Has thy heart's friend carelessly or cruelly stabbed into thy heart? Forgive him; think how, when thou art dead, he will punish himself.

"Of all the studies in the world on which to form early and sound habits of investigation and reasoning, natural philosophy holds pre-eminence. It gives us the happiest proofs and the most deep-rooted convictions of truth; it furnishes the quickest admonitions when we deviate toward error."—Horace Mann.

"One of the best lessons to be learnt is the absolute necessity of preventing work from degenerating into worry. It is worry that kills for the most part, not work. To learn to to put forth our best powers steadily, continuously, in the proper grooves, to the proper ends—this is one of the most precious fruits of wisdom and experience."

"Do Christ this one favor, for all his love to thee; love all his saints; even the poorest, the meanest, notwithstanding some slight differences in judgment. As the names of the children of Israel were graven on Aaron's breastplate, so are the names of all God's saints engraven on the heart of Christ. Let them be likewise so on thine."—Wilcox.

Sinai and Calvary.

There are two mountains hallowed
By majesty sublime,
Which rear their crests unconquered
Above the floods of Time.
Uncounted generations
Have gazed on them with awe—
The Mountain of the Gospel,
The Mountain of the Law.

From Sinai's cloud of darkness
The vivid lightnings play,
They serve the God of vengeance,
The Lord who will repay.
Each fault must bring its penance,
Each sin the avenging blade;
For God upholds in justice
The law that he has made.

But Calvary stands to ransom
The earth from utter loss,
In shade than light more glorious
The shadow of the Cross.
To heal a sick world's trouble,
To soothe its woe and pain,
On Calvary's sacred summit
The Paschal Lamb was slain.

The boundless might of heaven,
Its law in mercy hurled,
As once the bow of promise
O'er-arched a drowning world.
The Law said—As you keep me
It shall be done to you.
But Calvary prays—Forgive them,
They know not what they do.

Almighty God! direct us
To keep thy perfect Law!
O Blessed Savior, help us
Nearer to thee to draw;
Let Sinai's thunders aid us
To guard our feet from sin,
And Calvary's light inspire us
The love of God to win.

A Kind of First-Fruits.

This is an inexhaustible theme. It is the basis of God's blessing to the world. Christ, and they that are Christ's at his coming, 1 Cor. xv. 23, constitutes the first-fruits of the harvest which is to follow. James in speaking of believers, says, "The Father of lights of his own will begat us with the Word of Truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures," James i. 18.

Believers gathered out of the ages past, and present, having suffered with or for Christ are the first-fruits and pledge of a harvest of God's creatures, or the mass of the race.

John saw these gathered believers in vision, and describes the scene thus: "And I looked, and lo, a lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written on their foreheads; and I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps; and they sung as it were, a new song before the throne and before the four beasts, (vital beings,) and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women, (spiritual fornication;) for they are virgins, (unpolluted by the whoredoms of such corrupt organizations as the harlot woman and her daughters were guilty of.) These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb." Rev. xiv. 1–5.

Here is the pure church of the first-born, which are written in heaven; here is the Mount Sion, to which believers of the past and present ages are to come. Heb. xii. 22, 23.

After this gathering what next takes place? Let John answer:—"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred and tongue and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water." Rev. xiv. 7.

Here is the work of the hundred and forty and four thousand, who are a kind of first-fruits of his creatures, whom God will employ when glorified to proclaim the pure gospel to the rest of his creatures, of the Adamic race. There will be no schisms in their theology; for these watchman shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing the song of Rev. xiv. 3, for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion, Isa. lii. 8.

This is the time when the gospel shall be proclaimed to every creature in its purity; "For then will I turn to a people a pure language that they may call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent," Zeph. iii. 8, 9. At that time when the incorruptible ones fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach, God's promise and oath to Abraham and his seed will have its perfect fulfillment; for these messengers are commissioned to go to every nation, kindred, tongue and people with glad tidings—the gospel. But, says an objector, this proclamation is the hour of judgment, or God's judgment is come. True; and What more joyful news ever was heard than that God's rule by his own chosen King has actually commenced, when ungodly rulers—civil and ecclesiastical, will be stripped of their power, and Christ "shall execute justice and judgment in the earth." Jer. xxiii. 5. Such an event caused a joyful acclaim in heaven, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

The hour of God's judgment is the hour or period of his reign, in the person of his Son. When that begins, wickedness and oppression in all its forms will be made to cease, and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Isa. xi. 9. Then will the tidings of God's love to the world be made fully known, and the due time will have come when every creature shall understand that Christ Jesus gave himself a ransom for all; and such as have never before heard this good news, or have by unavoidable means been hindered from knowing that love of God, shall now be blessed with that knowledge which is able to make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. 2 Tim. iii. 15.

The hour of God's judgment will be the time in which the whole earth will be brought into subjection to Christ. It begins with the call to all nations, kindred, tongue and people to fear God and give glory to him and to worship him. Impenitent oppressors and all such as wilfully reject the reign of Christ will be cut off or destroyed; but whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved, Rom. x. 13, but none can call upon that name till they have first heard of it; for how shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? The greater work of earth's redemption then, is in the ages to come, Eph. ii. 7, and it is in these ages that the unsearchable riches of Christ will be fully manifested, and the innumerable company which no man can number, who will have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, shall then appear before the throne, and before the Lamb, and triumphantly ascribe "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and might unto God forever and ever." Such will be the harvest gathered by means of the first fruits. This is what the angel said to the shepherds: "Fear not for I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people." Luke ii. 10.

Brethren, let us try to be among the first fruits.

Submitted in Love,
JOHN FOORE.

California Letter.

Justin, Orange Co., California, Bro. Underwood: Many of the brethren and friends wanted to hear from me in regard to the climate and fruit raising and farming. I take this method of answering them through THE RESTITUTION in place of writing in detail, for that would be very tedious. I have been now one month and ten days in the State and I have travelled over but a small portion of the State yet, except the portion that I came through in getting here. I came through Sacramento, Los Angeles to Santa Anna. Since here I have gone to Newport, down at the old ocean, took a few baths, and it did me some good; and week before last I spent five days at Pomona, some 35 miles from here. I went to attend an Adventist meeting. Pomona is situated on the Southern Pacific railroad; it is a thriving town of about four thousand inhabitants. It is near some of those high mountains; oranges, walnuts, chestnuts, lemons, fields of new potatoes, new corn in tassel, are found here. Bro. W. O. Steffa took me out to his orange orchard of 25 acres. His brother told me he realized over four thousand dollars from his last year's crop. The present crop is far ahead of the last one, and he expects to receive five thousand. The crop will be gathered about the first of January. He has a man hired on his ranch at forty dollars per month, and a house of four rooms for the family, free of charge. Men can get better wages here than in the eastern States; common wages here, $1.50 per day. If a man comes here with a family, all that are old enough to work can get work, all that are large enough can gather walnuts, oranges, lemons and strawberries. They are in market about all the time. I have been on three of the high mountains, where I could get a fair view, and see for miles around, and I can truly say it is the grandest sight I ever saw, to look at the nice orchards far and near, and the straight rows of trees. Then the shade trees consist of gum trees, pepper, cypress, cedar, and other trees I know not the names. Walnut gathering is now on. Walnuts and oranges are the most numerous. I believe this is a healthy climate, for I have gradually improved in health since I have been here, have gained some seven pounds. Work is plenty most of the year. About the middle of December oranges are gathered, and that will continue until July, and before they are gathered peaches and apricots commence, then walnuts. I can say I do not want to go back to Indiana. I wish now I had come here one year ago, or before. Now, dear ones of like precious faith, if any of you want to know any thing further about this country, write me at Justin, Orange Co., Cal., in care of C. E. Hatch. I have done some hard work since I came here, but C. E. Hatch does not want me to work, so I will have to quit I suppose. I had two slight strokes of paralysis in Indiana, and I have not recovered fully yet, but am some better, and am in hopes I will fully recover soon. I have only preached two discourses since I have been here, but I am in hopes there will be an opening for me after while. I will close for this time, and may write again after I have looked around and seen more of the country, then I may have something more to say. May the dear Lord bless and save all the dear faithful ones in the kingdom of God's dear Son.

The Broad Way: the Narrow Way.

"Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there will be that find it." Matt. vii. 13, 14.

We will consider the broad way first. Who is in the broad way? All that are not in the narrow way; for there are but two paths to take, one leads to destruction and the other to life eternal. Now there is a great difference in the opinion of so-called Christian people, in regard to the meaning of destruction, as applied to man. Some few believing that destruction means a literal ending of life, or eternal death; and much Scripture is quoted to prove that man does not, after this life, live an endless life in misery, as taught by some teachers. See Psa. xxii. 29. None can keep alive his own soul. Psa. lxxviii. 50. He spared not their soul from death. Psa. cxlvi. 4. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish. Psa. cxv. 17. The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. And Eccl. ix. 5. For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing. Psa. vi. 5. For in death there is no remembrance of thee. And we read in Paul's letter to the Galatians, that adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envying, murders, drunkenness, revelling, and such like are the works of the flesh, and they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. All these are in the broad way, and it leads to destruction, which is eternal death. The narrow way leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it; the way that leadeth unto life, leads unto Christ, for Christ said, I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. John xi. 25. He that believeth on the Son, (which is Christ) hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life. John iii. 36. The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. We understand that life eternal, is living forever and ever, existing always without change; and this eternal life is the reward for walking in that narrow way. Now there are many that think they walk in the narrow way when they do not, because they do not believe the gospel that leads to life. But as our Savior said, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Matt. xv. 9. They follow the teaching of some man and formulate a creed, that is their guidance in worship, and when the Master of the house is risen up and shut the door, and they begin to stand without, and to knock at the door saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us: and he shall say, I know ye not whence ye are: then shall they say: We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. And he shall say, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. Luke xiii. 25, 27. These people will find, when too late, that following a perverted gospel is only in the broad way to destruction. Paul declares that whosoever preaches or believes a gospel different from the one he preached shall be accursed. Gal. i. 8. Do we preach the gospel of the kingdom as Paul did, or a perverted gospel? Which?

Yours in hope,
E. W. KNAPP.

The Body.

There is one body and one spirit. Eph. iv. This is true of the physical body, and this body without this one spirit (of life) is dead, (without life). This body is composed of many members (1 Cor. xii.) feet, hands, eyes, etc. with head to control all. Neither can say they have no need of the other, each is necessary to the whole. Therefore a more complete illustration of the one body in Christ could not be found. "So we being many (individuals) are one body in Christ and every one members one of another." Rom. xii. All co-operating together with, and under the control of the one Head. "And (God) hath given him (Christ) to be head over all to the church which is his body." Eph. i. 22, 23. In the physical when one member, becoming diseased, and failing to co-operate, all the rest are affected. 1 Cor. xii. 25, 26. "If one suffer all suffer with it." One affects another, and when affected to the extent that non-co operation obtains—the members of the body failing to perform their several functions, then the spirit ceases to permeate the body. Death ensues. This is equally true of the body of Christ. If you have not the spirit (mind or disposition) of Christ you are none of his.

The head demands nothing more of any member than it is capacitated and able to perform. The Head (Christ) is controlled by, and therefore co-operating with the Father in the accomplishment of his purpose in love, to save man from death. Hence, he as head of the body directs each member to like co-operation. He says, "Ye are the salt of the earth," "the light of the world." Hence each should exercise a saving influence—should contribute equally—that is according to ability in carrying on the work. "His servants ye are to whom ye render yourselves servants to obey." Non-co-operation, more than all else has been gnawing at the vitals of the church, even in its local matters, this one thing is at the root of more friction, and non-action than all else. This purpose of the Father through Christ constitutes the grandest enterprise ever suggested to the mind of man—conceived in divine love—carried on in love—bringing all its devotees into the unity of the spirit in love. Not unlike all other enterprises it requires material aid to carry it on, to co-operate with Christ. We can refuse if we will. The Father compels no one only through love. What a privilege it ought to be to contribute of our means in such an enterprise. God's purpose will not be thwarted, do as we may. He does not lack in resources. He calls us to take stock in it for our own good. If we choose otherwise, think you that we will have part in it just the same? In view of these things, shall we not arouse, and make co-operation the rallying cry as never before. I am inclined to believe, hope and pray that we will. More anon!

Yours for more and better co-operation.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

Report of Meeting.

We send in from Stewart, Ky., the glad tidings that those of like precious faith may rejoice with us. We have just passed through a time of refreshing. Bro. Wagoner has been with us thirteen days and preached twenty-two sermons, in which he nobly defended the gospel and God's loving character. The little flock here were made to rejoice by seeing five dear ones boldly take on the all-saving name by baptism. May their lives honor and glorify the Master of their choice. Bro. Wagoner is a faithful and a diligent workman that needeth not to be ashamed. We are so glad he is willing to go out into the highways and hedges to invite starving mortals to the great feast. We believe there are a great many famishing ones in the great desert of theory and speculation, who would gladly drink in the pure water of life, who have never heard the sweet murmur of the life-giving fountain, and are so blinded by theological darkness they fail to realize their need. Brother Wagoner won for himself and the cause of truth many warm friends.

Yours in hope,
SADIE SKEELS.

Obituary.

Brother Isaiah Lanning was born in Ohio, October 27th, 1827; he came to Illinois with his father in 1848. Fifty-seven years of his life was spent in Brown Co., Ill. He died Sept. 25, 1900. Mr. Lanning was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Kendel in 1855. He leaves a wife and five children, three sons and two daughters and a host of friends to mourn his loss, as was witnessed by the large gathering at his funeral. Mr. Lanning's health has been failing for years, but was feeling quite well the day previous to his death. Upon retiring at night complained of smothering sensation. His wife assisted him from the bed and he walked around the room and felt easy, returning to the bed, died without a struggle or a word.

The citizens of Brown County lose one of their worthiest men, a kind husband and loving father and charitable neighbor. The writer has been acquainted with deceased for six years and knew him to be a man of firm conviction for a holy and higher life. The writer had occasion to be with deceased during the months of June and July, and had a number of conversations with him regarding his faith and hope, which was as firm as when I first met him. Mr. Lanning united with the Church of God of the faith of Abraham in 1866, and lived a worthy and faithful member until death. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Ripley, Ill., to await the resurrection of the just at the coming of him who holds the keys of death and the grave.

Dear brother, sleep and take thy rest,
Beneath sweet summer waves,
For we know there is one that thy ashes will keep,
And redeem thee from the grave.

Funeral services conducted by the writer. D. M. HUDLER.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Plumbers Landing, Ky., on the morning of Feb. 11, 1900, Bro. Lot V. North, in the 94th year of his age. For information of those who knew him many years ago as a resident of Michigan, I will say that from a letter written by one R. C. Evans, with whom he lived at the time of his death, and one D. H. Davis, I glean the following: Bro. North, who moved to Kentucky many years since, died away from all relatives and among strangers, except such friendships as he had formed in the last twenty or twenty-five years of life. He had lived with Mr. Evans for sixteen years, and from the tone of Mr. Evan's letter he was held in the highest esteem, although he was thought to entertain very strange views as Mr. Evans, (who is a members of the Methodist church South) expressed it. Of course we who knew Bro. North and the hope he cherished, do not wonder why his views were considered strange. He had been confined to his bed almost twelve months, yet he bore his afflictions with patience and Christian fortitude. He was buried according to his own directions, (written more than thirteen years ago,) in a plain coffin and wrapped in a sheet. I believe much credit is due Mr. Evans for his kind treatment to Bro. North for the sixteen years he lived with him. "Robert, the Lord will reward you for all this," was a very frequent expression of Bro. North, while receiving the many kindly attentions from Mr. Evans. Yes, indeed, Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water, only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward. Bro. North was an earnest, conscientious Christian as the writer remembers him, and believes that he died in the "triumphs of a living faith."

How to Study the Bible.

1. Search the Scriptures. John v. 39; Acts xvii. 11; Isa. viii. 20.

2. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. Prov. ix. 10.

3. Study the whole Bible and study it prayerfully. 1 Cor. xiv. 9–14.

4. God designed the Bible for common people just as well as the learned; therefore the common people may understand it just as well. Rom. xvi. 25, 26.

5. It is unnecessary to understand either Greek, Hebrew, or Latin in order to understand the Bible; let the Bible be its own commentary, dictionary, grammer, etc. The Word of God is a light to our path. Ps. cxix. 105; James i. 19–22.

6. If what you have already learned does not harmonize with the Bible, you are wrong; get right as soon as possible; rightly divide the Word of Truth. 2 Tim. ii. 15.

7. Pay no attention to creeds, catechisms, or popular opinion; truth has always been unpopular. Make not the Word of God of no effect by tradition. Mark vii. 9–13.

8. Before deciding any question, find out all the Author has to say about it; a good concordance is a valuable help.

9. Always take the literal sense unless it conflicts with all other passages on the subject. Handle not the Word of God deceitfully; 2 Cor. iv. 2.

10. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God. 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17; 2 Peter i. 19–21.

11. Speak as the oracles of God; 1 Peter iv. 11; 2 Tim. i. 13; 1 Cor. xiv. 8, 9, 33, 40.

12. Reject not the Scripture. John xii. 48; Heb. xii. 25; ii. 3.

13. God curses man or angel who dares preach any other gospel. Gal. i. 8; Rev. xxii. 18, 19; Deut. iv. 2; xii. 32.

14. Always be able to give a reason for what you believe, and don't believe anything without good reasons. 1 Peter iii. 15; 1 Thess. v. 20, 21.

15. He who cannot reason is a fool; he who dare not is a bigot; but he who will reason freely is a man.

Kingly Independence.

Boys wish to be men that they may be free and do as they like. But how few men can do as they like; and the more powerful the men, the less able they often are to have their own way. They are hemmed in and hindered on every side. There is more independence in cottages than in palaces,—more free loin for peasants than kings. A Roman emperor once abandoned his empire and went into the country to raise cabbages, and rejoiced in the change.

"D'Israeli says that a king of Poland abdicated his throne and joined the people and became a porter to carry burdens. And some one asked him why he did so, and he replied: 'Upon my honor, gentlemen, the load which I quit is by far heavier than the one you see me carry. The weightiest is but a straw when compared to that world under which I labored. I have slept more in four nights than I have during all my reign. I begin to live and be a king myself. Elect whom you choose; for me who am so well, it would be madness to return to court.'"

Could not be Spared.

"Without are dogs." Yet dogs are sometimes useful to the flock.

A bold leader of oppositions to religion, ready to publish any delinquencies in any professor of religion, made up in his mind to move to another part of the country. Meeting the pastor he said:

"I am going to leave town; you will probably be glad of it."

"No, you are one of our most useful men. I hardly know how to spare you."

Taken aback somewhat, he asked, "how is that?"

"There cannot be a sheep that gets a foot out of my fold, but you will bark from one end of town to the other. You have been one of the most useful watch-dog."

You picture to yourself the beauty of bravery and steadfastness. You let your imagination wander in delight over the memory of martyrs who have died for truth. And then, some little, wretched, disagreable duty comes, which is your martyrdom, the lamp for your oil; and if you will not do it, how your oil is spilt! How flat and thin and unilluminated your sentiment about the martyrs runs out over your self-indulgent life!

Behold the Bridegroom.

The division of the Bible into chapters frequently obscures the relation of connected passages. At the beginning of Matt. xxv. we have an illustration of this. The twenty-fourth chapter foretells a time of war, of earthquake, of schism and of religious indifference and apostasy. The twenty-fifth chapter begins, "Then"—then, in the midst of all these terrors of this decline of faith and the reign of evil—"shall the kingdom be likened unto ten virgins which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." It would be difficult to imagine a more lovely touch than that this parable of the virgins introduces into the narrative. Surrounded by fear and trouble the church of Christ looks for the heavenly Bridegroom; her interest and affection is set upon him, and the darkness and sorrow of the earth will soon be broken by the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom! Come ye forth to meet him."—Watchman.

Certainty of Christ's Advent.

As truly as Christ hath appeared on earth—as truly as he lay in the manger of Bethlehem, was baptized in the waters of Jordan, was anointed with the Holy Ghost, was tempted of the devil in the wilderness, went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, groaned and wept in Gethsemane, hung upon Calvary's cursed tree and died the Just for the unjust, was laid in the dark, silent tomb, rose victorious on the third day, ascended into the heavens, there to appear in the presence of God for his people—so truly shall he appear, ere long, in the clouds of heaven to receive his people to himself. If we refuse one, we must refuse all. If we question one we must question all. If we are unsettled as to one, we must be unsettled as to all, inasmuch as all rest upon the same basis, namely the Holy Scriptures. How do I know that Jesus hath appeared? Because Scripture tells me so. How do I know that he doth appear? Because Scripture tells me so. How do I know that he shall appear? Because Scripture tells me so.

"A person of great consequence went to Sir Eardley Wilmot, under the impression of great wrath and indignation at a real injury he had received, while he was meditating how to resent it in the most effectual manner. After relating the particulars, he asked if he did not think it would be manly to resent it? Yes, said Sir Eardly, certainly it will be manly to resent it, but it will be God-like to forgive it. This, the gentleman declared, had such an instantaneous effect upon him that he came away quite a different man, and in a totally different temper from that in which he went.

"Get Christ, and human love expands in all its features. Get him, and the satyrs and owls are scared off like the night's shadows before the rising sun."

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

Brother Underwood:

Will you please say to the brethren and friends, that we still have on hand a fair supply of our little four-page tract, entitled "Sirs, What must I do to be saved?" and that a request with a penny for postage will bring them to your address. Yes, please send your name, request and address, and they will hasten to your home penny or no penny.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses. A Volume of 288 pages, cloth 25 cents, leather bound, embossed, and gilt edges, $1.00. By Wiley Jones. This book is so well known that it is only necessary to announce that it is for sale, to insure a market for it. We have undertaken to dispose of these books for the Widow of our lamented Brother Jones, and while getting them at this low price, you at the same time will help Sister Jones to much-needed money.

Works of Bro. Wiley Jones.

Twelve Words, or the true meaning of Hell, Soul, Spirit, Ghost, Paradise, Incorruption, Incorruptible, Immortal, Immortality, Forever, Everlasting, Eternal, and their originals as learned by their uses in the Bible. A tract of 40 pages, sold formerly at 10 cents a copy.

The Gospel of the Kingdom, an 8 page, double column tract, sold formerly at 10 cents a dozen.

Early Lessons, suitable for young or old, 80 pages, sold formerly for 10 cts a copy.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 80 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

TRACTS FOR SALE.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

Poetry.

Be Strong.

We hear thy bidding, Lord but how,
Oh, how can such as we be strong
Upon our brow there rests sin's brand,
And slaves we are beneath his hand;
To rise out from transgression's slough,
We've striven, fainting, oh, so long!
We rise, we sink; we stand, we fall;
We think we win, but soon lose all;
Can we, e'en such as we, be strong?

And yet, plain written in thy Word,
The precept. Thou dost still require
All men to do thy righteous will,
To rise and stand for thee until
The sin is slave and man is lord:
And this, dear Lord, thou dost desire,
So in each law a promise lies,
"Be strong in God, and thou shalt rise;
Let simple faith in Christ alone
Make righteousness thine own."
And this is all God doth require.

The End of the World.

The end of the world seems to be associated in the minds of the people with the second coming of Jesus. This is probably accounted for by the question of his disciples: "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" Matt. xxiv. 3.

By the phrase, "the end of the world," people generally infer the destruction of the planet on which we live.

The confusion which now obtains is largely due to King James' translators failing to distinguish between several words which differ, but largely translating these differing words by the one English word world. These words are:

1. Aion—age, dispensation, a marked period of time. Is translated world in the New Testament 38 times, and in its adjective form 8 times.

2. Oikoumenee—The habitable. Is translated world 14 times.

3. Gee—earth. Is translated world in Rev. xiii. 3.

4. Kosmos, order, regularity, or constitution of things. Is translated world 185 times, and adorning once.

Any one can certainly see that confusion must of necessity arise in the minds of the people by the common rendering of various words by the word world. The Revised Version has largely corrected these. Let us look at the texts under the head

END OF THE WORLD.

Matt. xxiv. 3: "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" The word in this passage is aionos. The Revised Version in margin, makes it: "The consummation of the ages." There is no thought of the destruction of the material globe.

Matt. xiii. 49: "So shall it be at the end of the world." The word here is aionos. The R. V. margin, "So shall it be at the consummation of the age."

Heb. ix. 26: "Once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." The word is aionon. R. V. "But now once at the end of the ages." It is no new thing for the world to come to an end.

2 Pet. ii. 5: "Spared not the old world." The word here is kosmos. R. V. "Spared not the ancient world."

When one world comes to an end another takes its place. Notice a few texts under the head,

WORLD TO COME.

Heb. ii. 5: "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come." The word here is oukoumenee, the habitable. R. V. "Inhabited earth," or the inhabited earth to come.

Heb. vi. 5: "Have tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come." The word is aionos. R. V. "Powers of the age to come."

Gee—earth, in Rev. xiii. 3, is rendered world. "All the world wondered after the beast." R. V. "The whole earth wondered after the beast." Here the word Gee—earth means as it does in many Scriptures. So when a student reads in Scripture about the earth being destroyed, or burned up, he must discern as to what the word earth applies to; it probably applies oftener to the people than to the material earth.

THE PEOPLE,

See Gen. vi. 11-13: "The earth was also corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence, and God looked upon the earth," etc. Was it the earth or the people which corrupted God's way? On account of these corrupt ways God concluded to destroy the earth. See verse 13: "And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth."

Peter (2 Pet. iii. 5, 6) refers to this previous destruction of the "world," "heaven" and "earth," and predicts another destruction of the "heavens and earth," by means of fire, in place of water. All know very well that the material earth itself remained after the heavens and earth which were of old perished. So in the future, the heavens and earth are once more to pass away, but the material earth will survive what is called the destruction of the world, even as it did of old. See 2 Pet. ii. 5, and you will learn that it was the "world of ungodly" people which perished, so it likewise will be in the future, it will also be the "world of ungodly," and not the material world, which will pass away, while the world of ungodly must perish, yet God will visit the earth with a deluge of destruction either by fire or water as he has done in the past. He has given his solemn word that he will not. See Gen. viii. 21: "And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord: and took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt offerings on the altar. And the Lord smelled a sweet savour; and the Lord said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth: neither will I again smite any more everything living, as I have done. While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."

Note his words: "Neither will I again smite any more every living thing as I have done."

It certainly would be a far greater calamity and a greater destruction of life, etc., should he sweep the earth with a deluge of fire; he would not only again "smite every living thing," (which he said he would not,) but also reduce to ashes the material world. Now, not only did he say, "Neither will I again smite every living thing, but while earth remaineth there should be no interruption of seasons and seed time, and harvest.

How long will the earth remain?

1. Psa. civ. 5: "Who laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be removed forever."

2. One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth forever." Shall not pass away like generations of people.

3. "Thou hast established the earth and it abideth." Psa. cxix. 90.

4. "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed but abideth forever." Psa. cxxv. 1.

The teaching that God will again smite the earth with a greater curse than he has in the past, is contrary to his express Word, and also his purposes concerning man and earth as revealed in his prophetic Word.

As I have said before, much confusion arises by not properly conveying the thought of the original in place of giving the word world, where it has no reference to the material earth, while the ordinary reader supposes it does.

Then again, if people would study more closely the prophecies of the Old and New Testament, they could never harmonize what God has purposed to do with regard to man and earth, with what is commonly understood by the "end of the world."

The second coming of Christ will not only mark the end of the Gentile world (age), but also the earth's eternal birth day, even the third heaven and earth, to which Paul was caught away in vision, the new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Genesis. Chap. 8.

1. And God remembered Nooe and all the wild beasts and all the domestic animals, and all the flying things and all the creeping things that were with him in the ark; and God led wind (spirit "pneuma") upon the earth and the water decreased.

2. And the fountains of the abyss and the cataracts of the heavens were closed, and the rain from heaven was restrained.

3. And the water stopped going its way from the earth, and the water grew less after one hundred and fifty days.

4. And the ark rested the seventh month on the twenty-seventh of the month upon the mountains of Ararat.

5. And the water continued to grow less until the tenth month; and the tenth month on the first of the month the heads of the mountains appeared.

6. And it came to pass forty days afterwards that Nooe opened the window of the ark that he had made, and sent forth the raven.

7. And going out he did not return until the water had dried up from the earth.

8. And he sent forth the dove after him to see if the water had assuaged from the earth.

9. And the dove finding no rest for her feet returned unto him into the ark, because there was water upon all the face of the earth; and stretching out his hand he took her and conducted her into the ark, unto himself.

10. And forbearing seven more days he sent the dove again out of the ark.

11. And the dove returned unto him at evening, and had a leafy olive twig in her mouth; and Nooe knew that the water had assuaged from off the earth.

12. And forbearing seven days more he sent forth the dove again, and she did not return unto him any more.

13. And it came to pass in the six hundred and first year in the life of Nooe, in the first month on the first of the month that the water left off from the earth; and Nooe took off the roof of the ark which he had made and he saw that the water had left off from the face of the earth.

14. And in the second month the earth became dry on the twenty-seventh of the month.

15. And the Lord God spake unto Nooe saying;

16. Come out of the ark thou and thy wife and thy sons and thy sons' wives with thee.

17. And the wild beasts that are with thee and all flesh from flying things to domestic animals, and every creeping thing that moveth upon the earth do thou lead with thyself. And increase and multiply upon the earth.

18. And Nooe went out he and his wife and his sons and his sons' wives with him.

19. And all the wild beasts and all the domestic animals and every flying thing and every creeping thing that moveth upon the earth according to their genera come forth from the ark.

20. And Nooe built an altar for the Lord, and took from all the clean domestic animals and from all the clean flying things, and offered in the way of a whole burnt-offering service upon the altar.

21. And the Lord God smelt an odor of sweet smell, and the Lord God, when he had thought the matter through, said, I shall not again curse the earth because of the doings of mankind, because the thought of mankind is carefully upon the wicked things from his youth up; I shall not therefore again smite all living flesh even as I have done.

22. All the days of the earth seed-time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night shall not cease.

COMMENT.

1st verse of this chapter abreviated in the R. V.

In the second verse "the deep" R. V. instead of "the abyss" which is else where translated in the C. V. and R. V. "the bottomless pit." Also "windows" R. V. instead of "cataracts."

In the 4th verse "the 17th day" R. V. instead of "the 27th."

In the 11th and 12th verses "he and she" as applied to the raven and the dove instead of "it and she" R. V. In the 13th verse the R. V. omits "in the life of Nooe" which is very misleading to the casual reader. In the 601st year of what? Of the history of the world of mankind? Also in same verse "roof" instead of "covering" R. V.

In the 17th verse the same expression originally used "increase and multiply upon the earth" instead of "breed abundantly in the earth and be fruitful and multiply upon the earth." R. V.

In the 19th verse "according to their genera" instead of "after their families." What does this expression mean? Does any one know?

In the 20th verse it may be of interest to the thoughtful reader to know that the "altar" here referred to was not an altar with steps, but of unhewn stones and built in the shape of a truncated pyramid. "Burnt-offerings" R. V. In this verse should be "in the way of a whole-burnt-offering service," the "whole" being a very important part of it. Here is the best of evidence that the most important offering and sacrifice of the later Levitical service was after all as old as Nooe.

In the 21st verse the expression "said in his heart" R. V. is supposed to translate the same word translated in the R. V. and C. V. "repented" in the 6th verse of the 6th chapter of this book, and the verbal-noun derived from this verb is translated "imagination" in both chapters by the R. V. and C. V. Literal translation "thought the matter through." This will not do. Words cannot be played with in this way. No wonder Christ said, "Ye make void the Word of God with your traditions."

In the 22nd verse, "All the days of the earth" is "while the earth remaineth" in the R. V. Is it the same thought?

Short Sermons. No. 7.

Death, what is it? Although we have had death in the land for near six thousand years, and he has played havoc with men and women and children, causing a world of sorrow, pain and weeping, and oftimes he has ventured near and invaded our homes and our neighbor's homes; yet I feel safe in saying that the vast majority of humanity is and has been all along living in the shade and laboring under a strong and strange delusion, that death does not kill us, but like a friend he does us a favor by opening our cage and turning us loose and setting us free, so that I feel safe again in saying that the vast millions of humanity who are bewitched and deluded by that old pleasing story, "Ye shall not surely die;" do not really understand what death is, and what he does for us. Having no true conception of their condition in sin and death, they cannot understand and appreciate the kind offices of a friend who has come to their rescue, suffered and died for them. And if we all, good, bad and indifferent have immortal souls, a part of God, to save or lose, then we are all good gods or bad gods, and it will require a God to die to save us, and as God cannot die, and still be the God of the Bible—the King eternal, immortal, the only wise God worthy of all honor and glory. Then there is no salvation for our little, arrogant, imaginary souls, which are but the result and outgrowth of the devil's first lie, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die." The serpent captivated and captured our ancestors with this specious, cunning, popular plea, and caused them to sin and turn against their Creator and lose their lives, while all their posterity was involved in the fall. And yet strange to say ministers and others will tell us it makes no difference what you believe just so you are sincere. It made a big difference with our forefparents, and it will make a big difference with all others who shut their eyes and turn from God's eternal truth unto fables. Death is a cutting off of life, a state or condition in which all the functions of the body and mind are suspended. This proposition the Bible abundantly sustains. Listen—"his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything....Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest. Man and beast all die alike, as the one dieth, so dieth the other, yea, they all have one breath.....All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks? The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live. I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave; I am deprived of the residue of my years. Eccl. iii. 19, 20; ix. 5, 10; Psa. vi. 5; cxv. 17; Isa. xxxviii. 1, 9, 10. With this array of Bible testimony—this cloud of witnesses, we refer you to your own experience and observations which serve as object lessons and really confirms the Bible teaching on this question. The doctrine of God is what God has taught in his Word. The doctrine of the devil is what he has taught; and as he was a liar and a murderer from the beginning when he said, "Ye shall not surely die," which forms the basis of the immortal soul theory; I ask, will the good Lord God save us in sincerely believing in, and holding to what the devil taught—to his doctrine, and repudiating the Lord's truth—the Lord's doctrine which is daily demonstrated before our eyes? If so, then the old woman was more consistent in shouting glory be to Beelzebub, than the preacher was who tried to correct her. Yes, and far more consistent than folks are who cry and say father is dead, or mother is dead, or brother or little sister is dead, and then send for a preacher to come and deal out consolation by telling them a big lie—telling them "father is not dead, mother or little sister is not dead, not separated soul and body, but are now happy angels in heaven," thus contradicting facts, and what we had been telling our neighbors, yes, and themselves also. Would a true minister of God be guilty of such conduct? Paul did not talk so on such occasions. See a sample in 1 Thes. iv. 14-18. One more shot, but not at the people but at the doctrine of their worst enemy; which says death does not cut off life and thought—does not kill us, but is only a separation of soul and body. Indeed, all right. Let us read the Bible with that idea and see our folly. "For the living know that they shall die, (that is be separated soul from body) but the dead (that is separated soul from body) know not any thing." But enough, I must stop or change my caption.

Selections.

Jerusalem to Jericho.

The road from Jerusalem to Jericho is invested with special interest to us by reason of the inimitable parable of the Savior—"The Good Samaritan." The parable is charmingly simple as well as beautiful. "A certain man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho." Jerusalem being the Metropolis, the journey thither was always spoken of as "going up," and returning as "going down;" but in this case it was literally "a-going down," for Jerusalem stood at a considerably higher elevation than Jericho. "The journey lay through a rocky gorge, the country being very desolate until the plain of Jericho is reached, abounding in palms, roses, honey, and balsams." "And he fell among robbers, which both stripped him and beat him, and departed, leaving him half dead." The district then was, and is still, more or less, infested with banditti, the Arabs of the wilderness preying upon hapless pilgrims to their injury and cost. "And by chance a certain priest was going down that way, and when he saw him he passed by on the other side. And, in like manner, a Levite also, when he came to the place and saw him, passed by on the other side." Many Jewish priests were located in Jericho, and Levites also; and these had, in turns, "in their courses," to go up to the holy city to perform the services of the Temple, and a representative of each of these is here supposed by chance to be passing where the wounded sufferer was, and, instead of coming to his relief, left him in his necessity, and passed on, fearing, perchance, lest if they also might incur the danger which had befallen him. "But a certain Samaritan," as he journeyed, came where he was, and when he saw him he was moved with compassion, and came to him and (risking all peril) "bound up his wounds" using freely oil and wine as remedies, according to Eastern usages, "set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn," gave some pecuniary acknowledgment to the host, and pledged himself on his return journey to defray all cost. Such was the parable. And then followed the application in the question the Master addressed to the lawyer,—"which of these three thinkest thou was neighbor to him that fell among the thieves?" which elicited the reply, "He who showed mercy on him." "Go and do thou likewise," said the Savior; make the Samaritan's conduct the pattern of thine.

True philanthropy raises no such question as that asked by the lawyer, "And who is my neighbor?" because it recognizes in every man a brother, cherishes the glorious thought of the brotherhood of the race, feels kindly towards all, and specially towards those who are in circumstances of sorrow and need.

The characteristics of true philanthropy are indicated in this imaginary case. There was, on the part of this helper, ungrudging service, self-denial, liberality, perseverance. The main principle is self-denial. It has been eloquently said that "there is nothing so noble as self-sacrifice for another's benefit." And when the doing of it involves the laying aside of something you wish to do for yourself, it becomes more lovely, more magnanimous, more God-pleasing, and more soul-refreshing. Men should lift up their conceptions of brotherhood. There ought to be nothing hard in the bearing of each other's burdens; and where there is love there will not be, for love is that which makes one thing as easy as another, and which makes all toils and tasks impossible."

And true philanthropy shall in no wise lose its reward. There is a present reward in the joy serving others yields. And there is the future recompense, when the Christ who now calls us to the "service of man" shall say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."—Jewish Herald.

Seen by Contrast.

"For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise." 2 Cor. x. 12.

A black mole on the African's face does not show very much, if at all. And a white tumor on the brow of an Anglo Saxon does not appear very conspicuously. But just change places with them, and note the result! And so I think if Christians would exchange their faults with each other occasionally it would be salutary. If they could put their failings into the relief of each other's character, sometimes they would appreciate them more truly than do. Again, what is better, if we would put them into the light of God's face, it would be best. Into that pure light has no shadow on it; into that brightness which bears no stain, we should understand perfectly. "Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance."

SEND THE RESTITUTION to some poor person as a present a year. The cost is only three cents a week.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final restoration of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

"The Happy Man."

"The happy man was born in the City of Regeneration, in the parish of Repentance. He now lives in Perseverance, and works at his trade of diligence, notwithstanding his large estate in the city of Christain contentment. He often does jobs of self-denial, and wears a plain garment of humility, but he has a better suit to put on when he goes to court, called the Robe of Christ's Righteousness. He walks in the valley of Self-abasement, but often climbs the hills of Spiritual-mindedness. He breakfasts every morning on Spiritual prayer, and sups every evening on the same. He has meat that the world knows nothing of, and his drink is the sincere milk of the Word. Thus happy he lives and happy he dies. Happy the man who has gospel submission, due order in his affections, sound peace in his mind, and a crown of glory on his head. Happy is the life of such an one; and to attain unto it you must pray earnestly, live holily, die daily, love Christ, and long for glory."

Regarding China.

The situation in China is shown best shown by the following London dispatches of Oct. 15. The prospect of civil war in southern China is now added to the complications with which the powers have to deal in the far East. The gravity of the situation in the vicinity of Canton, where Sun-Yat-Sen, leader of the rebellion against the present Manchu dynasty, is gathering a large army, is recognized by all officials close to the Foreign office. The revolt against the Dowager Empress and the Emperor is undoubtedly spreading. Advices from Shanghai dated yesterday indicate that the progress of the Dowager Empress and her court toward the new capital at Sian-Fu is being delayed by the Mohammedan rebels in the Province of Shensi.

With the revolt in Kwang Si Province, the Mohammedan rising in Shensi, and the Black Flags active in Honan there is grave danger that the allies will soon be called upon to take the field to repress civil war. And if the allies fail to act promptly all China may be in flame of revolt within a short time.

The Shanghai correspondent of the Morning Post, wiring on Saturday, describes four distinct agitations—in Kwang Tung, Kwang Si, Sze Chuan, and the Yang Tse region—all of which are anti-dynastic rather than anti-foreign.

"If Sun-Yat-Sen is successful in the south," says the correspondent, "and his rebellion spreads over the Yang Tse region, he will probably be aided by Prince Tuan, Tung Fu Hsiang, and the Mohammedan leaders in the northwest.

The advices from New Chwang state that the Russians have seized the New Chwang railway and the terminus of the Shanghai-kuam line, situated on the right bank of the river. This is the first step taken by the Russians on the right bank. The Russian southern and northern armies have joined hands at Tiehling, north of Mukden, thereby placing all of Manchuria east of the River Leao and a portion west of it in the hands of Russia.

THE most important item of news since our last issue is the lease from the Sultan of Turkey to Germany of the island of Ureau, situated near the southern end of the Red Sea. Three years ago Germany sent two large battleships to the Chinese station. This she soon realized was an impossible feat without the aid of the English coaling station. She learned the lesson, and this is a step in the proposed line of naval coaling stations of her own. The British are interested in the scheme because it is believed the Kaiser has already arranged with Spain for the purchase of Ceuta, a fortress confronting Gibraltar on the southern shore of the famous straits. Other points at Togaland and Kamerun in Southwest Africa, Curacoa in the West Indies, and an island off the coast of Sumatra owned by the Dutch, are being negotiated for. You who are watching the movements of nations, make note of this.

At the Lord's Table.

"Around this table we contemplate the humiliation of our Lord, and identify ourselves with it." Said Jesus, "If I go away, I will come again." During his absence it is a time of sorrow for his prospective bride. All sorts of trials overtake them. Scarcely a day passes without vexatious crosses, or irritating contentions, and disheartening disappointments in business ventures, and unpleasant surprises when we had fondly hoped for other things. Yes; this is where we identify ourselves with the humiliations and griefs and pain of our Lord. We meet as a little band who have with tremblings and misgivings, perhaps, at times, taken up the work he laid down when he surrendered his life on our behalf. This brings contempt upon our heads in proportion as we walk and act as he did. The Body has to undergo a discipline like that which perfected the Great Head. The members of the Body have to be conformed to the image of

THE SON OF GOD,

and it is the conforming process which entails many of the trials. As he was perfected through suffering so must we be. But beloved, there is one trial—ah,—it is a severe one, too,—that we have to pass through, that he did not have to pass through. I do not think that his character was perfected by suffering, but ours have to be. There never was a spot upon his character, and I take it that he was a Lamb "without spot", that his nature was perfected,—made divine, became, and was declared to be the Son of God with power when born from the dead. In this connection we may read with profit what is said by Paul in Col. i. 24, where we find another source of Joy for those I have been speaking of:—"I now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ for his body's sake, which is the church." In another epistle he refers to his own experiences in this way,—that he was always bearing about in the Body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be

MANIFEST IN THE BODY.

For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. 2 Cor. iv. 10, 11. Doubtless the activity of Paul, his special calling, the times in which he lived, conduced to special hardships, and most trying persecutions and experiences, such as none of this age will be called upon to suffer; but the offence of the cross has not ceased; and our presence here this morning proclaims theoretically at least, our sympathy with the crucified One, and our willingness to endure for him, and to be identified with him at any cost in the suffering, which is a prelude to

THE GLORY TO BE REVEALED

in us by and by, if we are faithful. This is where personal examination should ever take place. The very atmosphere and surroundings favor serious and honest inspection of ourselves. Every week brings us nearer to the end of the journey; and we do well to enquire, Is this a mere sentiment with me? Can we dare to take up the cross and follow the Lord through evil report and good? Am I ready to suffer shame for his name? Am I bold in my profession at this table and a coward when

I MEET THE FOE?

Do I feel ashamed of him and his Word in the world after telling here how much I love him? Referring to the fact that Jesus suffered without the gate of the city, even as the beasts whose blood was brought into the sanctuary, the writer of the Hebrews says, "Let us go forth, therefore, unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach," just as if we were accompanying him to the place of crucifixion. How many of us would have been faithful to him in that hour of darkness and sorrow? There he goes, quite forsaken of his friends,—truly and acquainted with grief,—truly despised and rejected of men. They have heaped upon him all their scorn. The people prefer Barabbas the murderer. The priests have condemned him as worthy of death; he has been smitten and spat upon. Pilate has given him up to the malice of his enemies. The soldiers have scourged him, mocked him with the scarlet robe, and pierced his brow with the thorny crown; he is being led through the city and out through the gates, and on each side of him and all about him is a surging mass of excited men and women, rushing on to get good places at the execution. They shoot out their lips at him;

A MAN OF SORROWS

THEY BLASPHEME THE MAN who healed their sick; and gave sight to their blind, and raised their dead. They gape upon him with their mouths as a roaring and a raveuing lion. They compass him about like bulls. The assembly of the wicked enclose him. The reproaches of men are heaped upon him. Brethren and Sisters all,—let us in imagination go and take our stand beside that humble, persecuted and condemned man, and thus proclaim to all around that we are his friends, and take hold and

HELP HIM CARRY HIS CROSS,

and say, "I follow this man. He comes from God. He is the true Messiah, the Hope of Israel. I acknowledge him as my Lord." I want us all to realize what it is to go without the camp, bearing his reproach. The lesson to us is, not to shrink because the cross stands in

THE WAY TO THE CROWN.

This was the great danger with those to whom the apostle wrote. They had endured a great fight of afflictions,—partly while they were made a gazing stock by reproaches and afflictions, and partly through being companions of them that were so used. See Heb. x. 32, 33. The danger was that they would fall away, that they would weary of the shame associated with the cross, and so urges them to faithfulness,—reminding them that here they had no continuing city, but that they sought one to come; and therefore it was a fact that present trials would soon be over,—they endure but for a moment, the present life is but a speck in an existance that is to continue forever, and therefore weighing the light afflictions with the

ETERNAL WEIGHT OF GLORY,

they should bear the reproach associated with the cross of Christ. Oh, let us heed these apostolic injunctions. Let us not be afraid to suffer. Let us go to Jesus in the long dark night when friends are few and foes are many, and timid ones deny him, and worldly ones betray him,—yea; let us go out to him when his back is scourged, and his face smitten, and his form mocked, and the blood trickling down over his cheeks from the thorns—go to him then, and say Master, I will follow thee whersoever thou goest, and wipe his brow, and cheer his heart and then we shall with him be CROWNED WITH GLORY.

We do all this in theory when we meet around this table. But we want to put the theory into practice when we go out into the world that is alienated from the life of God. It is here we learn how to endure reproach, and how to pass through daily trials. What a lesson! How hard to learn it well! Said he, "The cup which my Father hath given me to drink, shall I not drink it?" He resented nothing. The plowers made deep furroughs upon his back but

HE COMPLAINED NOT;

and when they had driven the nails through his quivering flesh and lifted him up, and the cross with its load is sent with a thud into the hole prepared for it; then the half suppressed agony gives place to the:—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." How it should humble us to think of him. How very far short of that perfect submission which he manifested, do we fall! How apt is the cheek to flush,—how quick the retort is apt to be made. How apt to boast of ability to give a man as good as he sent.

GOD HELP US ALL

to learn of him who was meek and lowly in heart, and then we shall find rest to our souls, no matter how hard the tempest rages, how high the waves of trouble roll. Let us dwell upon the great satisfying truth, that if faithful to the end we shall ever be with the Lord. In the meantime we will continue to proclaim our faith in his death, and living again, and coming again, and in all his sacred offices and work, by partaking of the emblems of his broken body and shed blood." *

Selections.

An Appeal to the Young.

Dear young friends: When we read that among the Spartans "no man was permitted to live as he pleased, the city being like one great camp, where all had their stated allowance and knew their public charge, each man concluding that he was born not for himself but for his country." One cannot but admire the unselfish conclusions at which these Spartans arrived; but I would have you reach a higher conclusion still with reference to yourselves, even that you are born for the glory of God and for the well being of the race. He lives the true life who has the divine honor and the interests of his fellowmen in view throughout his whole conduct, and who meets all who would persuade him to pursue a lower course with the reply of a noble Hebrew patriot: "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come; why should the work cease and I leave it and come down to you?" There are some who pass through this world with no life-purpose in view, and who depart off the stage of existence leaving no holy and blessed influence behind them. Be yours the nobler course, even so to live that when you die you may leave the world the better for your life and service.

In the American Revolution the men who stood ready at any moment to serve their country were called "minute-men." I would that you be minute men and women, ever ready to stand up for Jesus, to maintain his honor, and to contend against sin and wrong.

One and another, as you know, are passing away, and I bid you yield yourselves to God that so you may occupy those spheres of service which are being vacated through the ravages of death. Is not this the meaning of the Apostle Paul's words about being "baptized for the dead?" The times in which he wrote were troublous. The new and rising faith which he proclaimed had to encounter the opposition of the entire heathen world. All the power of Imperial Rome was employed to crush the Christian system. One and another fell in noble cause by the hands of cruel and blood-thirsty persecutors. But as in military conflicts when the ranks of those engaged in the fight are thinned through many falling among the slain, other brave soldiers advance and fill up the vacant places, so it came to pass in the holy strife the Church was then waging against the powers of darkness. As some fell in the defence of Christ and increased the ranks of "the noble army of martyrs," others, new converts, came in to occupy their posts and "to be baptized for the dead," and thus to carry on the benevolent work which shall at length be crowned with victory.

Happily not by the hands of persecutors are faithful soldiers of Christ falling now in the field of conflict; yet, nevertheless, in the material course of things and through the numerous diseases to which we are all exposed, many are being called from conflict to rest. And still the warfare of truth against falsehood, of holiness against impurity, of the cause of Christ against the cause of the Prince of Darkness, must be maintained. And I call you, dear young friends, to come "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." This is the noblest service in which you can be engaged, and which shall bring to those engaged in it the highest honor. Not those who have labored to build up for themselves a material fortune, nor those who by great achievements on the battlefield have sought fame, but rather those who have lived in unselfish devotion to the glorious enterprise of seeking to uplift and bless the race, are the men whom God approves, and who shall be "had in everlasting remembrance." May you respond to this appeal, and, looking up to the Great Leader and Captain, say to him, "Behold Lord, here am I; send me."—Your true well-wisher.—One grown gray in the service.

Mount Hermon.

From the moment that the traveller reaches the plain of Shechem in the interior, nay, even from the depths of the Jordan valley by the Dead Sea, the snowy heights of Hermon are visible. The ancient names of its double range are significant of this position. It was "Sion," "the up-raised;" or "Hermon," "the lofty peak;" or "Shenir" and "Sirion," "the glittering breast-plate" of ice; or, above all, "Lebanon," the Mount Blanc of Palestine; "the White Mountain" of ancient times; the Mountain of the "Old White-headed Man," or "the Mountain of Ice" in modern times. So long as its snowy tops were seen, there was never wanting to the Hebrew poetry the image of unearthly grandeur, which nothing else but perpetual snow can give; especially as seen in the summer, when "the firmament around it seems to be on fire." And not grandeur only, but fertility and beauty were held up, as it were, on its heights as a model for the less fortunate regions which looked up to it. "His fruit shall shake like Lebanon." The "dews" of the mists that rose from its watery ravines, or of the clouds that rested on its summit, were perpetual witnesses of freshness and coolness, as it seemed, of all the moisture, which was to the land of Palestine what the fragrant oil was to the high priest; what the refreshing influence of brotherly love was to the whole community. In the longings of the Hebrew Law-giver, the one distinct image which blended with the general hope of seeing "the good land beyond Jordan" was of "the good" mountain, even Lebanon. And deep within the recesses of the mountain, beneath its crest of ice and snow, was the sacred forest of cedars, famous, even to those who had never seen them, for their gigantic magnificence, endeared to the heart of the nation by the treasures thence supplied to the Temple and the Palace of Jerusalem."—Stanley's Sinai and Palestine.

Love Eradicates Anger.

You know men who are all but perfect; and who would be almost entirely perfect, but you say they are hasty—they are touchy—they are ill-tempered. Now, there is nothing that a Christian has to take more trouble to eradicate forever from his being than ill-temper. It requires the struggle of years—perhaps of a life-time; but it has to be done. It has to be done. It is not to be looked upon as an accident of temperament; but it is a sin—one of the blackest of all the sins. It is the symptom of an unloving nature at bottom. A want of patience, a want of kindness, a want of generosity, a want of humility, a want of courtesy, a want of unselfishness, are all symbolized in one flash of evil temper. It is the revelation of what is inside of a man, and therefore the man who has that must have his whole nature sweetened. It is not enough to deal with the temper. You must go to the root, and sweeten the whole nature, and then temper will die away of itself. But how can a man who has not had a victory over that part of his nature, have a part in God's people in this world or in the next world? How is it possible? Why, a man with a temper such as I have described would make heaven miserable for all the people who are in it; and except such a man be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Christ says: "If you offend one of these little ones, it were better for you that a mill-stone were hanging about your neck and that you were cast into the depths of the sea." That is to say, it is the deliberate verdict of the Lord Jesus that it is better not to live than not to love. It is better not to live than not to love.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

We are anxiously waiting for the close of the terrible condition of the nations, and for the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, to take to himself his great power and reign. It seems to me the time is near spoken of in Rev. xi. 18, "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth."

Yours in hope,
LOTT CLOVER.

The Opening of the Second Seal.

"And when he had opened the second seal I heard the beast say, Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red, and power was given him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another, and there was given unto him a great sword." Rev. vi. 3, 4.

The question arises, what might we reasonably expect to fill the idea of taking peace from the earth? If we suppose that some mysterious influence would be brought to bear on each family simultaneously all over the world that would divide the members against each other in a bitter quarrel many families are so accustomed to that state of things that they would take no notice of the affair, further than to conceal it from their neighbors and associates, and the feature of concealment being generally prevalent in family broils, little or nothing would ever be known of the affair and the object of making it known, which is a signal from God to his servants. Rev. i. 1 must necessarily fail.

If we look for each nation all over the earth to be at war with every other nation on the earth; the confusion would be so great and of so long standing by the time it could be effected that even the officials, to say nothing of the common people, would hardly be able to keep track of the affair so as to know all that was going on, and the signal would fail because of the enormity of the confusion, besides that condition of things is not likely to ever occur; because (1) the alliances are already largely made up for the wars of the last days according to the Scriptures and (2) no nation is likely to take the second war on its hands until the first is settled. Even the British nation, one of the most powerful on the earth, with the Boer war on its hands (a comparatively small thing of itself) stands a great deal of serious intrusions on the part of other nations, rather than accept another war while the first lasts. Even a war of one nation against all other nations is an enormous affair and could seemingly only occur as in the present case of China's attempt to return to her former recluse condition as a hermit nation, by slaying the foreigners, or imprisoning the legations, or both, but that inaugurates a world war, or takes peace from the earth just as conclusively as though they issued a formal declaration of war against each nation of the whole civilized world, for every civilized nation of course was represented by men among the imprisoned legations.

If we note carefully the reading of Rev. vi. 4, we may learn that there are three features in the transaction (1) to "take peace from the earth," which is canceled by imprisonment of legations, but another is added, (2) "and that they should kill one another," which has also happened in the Chinese affair, but the (3) "and there was given unto him a great sword" which clearly implies hard, strong fighting. We must consider in the light of the field of operation as made known in the explanation of a counterpart found in Zech. vi. 7, namely "to and fro through the earth," and watch further developments, knowing that if the seals are being opened, it means the time has arrived when our Savior is taking, more or less, an active part in the movements of the nations of earth, for it is written, "And one of the elders saith unto me, weep not, Behold the lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David hath prevailed to open the book and to loose the seven seals thereof." Rev. v. 5. And the slain lamb which took the book had seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth, verse 6. Four of them come out from between two mountains, and the mountains were mountains of brass. Zech. vi. 1, 5. And the first of the four corresponds to the one seen at the opening of the second seal which was empowered to take peace from the earth, etc., but we will not likely be left long to conjecture, for if the second seal has been opened, the third and fourth will likely soon follow, which of course will leave no room for doubt in the minds of them who are watching.

My Broken Harp.

"The heart harp is broken,
Its song-strain is still."

I cannot sing with grief oppress,
Harp-strings too broke I see;
Then tune your harps, ye seraphs blest
And sing a hymn for me.

Of one my grief-smit soul would plaint,
—The Lamb of Calvary,—
But music flies when heart is faint,
O angels sing for me.

From feet and hands, from head and heart
The crimson streams flow free
From nails, from thorns, from spear-shaped dart,—
O chant this agony.

Attune the trembling chords you string
To sorrow's tensest key;
'Tis dying love divine you sing
If you shall sing for me.

"'Tis finished!" Hear that piercing cry
Come from the blood-stained tree;
As those he loved were standing by:
O plaint sad notes for me!

From eyes that watch the stone-closed tomb
The bitter tor rents flow;
The Prince of life is in that gloom;
Sing solemn—softly—slow!

O wail that love without a bound,
Wail like the moaning sea;
My broken lute can give no sound,
O sing that love for me.

. . . . . .

But O!—He's risen from the dead,
You now his glories view,
With golden crowns upon his head.
Sing peans now his due.

When 'cross the desert's blistering sands
Through the gates of pearl I go
To join your choirs, e festial bands,
I'll have my harp I know.

When o'er the city's gold-paved street
I walk from death made free,
'Twill be with glory-sandled feet
Then you will sing with me.

Then I will sing my sufferings o'er,
My harp new-strinyed shall be
Then, seraphs, on that blissful shore
I'll join your melody.

Peter's Question?

"What shall I have?"

This is a question which is asked by all classes of persons, in every condition of life. The business man asks, What shall I have for all this care, anxiety, worry and capital invested in my business? He pours over his ledger and invoices, figures up his margins for profit or loss, and day after day, week after week and year after year toils on to get an answer to his question; and about as often gets an unsatisfactory one or otherwise. He expects a competency and ease and comfort at the end of his career of business, but frequently fails to get either. Misfortune is quite as apt to overtake him, and strip him of everything, or death to cut off his plans, as he is to reach his hopes or expectations.

The professional man asks the same question and inquires what will be the compensation he is to receive for his labors in his particular calling. The lawyer looks for a multiplicity of briefs, large fees, and fame at the bar, or on the forum; the doctor for skill and reputation; the priest—if he be honest—for success in saving souls. All study diligently to perfect themselves in their several callings, and many are successful, and many more are but sorry apologies for the characters they represent. The literary man delves into the domain of thought to bring up gems that shall immortalize his name, and keep his memory green, when his body shall have mouldered away in the dust from whence he came.

The scientist knocks upon the rock, and responsive to his "open sesame," the secrets of the solid earth are revealed to him; or he levels his tube upon the heavenly bodies, and they wheel into line before him and wait submissively for him to record their constitution and laws; or he places his signal stations on the tops of the mountains, and with the lightning, warns the world of the coming cyclone, and disarms the storm of its power. But all this power is evanescent, and perishes with the man; yet it has its benefits, for wisdom does not die with the present; but the future takes up the thread where the past has laid it down, and goes on in the beneficent work of preparing the world for that time when man shall be equal in his moral standing, to his mental and scientific attainments.

The politician even asks, what reward he is to have for his dirty work and corrupt practices; for his slimy defamation of his fellows, and obsequious following of the party cry. He ought to be well paid for this, for his work ought to be anything but satisfactory to an upright mind. Verily he has his reward. He gets a little brief authority, and struts his little hour upon the public stage, but is seldom satisfied. His experience is—ninety-nine times in a hundred—like apples of Sodom, sweet at first, but ashes and bitterness in the end.

So Peter asked a reasonable question and had reason to expect a reasonable answer. He and his fellow Apostles had left their business whatever it might be, and whether it was extensive or not it was their all, and had followed one who had not so much as a place to lay his head that he could call his own, and yet was heir to all things. Had followed him through contumely and reproach, through poverty and distress, trusting that it was he who would redeem Israel. They believed him to be the Messiah of whom the Prophets had spoken, who should gather the people. Luke xxiv. 19-21; Acts i. 6, 8. Believing this, the question was a pertinent one; and eagerly they—the trusting followers of the meek and lowly One,—waited for an answer. The Master looking upon the expectant group of disciples, and looking forward into the future, when his claims to the throne of his father David should be recognized and honored, answered the query in a manner that gave joy and full satisfaction to the questioner and his brethren. "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28. He gives not only the nature of their reward, but the time of it also. He left nothing to speculation or inference, but a plain unequivocal promise, like one who knew he could perform what he promised. He promised them thrones of power over a specified people, their own nation, the children of Israel. Geography tells us where this people then were, and although they are now and have been for hundreds of years scattered and broken up and are no longer a nation, yet the promise remains good, and unfulfilled. This people have the unconditional promise of Jehovah that he will restore them to their own land, not for any merit of their own, but because of the great name of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. See Isa. ii. 1-4; lxii. 6-8; Jer. xvi. 14-16; xxxi. 31-40; xxxiii. 24-26; Ezek. xxxvii. 21-28; Joel iii. 1; Amos ix. 14, 15; Zeph. iii. 19, 20; Zech. viii. 20-23; xiv. 16.

These thrones then are to be real thrones upon the earth, not mythical spiritual seats of power in heaven or beyond the bounds of time and space, with spirits intangible, and unreal for subjects. No, these despised ones cast out by the arrogant Pharisee, and self-righteous priest and Scribe, and persecuted to death by Jew and pagan shall rule over his people who shall then know who they once were, and shall yield obedience to those who once were in obedience. Proof—Matt. xxi. 43, 45; Luke xiii. 28, 29.

To show that the disciples were not looking for a spiritual kingdom, but a real one; one which had been in existence before on the earth, we need only to look at the historical account of the few days intervening between the resurrection and ascension of our Lord, as recorded by Luke. Luke xxiv. 19-21; Acts i. 6-8.

Whatever men may say against the inspiration of the Bible, nearly all admit that it is good history and reliable in its statement of facts. Here is the statement not of a theological dogma, but of historical facts, showing beyond question the expectations of the early disciples of our Lord and Master, and which hopes and expectations he did not declare were vain, except so far as to the time of their realization. The fact that the kingdom of God was to be established again on the earth and to be given to them, was not controverted, but the hopes centering in that were encouraged and strengthened.

WHEN SHALL THESE THINGS BE?

Jesus says, "When the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory." This shows that he shall sit also upon a throne and that it shall be a glorious one. See Isa. ix. 6, 7; Psa. ii. 6-9; Dan. vii. 13, 14; Rev. iii. 21; Dan. ii. 44; 2 Thess. i. 10; 1 Cor. xv. 24-28; Matt. xxv. 31; Acts i. 10, 11; Zech. xiv. 4, 9. The time when this shall be is not definitely fixed so far as we are able to ascertain now. Acts i. 7; Matt. xxiv. 36; 1 Thes. v. 2. But the fact that it shall be is attested with abundant testimony as has been shown. Nor is it necessary that the time should be known exactly, for men will watch better for something they know is sure to come at some indefinite period, than for one they expect definitely.

This was spoken to the disciples only. They are fixed in their reward; they have the Lord's promise to that effect, but what interest have we of the present day in this matter? What shall we have is to us an important question. The answer is found as readily as the question is asked. See the prayer of Jesus as recorded by John, in chapter xvii. Read verses 1, 9-11, 15, 20-22. See also Rom. xi. 17, 24; 1 Cor. xv. 1. 2, 52, 54; Rev. v. 9, 10; Psa. xxxvii.

It is thought by some that the idea that the earth is to be the abode of immortalized beings, is too gross; that heaven where God and angels dwell, is the fit place for them. But, look abroad upon the earth even here in this climate, in the months of June, July or August, when it has on its beautiful garments and the air is heavy with the sweet incense of myriads of lovely and fragrant flowers; or when the gorgeous hues and the balmy air of the Indian summer is upon us in all its varied glories; then think that Paradise—the Garden of Eden—was more fair and bright and desirable the year around, than this beautiful fleeting vision, and that the curse is promised to be taken off from the earth, and all made new and good again, and then tell me, will not the earth be a "beautiful home" naturally and physically? See Amos ix. 11-15; Isa. lx. 7.

True we see now crime and misrule rampant in the earth, and growing worse and worse every day; but when these thrones are set up, they will curb and finally extinguish the power of evil. We see now that the moral and religious attainments of man do not keep pace with his mental acquirements. That though in many things the world is much wiser than it ever was before, and the scientific knowledge and developments are such as to give great promise of the future, yet the moral condition of the world is really but little if any better than it was ages ago. Men have become, it is true, more enlightened, but it is only where God's Word has been a free open book for the people. In countries where the Bible has not been known, ignorance as profound as ever it was, reigns; and where it is kept sealed up from the people, they are just as cruel as their ancestors. But when the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth as the waters cover the sea, there will be no ignorance and no cruelty, for the Lord shall be King and then all nations shall serve and obey him.

This promise that the followers of Jesus shall reign upon the earth forever, also proves the fallacy of another doctrine which has been, and still is held by large numbers of professed Christians; that is the destruction of the earth by fire. God, when he created the earth, did so for some purpose. He made it for the man whom he afterwards created and placed upon it, and he gave it to him for an everlasting possession. If the earth be destroyed the purpose and promise of God was defeated. God's plan was conceived in omniscience, and will be continued with omnipotence. He made man perfect, and will have him perfect before he leaves him. His plan will not fail nor his purposes be defeated, but the causes which are operating in the world today, will bring about, under his watchful supervision, the full consummation of that plan and purpose. Destroy the earth today, and man as a race is a failure. Look over the history of the race down the whole stream of time, and see how few have come up to the point of obedience required. True, man has made many advances from the limited area of knowledge of early times; and yet in somethings he is not so wise today as his ancestors of Egypt and Assyria were. Let any one who doubts this, read Wendell Phillips' lecture "The Lost Arts." But he has not attained the proud position occupied by the first man, who received the commendation of his Creator that he was "very good." And until he does come to that point of perfection, he has not filled the measure God has given him. But the day will come, when man shall stand before his Maker and not be ashamed. When his god-like powers of reason shall be chastened, but not curbed by his moral principle, and when his attainments in science, shall be such that will sink into utter insignificance anything that he has produced, or attained to up to the present day; and he will stand on a plane as far above the scientist of the present day, as the latter stands above the cave dwellers of the past age. Then indeed will man be but little lower than the angels in power and virtue, and the earth will resound with praise unceasing, to the God of all the earth.—H. B. Pierce.

Training a Child.

Nobody knows, who has not had a personal experience, what an infinite number of problems come up in the development and training of a child from babyhood to the years of majority. Here you have a dear little angel, as you think in the first joys of parental love. But you soon find that the angelic nature is woefully tangled with a nature very far from angelic, and you discover that the full-fledged angel is not born, and that if that nature is ever realised it will have to be wrought out.

Tertullian used to say that the true symbol of human life is an angel seated on a beast. We will not discuss the aptness of the symbol, but we will say that few persons are called upon to face a more difficult problem than that of producing a pure, lofty, noble man or woman out of the little half-slee ing, half crying new-comer who is blissfully unconscious that he has come into a world of moral issues. Innocence is not virtue, and the problem is how to get from one to the other.

There is the care of the body and all that it means! There is the little budding imagination to feed! There is the difficult matter of instilling a love of the truth, which does not "come natural" to most children! There is the fact of spontaneous imitation and with it the question of associates! There is that mysterious thing which we call a "disposition" slowly forming before our eyes! The fingers are to be trained, the memory cultivated, the senses taught! The mysterious questions of life and God must be wisely answered! The proper books chosen! The character formed! The life must be turned from self and trained to make its spirals curve up toward the Source whence it came! But who is able for these things?

It is the divinest opportunity that God sends to a human being,—"Enabled to repeat the miracle of life." "God sees fit to trust us with the holy task of giving life in return." Other duties may call us and appeal to us, but what mission can be more important than this, and what duty can ever relieve us from giving our best to this child who has first received the torch of life from our hands? The first principle in child-training is to establish absolute confidence and sympathy between child and parent, and to hold as the pestilence every form of deception. The child who goes to father or mother with every experience which comes, who can confess his mistakes as well as tell his triumphs, and find a heart of sympathy in both, will eventually rise to the height of the parent, who thus becomes his earthly ideal.

The moment the child is deceived or driven to use deception he is walking on hollow ground with trouble ahead. If he must hide part of his life, or share it with some associate, he is at the mercy of the tide, and bad associates will poison him. But if his heart cleaves to a pure and noble father or mother, he comes into an atmosphere of love and sympathy, and frankly tells his little tale of doings and sufferings, and finds his needs met there, and leans up against that best thing in the universe, under God—a loving, sympathetic human heart—one may safely prophesy an upward path and shining heights. "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Prov. xxii. 6.

New Testament Lessons.

"Great in the sight of the Lord." Luke i. 15.

It was of John the Baptist that this prophecy was uttered. The little babe was born. Neighbors and cousins crowded in to rejoice. The child was named. There was a wonderful stir about him throughout all the hill country of Judea. What manner of child was he going to be? We hear nothing more for a time only, that "the hand of the Lord was with him," until he came preaching in the wilderness, not far perhaps from the unnamed city—perhaps Arba—where he was born. What kind of a looking man was he? We do not know, but he was dressed in the garb of a prophet. Men looking at him, would look in awe. They would listen when he spoke, just because of those rough garments that he wore. In them was the insignia of his authority. They bespoke him a messenger of the Most High; an ambassador of heaven. But he was poor, his food was of the coarsest kind, such as prophets ate. Men and women would now laugh to see him passing along the streets. Yet hear him preach. What boldness! What sarcastic language! What telling of sins to the face! But there went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. He was great in this, in his power over men. He drew them to him; he pictured them to themselves; he painted the wrath to come; he bade them flee from its terrors, that when he who was to come after him, should purge his floor, they might be found among the precious wheat and be gathered into his garner.

There would be a hewing down, a casting into the fire. Fruits must be brought forth meet for, or in keeping with, repentance. He was great in that he set others to work preparing the way of the Lord. It was his converts who were to make straight paths for the footsteps of Jesus. What does that word "straight" mean? Young says, "upright," "correct." Then the lives of these men and women were to be "upright" or "correct." It was for them to show what the life of a child of God ought to be. They were to be patterns—paths, that others might safely imitate; might safely walk after. It would be easier for Jesus to enter upon his work of teaching men how to live when these straight paths, or patterns had been cut out before him.

"Great in the sight of the Lord." Herod would not have looked upon John the Baptist as great; he would have been a mere pigmy in the eyes of Alexander, or Napoleon. And yet, that humble wilderness preacher began the conquest of the world for his Master. The ball set rolling, has rolled on. The paths begun have stretched to unmeasurable limits. For not alone for the beginning of Christ's ministry did he prepare. He laid the rails that shall reach to the millennial times and far beyond. O grand and worthy man! Who would not be like thee? Who would not win for themselves that matchless exordium—"Great in the sight of the Lord?"

That is what we want. No earthly greatness dazzles our eyes. Poor human fame pales and dies. This will live on forever. What if the work be in the wilderness? Who cares about "the little corner," the noteless name? To be "great in the Lord," that is worth more than the wealth of a world.

Work on dear tired, discouraged ones! All ye men and women preachers take courage! You are winning souls for God. Angels are your colaborers! He takes note of and cares for you. No work on earth can compare with yours. And the reward is coming. He has promised. It will soon be yours.

Report of Labors.

Some time after the Annual Conference in September, it became apparent that further efforts at the town of Remington would be necessary, as there were some who had attended the tent meeting who manifested a willingness to obey the gospel, and the writer accordingly went to that place on the first of Oct., and conducted a meeting lasting ten days, which resulted in a more general awakening of interest in the things relating to the kingdom of God upon earth, the removal of some prejudice, and the baptism of four persons. On the first night we encountered a political rally, but notwithstanding this the attendance was good. We discovered that the hall we were using had been rented for political purposes for the rest of the campaign season, and therefore were obliged to seek other quarters. The only available place was the old Town Hall, and to this we repaired and with us a goodly number who were willing to hear the truth as it is in Jesus. A token of interest in the truth was the fact that we had largely the same persons who were with us in the first meeting. On Sunday, Oct. 7, we celebrated the Lord's Supper with them—the first time for many years at Remington. There are still others who are interested in the truth, and no doubt in time will obey the glad tidings. It is to be hoped that our people will purchase the Presbyterian church, which is for sale, so that they may have a house of worship of their own; in this way, by holding our services in the town of Remington, we could have a good-sized class.

During the last week in September, I visited the town of Denver, in this State, at the invitation of Bro. E. A. Kessler, and spoke for several evenings at the Advent church, also one evening in German at Bro. Kessler's house; we also had the pleasure of baptizing into the name of the Lord two of Bro. Kessler's daughters. Though living isolated from those of like precious faith, he and Sister Kessler hold to the faith, and are anxious that their children should obey the truth. Let me say to all who are isolated, Do not be discouraged, hold to the faith, tell it out, keep on sowing the good seed—the Word is the kingdom; and in due time the Word will accomplish that contemplated in its mission; and you yourself shall reap without ending, if you faint not. Let me repeat what I wrote once heretofore, Let us not go into other churches, "just to have a church home." For those of the faith of Abraham there is but one thing to do: Walk in the steps of Father Abraham and be separated from any "tangling alliances" with those who know not the faith once delivered to the saints. Submitted in the love of the truth,

A. H. Zilmer.

To the faithful in Christ scattered abroad, greeting:

An earnest effort is now being made to have general co-operation in a systematic way in evangelical work. Thus, arouse each congregation to co-operate according to ability, in order to which give each member of the congregation such opportunity (see report of last conference). This is meeting with fair success. Yet, I presume from want of understanding, is not operating much with scattered members. Suffer a few practical suggestions. You being mostly attached to congregations where you formerly were, hence so counted by the congregation. Your not responding will lessen their credit in report. Each is asked to respond according to ability. How? To be furnished with slip for pledge, to pay so much each month, which being signed with amount filled in the blank (running from 10 cents up to dollars each month) then send slip to secretary of your congregation, with amount you wish to pay, one month, six months, or all at once if you prefer. The secretary gives you the proper credit, endorses amount on slip, returns to you as a receipt and reminder of future payments. The few isolated—not attached—send to secretary of Conference, E. K. Barnhill, Plymouth. This makes a uniform system. Some earnest brethren in helping, by sending and inducing others as individuals to send direct to secretary or treasurer of Conference, without reference to the congregation, thereby help the cause, but at the same time cripple the system by continuing the ineffective old way of individual effort with no system. All that have not will be supplied with slips on application. I have written—sent slips to a number of scattered ones with no response. Some at first thought will say, "Unable to do." Think again, only 10 cents per month, or $1.20 per year, for the least able. How much by such for excursions, entertainments, and other smaller luxuries, 5 cents here and 10 cents there, amounting in the aggregate to even 50 cents or even a dollar a month. How little of self-denial it would be, out of this to set apart at least 10 cents a month for the propagation of the truth we all love so well, and thus co-operate with the blessed Lord, and at the same time be an inspiration to others who possess more of the Lord's means than we. Let us all work together and without burden to any. We will see the car of truth move as never before.

The Uses of Evil.

"Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, that he should be born blind; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." John ix. 2, 3.

We too hastily conclude where we see evil endured by our fellowmen, that it is the consequence of sin, either in the person himself or of his progenitors, and so it has become a theological dogma that all the evil in the world resulted from Adam's sin. That much evil thus resulted is unsupported by proof and contradicted by the Savior in the text before us. Evil, during a disciplinary state, is as essential as good, and without it good could never have been known. Good and evil were joined together in the first man's trial: one could not be known without the other; the same tree bears both fruits. If man ate of the tree at all he necessarily became possessed of the knowledge of both at the same time. That man should possess the knowledge, in due time, was clearly his maker's design, or that tree would never have had a place in the garden of Eden. But, the man was to wait the due time, which "the Father had put in his own power," Acts i. 7.

The prohibition about eating of that tree was, clearly, only for a time, and a trial of man's faith in his Creator, or his reliance on his wisdom and goodness. The knowledge of good and evil was learned by eating of the tree; and evil was increased by an act of disobedience; it brought death in its train, and thereby increased the evil. As a penalty, however, death did not come upon one of his or Adam's posterity for his sin. Paul settles that question when he says, "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly," i. e. not by his own will or act, but by reason of him who has subjected the same in hope, and he adds, "The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. viii. 20, 24.

Subjection to a short life, and death, and corruption—so far as Adam's posterity was concerned—was not for his sin, our progenitor's sin did not bring death as a penalty; we were subjected to it, that the works of God should be made manifest in us. This will be done by a reversal of death, through and by God's Son, Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, (annulled, or abrogated) death and brought life and immortality to light, 2 Tim. i. 10. Neither has this race "sinned, nor our progenitors," that we should be subjected to the death that has come upon all the posterity of Adam; but that the wonderful works of God in his wisdom, knowledge, love, and power should be made manifest in us by a new re-creation; bringing the race back, out of dust or death that we may live endlessly if we will except such a life, by our own personal act, by the acceptance of the Life Giver, Jesus the Redeemer, when he is clearly presented to us as such. He it is who will "work the works of God," and manifest the glory of the Father," in the first place, by delivering the race from the bondage of physical corruption, and also from the bondage of moral corruption, to as many as receive him, to all such will he give power to become the children of God. John i. 12; Rom. viii. 21.

Thus shall evil—like the wrath of man, Psa. lxxvi. 10; be made to manifest the glorious works of God, and its final and utter removal from the race will all intelligences to join in saying, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways thou King of saints." Rev. xv. 3.

Change of Location.

The friends will please make a note of the change of address of Brother J. S. Hatch. He has moved from this state to Tustin, Orange Co. California where letters should be addressed. We commend our Bro. Hatch to the brethren on the Pacific Coast, and add if any desire his labors in the gospel field he is ready to answer calls.

Get at the root of things. The gold mines of Scripture are not in the top soil, you must open a shaft; the precious diamonds of experience are not picked up in the roadway, their secret places are far down. Get down into the vitality, the solidity, the veracity, the divinity, of the Word of God, and seek to possess with it the inward work of the Spirit.

Poetry.

The Grace of Giving.

The piteous cry of starving India runs.
And knocks loud on pity at your heart's door,
You lift'st quick the latch, and to the sons
You gave your utmost for the dying poor.
While tears of sympathy suffused your eyes,
And for their woes you prayed with many sighs.

A missionary, pleading prayer for more
Strong earnest helpers in the foreign field,
Showed how the Lord had opened wide the door,
And what a harvest waits the sickle's yield.
How could your soul refuse the asked for aid?
So on his altar were your offerings laid.

The homeless wanderer on the bleak highway,
The children sobbing in the garret cold,
The broken-hearted from her God astray,
The worn out worker prematurely old—
Their needs you saw and strove to satisfy
As God had blessed you, ere his sufferers die.

Forgotten by yourself but marked in heaven
Your God keeps count and will one day reveal,
How when with heart and hand your gifts were given
Unto the least, he placed his golden seal
And deigned us to himself your service by,
Thus inasmuch ye did it unto me.

DRAWBACKS AND HINDRANCES.

"That they all may be one.....that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

In the two preceding articles, 25 and 26, attention was directed to the "gladiatorism" of the Christadelphians in England, and their discussion on the nature and pre-existence of Christ. The necessity which arose for printing separate pamphlets caused by the editor of the Christadelphian closing his pages against the ventilation of the subject, on the plea of saving the brotherhood from the distraction of a subtle controversy, was noticed. Special mention was made of a large pamphlet (48 pages) being a letter addressed to the editor just named by brother William D. Jardine, Stourbridge, May, 1874; as also one by Bro. John Hawkins, Grantham. In both of these were quoted eminent authorities in the rendering of 1 Tim. iii. 16, "God was manifest in the flesh." It is presumed that the reader will acknowledge that these two articles afford illustration of "Drawbacks and Hindrances" to the "Gospel Recovered."

I may be permitted to refer here to the fact that the Revised Version gives the following on the passage just named. It is rendered, "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; he who was manifested in the flesh." A note is inserted in the margin—"the word God in place of he who rests on no sufficient ancient evidence. Some ancient authorities read which." The Roman Catholic version reads "which."

Of course I do not profess in these papers to discuss the question on its merits, or even to give an outline of the various opinions entertained on the subject. I can only expect to touch on certain points, so far as I happen to possess a portion of the mass of literature printed, to show how "Drawbacks" have arisen.

As the subject of God Manifestation has been so far touched on already, it may be here permitted to refer to it a little further.

The late Rev. Dr. W. L. Alexander of Edinburgh has a remark regarding 1 Tim. iii. 16, which is worthy of being quoted. He is arguing against "the church" being "the pillar and ground of the truth;" and says, In the opinion of many of our first-rate critics, the words belong to the next verse, and refer to the mystery of godliness, so that the whole should be read thus,—"A pillar and ground of the truth, and confessedly great is the mystery of godliness," etc. So the passage stands in the critical editions of Bengel, Griesbach, Knapp, Heinrichs, and Scholz." By this construction of the passage the "mystery of godliness," is really part of what goes before, and not the beginning of a new sentence, as in the Common Version. It is therefore "a pillar and ground (or stay) of the truth." Viewed thus, and adopting the relative "which," the proper reading would be—"the mystery of godliness which was manifested in flesh." (There is no article). This sense finds support in other statements of the same Apostle. In this same chapter (9th verse) he says "holding the mystery of the faith in a good conscience." He speaks of "the mystery of God" (Col. ii. 12); of "speaking the mystery of Christ;" (Col. iv. 3); and of "making known the mystery of the gospel." Eph. vi. 19. Moreover he speaks of this same mystery as "now made manifest." Col. i. 26; Rom. xvi. 25, 26; and as "revealed." Eph. iii. 4, 5. Again, he said "we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery." 1 Cor. ii. 7. Can there be any doubt that, in various phraseology, these are all expressive of the same thing, and that they are equivalent to "the mystery of godliness?" And they are all more or less connected with the six items beginning "which was manifested in flesh?" Note especially the fourth item "preached unto the Gentiles." This was the chief feature of "the mystery" as mentioned by Paul in Eph. iii. 4, 5, as being then "revealed" or made manifest—in accordance with the commission of our Lord—"preach the gospel to every creature"—Jew and Gentile.

The doctrine of God Manifestation in the writings of Dr. Thomas is some times made to assume the appearance of absurdity. This is especially the case in an article of his which appeared in the Christadelphian of April 1870, entitled "He was before me." In this article the author says, "The words at the head of this writing are those of the Messenger of Jehovah sent to prepare the way before him, as the Spirit of Christ, in Malachi, declared several hundred years before Jehovah manifested himself in the Abrahamic nature. Christ's words, by the prophet are: "Behold, I ('the Lord of hosts') will send my messenger before me." Chap. iii. 1. "This messenger thus Christ said he would send to introduce his appearing in the flesh is the same that Christ in Isaiah styled 'the voice crying in the wilderness.' The words of Christ in Isa. xl. 3, are these—'The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of Jehovah, make straight in the desert a highway for our Elohim.' Near the close he asks, "Whom did John introduce? The Spirit in Malachi and Isaiah saith it was Jehovah."

Near the close the Doctor says, "John being six months older than Jesus, John was in that sense before Jesus. But John says Jesus 'was before me.' Hence he pre-existed before John, though born after him." This is a Trinitarian argument. Cabbin says, "was before me from eternity." I have no hesitation in saying, however, that we have in these words of John the Baptist (John i. 15, 30) a gross mistranslation of the term protos, but for which this text never could have been quoted for such a purpose. In the Revised Version, for example, an alternative rendering is in the margin, "first in regard of me." This is in exact accordance with Hudson's Critical Greek and English Concordance. Of about a hundred occurrences of the term protos, the above passages are the only instances where, in the Common Version, protos is rendered "before." In about eighty instances it is rendered "first;" in seven, chief; etc. The reason is plain. Protos is strictly an adjective, while in the saying of John quoted above, it is rendered as a preposition. There seems to me to be no doubt that the proper rendering of protos here is "chief." John's statement is given as a reason why our Lord was "preferred" to John. Our Lord's heirship to the throne of David as announced by the angel to Mary is a ground of chiefship which cannot be gainsaid.

It may be mentioned here that the verb rendered "was" in John's statement represents the 2nd Aorist as well as the imperfect, and, being indefinite as to time, may apply to the future or the present—"He is first or chief in regard of me."

Now it appears that John the Baptist's mission is, by most scholars, limited to his being the forerunner of our Lord. This does not appear in the testimony. If we ask, How did John prepare the way of Jehovah? we find an answer in the words of the angel to Zacharias:—

"Many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God;" that is Jehovah, not Jesus.

"He shall be great in the sight of the Lord;" that is Jehovah, not Jesus.

"He shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children.....to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." That is for Jehovah, not for Jesus.

This, I submit, was the principal work of John. Its extent may be judged from this testimony, "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Matt. iii. 5, 6.

The manifesting of the Messiah was an incident which took place in the midst of this work, and was certainly subordinate to this great mission of John.

This will further appear if we examine Isaiah xl. 1-5, where John's mission is supposed to be mentioned. In these verses it is the glorious future of Jerusalem that is the theme. "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned .....every valley shall be exalted, etc., ...and the glory of Jehovah shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together." So also even of Malachi iii. 1-4, "Behold I will send my messenger .....even the messenger of the covenant.....But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?.....And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi .....that they may offer unto Jehovah an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto Jehovah, as in the days of old."

John is said to "come in the spirit and power of Elijah." It may be suggested here that the real mission predicted by Isaiah and Malachi is that of Elijah. We have it in express words in Mal. iv. 5, 6. "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of Jehovah; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children," etc. This latter part is attributed in Luke to John the Baptist. But was not this applying the language by accommodation, as in the case of some other prophecies, because it was, in some respects suitable to the occasion?

Six months later (October 1870), a letter from the Doctor to the editor of the Christadelphian appeared, concerning a division which had taken place in Chicago on the subject under notice. I here quote one paragraph containing statements akin to those already quoted.

"The first thing they ought to do is to arrive at a distinct comprehension of what each party understands by the phrase 'Jesus Christ,' as representative of the personage 'by whom,' John says, 'the world was made;' who John the Immerser says 'was before him,' the Son of Man that came down from heaven;' who affirmed his equality with God;' who said the bread that he gave for the life of the world was his flesh,' and that 'this bread came down from heaven,' who also said 'I and the Father are one,' and 'before Abraham was I am.' Here is he whose 'Name is Wonderful;' who 'had glory with the Father before the world was;' who was before all things, and by whom all things consist;' in whom dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead bodily;' who 'in the beginning laid the foundation of the earth, and the works of whose hands the heavens are;' who is the true God, and eternal life;' 'who is and was and is to come the Almighty,' the King of kings, and Lord of lords.' Let both parties define Jesus Christ so as to interpret these testimonies which are divinely affirmed of the seed of Abraham and son of David, in harmony with all other testimonies concerning his sufferings, death, burial and resurrection; they will then have attained to a knowledge of 'the living God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent.'"

In all these reasonings and puzzling suggestions of Dr. Thomas, he appears to regard Jehovah, the Lord of Hosts, and the Christ, as one and the same person. He gives no hint that the "Word" (which "was made flesh") might supply a solution of any of those problems. So far as the record shows, the word was previously an impersonal agency, but potent, as the utterance of Jehovah, in the creation and otherwise. If some kind of pre-existed personality be not his meaning, his language is far from being well chosen. Whatever dubiety may have existed as to the Doctor's exact meaning here, there was certainly none in the minds of some of his brethren. D. Balrstow in a pamphlet of 50 pages on this subject issued in 1880, makes this matter plain. The heading of the main part is "The pre-existent personality of Jesus Christ the Son of God." In the preface he says "some say 'there was no Jesus Christ or Son of God in person before birth in flesh.'" At p. 9 he quotes Prov. viii. 24-30, where, as commonly held, Divine Wisdom is represented under the figure of personification. He says "In his beginning he was the first begotten offspring of Deity. He says, 'I was set up from everlasting,' etc..... Here is undeniably taught the personality of the speaker, for apart from personal existence, how shall we explain the words rejoicing always before him.'

From what has been advanced in this article it is respectfully submitted that the reasonings of Dr. Thomas referred to are not to be admitted.

J. CAMERON.

Genesis. Chap. 9.

1. And God blessed Noce and his sons, and said unto them, Increase and multiply and fill the earth and assert your lordship over it.

2. And trembling and fear of you will be upon all the wild-beasts of the earth, upon all the flying-things of the heavens and upon all the things that move upon the earth and all the fish of the sea; I have given them to be subject to your hands.

3. And every creeping-thing that is living shall be yours for food; as the garden-plants of herbage have I given them all to you;

4. Only flesh with blood of soul (organic-life) ye shall not eat;

5. And moreover your blood of your souls, from the hand of all the wild-beasts shall I require it; and from the hand of brother man shall I require man's soul.

6. The one who sheddeth man's blood, as the price of it his blood shall have been shed, because in God's image (lit. in an image of a god) created I the man.

7. But do ye increase and multiply and fill the earth and assert your lordship over it.

8. And God spake unto Noce and his sons with him saying,

9. And lo, I am standing up my covenant with you and your seed with you.

10. And with every living soul with you, from birds, and from domestic-animals and with all the wild-beasts of the earth as many as are with you from all that came forth out of the ark.

11. And I shall stand my covenant with you, and all flesh shall never again be condemned to die from the water of the flood, and never again will there be a flood of water to corrupt all the earth.

12. And the Lord God said unto Noce, This is the sign of the covenant which I am giving between me and you and between me and every living soul that is with you for age-lasting generations.

13. My bow I am placing in the cloud, and it will be for a sign of a covenant between me and the earth.

14. And it will be, when clouds make it cloudy, that my bow will have appeared in the cloud.

15. And I shall have been reminded of my covenant, which is between me and you and between me and every living soul in all flesh, and there will never again be the water for a flood so as to wipe out all flesh.

16. And my bow will be in the cloud and I shall see so as to be reminded of an age-lasting covenant between me and every living soul in all flesh which is upon the earth.

17. And God said unto Noce. This is the sign of the covenant which I have covenanted between me and all flesh that is upon the earth.

18. And the sons of Noce who had gone out of the ark were Seem, Cham, Japheth; and Cham was father of Chanaan.

19. These three were Noce's sons; from these were sown over all the earth.

20. And Noce began as a husbandman, and planted a vineyard.

21. And he drank of the wine and became drunken, and became naked in his house.

22. And Cham the father of Chanaan saw the nakedness of his father, and went out and told his two brothers outside.

23. And Seem and Japheth took the outer-garment and placed it upon their two backs, and went their way backwards and covered the nakedness of their father; and their face was to the front and they did not see the nakedness of their father.

24. And Noce awoke from the stupor of the wine, and became aware of all that his younger son had done unto him;

25. And said, Accursed be child Chanaan; he shall be a menial to the households of his brothers.

26. And he said, The Lord God of Seem be praised, and Chanaan shall be his menial servant.

27. May God have made a wide place for Japheth, and may he have taken up his abode in the houses of Seem; and may Chanaan have become his house-born-servant.

28. And Noce lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years.

29. And all the days of Noce became nine hundred and fifty years, and he died (under sentence).

COMMENT.

In the 1st verse R. V. omits "And assert your lordship over it."

2nd verse R. V. is not as specific as the text makes it.

In the 4th verse "soul" or organic-life R. V. (translates "life" as though there was no difference between life in the abstract and life in the concrete although there are two different words in the original to express this distinction. As stated here "soul" or organic life is "the blood," and as yet science has not been able to trace the origin of life back of the blood corpuscle, notwithstanding all the claims of the protoplasts, and so confirming the inerrancy of revelation on this subject, and furnishing us a good and valid reason for not eating flesh with the blood, one of the few laws of the Old Covenant carried over into the New and perpetuated by Apostolic conclave and decree in the early church. See Acts of the Apostles. This fact which makes "a life for a life" a divine decree even under the enlightenment of Christianity ought to be a final answer to those now who object to capital punishment being the death of the culprit or murderer. It was the law in short of early Christianity under the New Covenant as well as of Israel under the Old, as taught here in the 5th and 6th verses.

In the 7th verse R. V. omits the assertion of man's lordship again.

In the 9th and 11th verses the R. V. translates the words "stand up" and "stand" by the same English word "establish;" but they are not equivolents. The first is the reassertion of the covenant made with Adam and all flesh abrogated or "wiped out" by the flood, while the second refers to the continuance of the same beyond the possibility of any other flood. The last clause of the 11th verse in R. V. says "to destroy the earth," instead of to "corrupt the earth." The fact is that the earth was not destroyed in the flood, neither will it be destroyed in the "Geena" purification by fire.

In the 12th verse R. V. "living creature" should be "living soul." The same misleading error in the 15th and 16th. Also wrong use of "shall" and "will" in these two verses.

In the 21st verse R. V. has "tent" instead of "house" as it is in the text.

In the 23rd verse R. V. says that "Seem and Japheth went backward" and yet "that they saw not the nakedness," etc. This I think needs explanation.

In the 25th verse R. V. says "Canaan" instead of "Child Chanaan," and "a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren" instead of "a menial to the households of his brethren." In the 26th verse R. V. reads "servant" instead of "menial servant" the same word as in the 25th qualified by another word meaning generally "a member of a household," the other strictly meaning a servant born in the household which he or she serves. I am thus specific in my criticism of this passage because it has been distorted into a justification of slavery by divine decree. This is very far from slavery as the modern world has known it, you the reader will perceive.

These three verses the 25, 26 and 27th are very far from being poetry either as the R. V. has made them. "Tents" in R. V. should also be "houses" in the 27th verse.

CHAS. CARLETON.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

As I am yet spared by the kind help of our Heavenly Father, notwithstanding ill health, I feel like praising him for all his goodness to the children of men, and to myself also; for when I wrote you last I did not think I would ever be able to write again to the dear scattered ones whose letters I so much enjoy reading in our love-feast columns. It is quite a source of comfort to me amidst all my afflictions, to read and enjoy the hope and prospect of others of like precious faith of my own, all standing on the promises made of God, the Father. Oh, it is a happy privilege we enjoy through the agency of our good paper. Then let us all strive to hold up the hands of our good brethren who are bestowing so much labor of love and self-sacrifice in sending THE RESTITUTION as a welcome visitor every week, laden with the good news of the kingdom, and our coming King. Oh how I will hail that happy day when the inhabitants will no more say I am sick. No, thank the Lord, sickness and sorrow pain and death, are feared nor felt no more. Brethren and sisters, I ask an interest in your prayers to God for me that I may be strengthened to hold fast the beginning of my confidence of rejoicing and be firm unto the end, and that my great affliction may work for me a far more and eternal weight of glory. I still desire to gather some crumbs from our love-feast table; for it is not only medicine but life eternal to read and do the will of God.

Your Sister in hope of eternal life.

ALICE UPDIKE.

To the Congregations of the Church of God in Christ Jesus, in the State of Indiana, Greeting:

The matter of raising evangelical fund, as indicated at last conference, is a success, now an established fact. That co-operation is becoming general. Therefore, say to your several secretaries: Send on the money as collected, to the Secretary of Conference, Sara K. Barnhill, Plymouth, Ind., without further hesitation, also, where not already done, push the matter to a finish, in having all co-operate. All will then see that the adopted system is Biblical, and therefore, an abundant success. To the secretaries: In sending as above indicated, it is only necessary to take the money to the bank, if near one, get Certificate of Deposit, endorse same on back, then send as above, which is the most convenient way, also saves expense of exchange. Let each and all aid the matter by assisting your secretaries, so the work may be fully completed before the next conference. Where nothing has been done heretofore, they say to me, "Why has this not been done heretofore—long ago."

Your co-worker in the Lord.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

The Restitution.

"As you would have others do, so do ye," makes up the substance of the Golden Rule. We have written a number of letters to some of our friends, telling them of our needs. Some have responded, and we thank you for the kindness. To you who have not yet made reply, we again ask consideration of our case, and urge immediate action. Please see to this without delay.

BISHOP Charles E. Cheney, in a farewell address before the Synod of Chicago last week, gave a word of warning, saying that unless there were radical changes in the present manner of conducting services in the Church of England and the Episcopal church in America, there would soon be no difference between them and the Roman Catholic, except that the priests would not be celibate and the Pope at the head.

The Jews!

Christians, so-called, from time to time put forth special efforts for the propagation of the gospel among the Jews. It is, however, generally admitted that they reap poor results from their labors. Just read how a son of Israel accounts for their want of success. Mr. Ba Levi, writing upon the Prophecies to the Jews,—their blessings and cursings, says:—

"I once for all observe that all the prophecies which speak of the coming of the Messiah, the restoration and redemption of the nation are to be understood in the most plain, obvious and literal sense, and not in a spiritual or mystical sense, as the generality of Christians attempt to explain them. Can anything be more absurd than to explain the prophecies which foretell the calamities which are to befall them in a literal sense, and those which speak of their future felicity in a spiritual and mystical sense? Surely not. And it is not a little pleasant to observe the great kindness of Christians towards us in this respect; for they are extremely ready and willing to grant us the entire and undisturbed possession of all the evils foretold us; which, indeed, we have fully experienced for upwards of 1700 years; whilst they with equal generosity, apply to themselves (as a supposed spiritual Israel) all the glorious promises, which, with equal certainty, predict our future happiness in the latter days. This is kind indeed! And for which I am sorry to say, our nation in general and myself in particular are not quite so thankful, as perhaps, might be expected of us; for the truth, DIVINE TRUTH steps in, and prevents our acceptance of these applications, by teaching us, that as all the prophecies of our future restoration are so clear, and so generally accompany or allude to our past and present misfortunes; it is morally impossible to apply them to any other persons but such as have suffered the misfortunes foretold."

By the pointed arguments in the above pithy extract, there is surely a warning to the professors he speaks of, who are yet trying to "convert" Jews, to stop and consider if it is not they who need their eyes opened. Let them understand the true application of prophesy—then they may hope for success. By word of mouth and other means we endeavor to show the true, literal application of the glorious prophecies concerning this wonderful nation ("the seed of Abraham according to the flesh," to whom, as the Scriptures testify, "There is much advantage every way") God's chosen people, whom, in his own good time, he will gather together from the four corners of the earth and make of them one nation upon the mountains of Israel, never more to be dispersed."

Pride.

Pride is one of the most rank and pernicious weeds that human nature produces. One of the prominent symptoms is "bdsating;" another is a "proud look," others a haughty and self-conceited demeanor. When we see the tail of a fox sticking out of a hole we know that the fox is not far off, so when we see these symptoms we know there is pride beneath the surface.

Pride is hateful to God's sight. It is an abomination to him. It causes the possessor to think more highly of himself than he ought to think, and to rely upon his own knowledge and wisdom more than upon the knowledge and wisdom which comes from God. Solomon says "it shall bring its possessor low, that it goes before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

We Dare Not Keep Still.

It is a duty to God and truth that "called ones" owe, to scatter the Seed of the kingdom. We have been put in trust of the Word of life, when that Word is made of none effect by the traditions of men, and its glorious revelations of the possibilities of the future hidden from the eyes of our contemporaries by the false teaching of those who are supposed to unfold and make known its priceless treasures. God's justice has been impugned, and his mercifulness denied, and love falsified, and the provisions he has made for the redemption of man thwarted, and his great and holy name blasphemed by such dogmas as those we have to controvert, that we have to challenge their truthfulness and expose their fallacies. Though certain religionists profess to honor Jesus more than we do, they in reality honor him less and rob him of the dignity conferred upon him by the Father,—we mean of having the power to bestow eternal life upon the sons of Adam,—degrading him to the position of a mere bestower of happiness upon those who are declared to be naturally immortal. It is because man is puffed up with pride and vain glory through their teaching concerning the dignity of his nature, and the grandeur of capacities, and the greatness of his powers, and the endlessness of his saving, and the priceless value of his so-called, "never-dying soul," and perceives not his own insignificance and comparative nothingness, and absolute mortality, and little worth before God.

God's wisdom is called in question, and the magnificence of his plans, and the surpassing glory of his purpose in relation to this earth and man, in the future reconciliation of all things to himself, and the extermination of all evils, the final extinction of all sorrow and suffering and sin and death from the universe,—because these plainly revealed truths, and faith assuring facts, and mind-ennobling doctrines are denied, and blurred, and blighted by the hideous doctrines of eternal evil and unending torment in other worlds away from this; and because an interpretation is adopted which makes the truth ineffectual for the purpose for which it was given, we cannot remain silent. We are God's witnesses. We cannot refuse to vindicate the name and the truth of our God. We dare not sit silent while his character is maligned. We dare not let men die with false hopes, while we can give them the one hope that is true. We dare not let men perish with hunger while they may partake of the bread of life, or die of thirst, while they may drink of water which shall be in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life. John iv. 14; vi. 27-52. This is why we keep up the contention.

We speak with an intense desire to give out the light and truth of God while the day of favor lasts. We speak, too, because we have no doubts on these questions. We have learnt the truth at the Fount of truth. We speak what we know. We do not tell people they will all come out right if they are only sincere, no matter what they believe. We do not call people our brethren when they deny what we conceive to be the most vital points of Divine Revelation. It sounds "broad" and "charitable" to do so, and it may tickle the ears of the people and gain their sympathy; but we do not profess to be in the broad way. Christ said that the way to LIFE was NARROW; and he added, "few there be that find it." On the other hand, he said, "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." Matt. vii. 13, 14.

We need what is due us on subscriptions, and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

Reader!

Abraham was justified by faith, some ten years after he first believed the gospel.

Abraham's adopted seed are justified by belief of the gospel of the kingdom when their faith is counted to them for righteousness, or repentance and remission of sins.

A true believer is justified by faith, (that is, becomes the subject of remission of past sins) in and through the name of Jesus as the Anointed.

A true believer, and only such, receives remission of sins in the name of Jesus Christ by being immersed into it. Hence a true believer's faith is counted to him for righteousness, NOT as soon as he believes the gospel, but in the act of being immersed into the name, after the example of Abraham. The popular notion, therefore, of justification in the act of believing, is without foundation in the Word of God.

God told Abraham he was hence forth a justified man by an audible declaration; but he gives Abraham's seed an assurance of their pardon and acceptance through the institution of baptism.

Lastly, it is impossible for a true believer to be justified through the name of Jesus Christ without submitting to the ceremony of marriage according to the law."

Is Jesus a King in Fact or King Elect?

"A fact is a thing done, or accomplished. An heir to a throne is not a king in fact, until he sits upon that throne. As yet Jesus is only THE HEIR of all things," promised in the covenants with Abraham and David. The saints are "joint-heirs with Christ," and, says Paul, "they shall be glorified together. If Christ Jesus be "King in fact," and not King elect, only, then the saints who are his brethren and co-heirs are kings in fact also. If that be so, where do they reign? Over whom do they reign. Is it not revealed that the saints, before the second coming of their Lord, are in a suffering and humiliated state? It certainly is, and therefore Jesus is not King in fact, and we see that all things are not yet put under him," which they will be when he and his fellow-heirs are kings in fact, and in actual possession of the kingdom of God."

About China.

Some two weeks ago it was apparent no definite action in the Chinese matter would be taken by England until the elections were over, and Lord Salisbury was able to give it his attention. Well, he got ready, and on Oct. 16, an agreement was signed by Count Von Hatzfeldt, German Ambassador to England, and Lord Salisbury. The same is officially given out in the following terms.

"The German government and her British Majesty's government, being desirous to maintain their interests in China and their rights under existing treaties, have agreed to observe the following principles regarding a mutual policy in China:

"Firstly—It is a matter of joint permanent international interest that the ports on the rivers and littoral of China should remain free and open to trade, and to every other legitimate form of economic activity for the peoples of all countries, without distinction; and the governments agree on their part to uphold the same for all Chinese territory, as far as they can exercise influence.

Secondly—Both governments agree that they will not on their part make use of the present complication to obtain for themselves any territorial advantage in Chinese dominion, and will direct their policy towards maintaining undiminished the territorial condition of the Chinese empire.

Thirdly—In case of another power making use of the complications in China in order to obtain under any form whatever such territorial advantages, the two contracting parties reserve to themselves the right to come to a preliminary understanding regarding the eventual step to be taken for the protection of their own interests in China.

Fourthly—The two governments will communicate this agreement to the other powers interested, especially Austria-Hungary, France, Italy, Japan, Russia, and the United States, and invite them to accept the principles recorded in it."

The North German Gazette in an inspired article say in commenting on this agreement, "it is a reassuring sign for the peace of the world," and "is an important step towards the early establishment of a settled condition in China." It is of course but fair to say that this agrees practically with the policy outlined by our own Secretary Hay as far back as July 3, and now coming from two of the strongest governments its influence ought to be felt toward settlement surely. However, it may only make more trouble, for France has already sided with Russia, and Russia is busy absorbing the whole north part of China. Quite likely if England and Germany insist on the integrity of the Chinese Empire as it was before the late outbreak, then Russia may take a bold step towards interfering in the settlement in the Transvaal affair. Inasmuch as President Kruger is now on his way to Europe, and likely has some plan in view, we can only await the next turn of the wheel to see what appears. Russia would only have to refer to British occupation of Egypt, and England would have to acknowledge she had herself established the precedent. Russia will likely use France to issue a note in accordance with the changed condition of affairs, for it radically changes the entire Chinese question, and the position of Count Waldersee is extremely difficult, for look at it as we may, this Anglo-German agreement is the signal for European disunion. Lord Salisbury waited until the powers had each issued a "note," and could not come to an agreement—then he acted. A French Journal says. "Before giving a definite opinion regarding our attitude we must first know the attitude of Russia, for the importance of the agreement depends entirely upon whether it is or is not hostile to Russia." Brethren, let us watch each movement.

Since writing the foregoing it comes out in the Novoe Vremya that Russia will not consent to the "open door" north of the Pei Ho line. It may prevail in the south provinces, but she will not have foreign traders and missionaries creating trouble in the localities directly connected with her dominions. "Open the door throughout southern China, exploit the heart of the country, spread the gospel with the sword as much as you like; that is your business. But we cannot open the door to you in northern China."

Poetry.

The Work of thy Fingers.

Come, go with me, O thou of doubting mind!
And scrutinize the wonders we shall find.
Note the designs that form one predicate—
Both of things living, things inanimate.

First scan the myriads of the human race,
Diversity in each of form and face;
Search then, through all the species of creation,
For further varying shade and conformation.

Go where the earth is dressed in robes of May,
And mark, with keenest glance, her flowery way;
The tints of all her blossoms—whate'er their name—
From zenith'rest hue to hue of living flame.

Noting severely, with a critic's eye,
How blends the pale with tints of deeper dye;
Where ends the shadow, where begins the light
That tips the crimson with the fringe of white.

And what the form and texture of the bloom
So deftly wove in Nature's secret loom;
And gazing, marvel how one foot of earth
Can give such mingling shapes and colors birth.

Gather from fields of waving golden grain;
Pluck the wild grasses decking hill and plain;
With analytic scrutiny their structure learn,
And classify each specimen in turn.

Search the primeval wood in verdant June,
Gather its leaves and with their forms commune;
Go where you will on earth, through air and seas,
Marking, the while, the strange economies.

Leave our fair earth, with telescopic eye
Wander among the countless spheres on high;
Survey with wondering gaze, the rays of light
That sparkle in the coronal of night—

Flashing with speed of thought their orbits round,
Without a jar in all the depths profound.
Scan the innumerous forms of beauty there,
Through years on years of unremitting care;

Measure, compare—with all your skill renowned,
What has been seen below, above, around.
And then come back and tell us if you can,
"There is no God!" O, miserable man!

Short Sermons. No. 8.

Resurrection of the dead, what is it? This, like our last question is so common that it seems by the many who profess to believe in it, almost useless and out of place to ask about it. But we do not regard it in that light by any means, but look upon it as one of the vital foundation questions on which the Christian's faith in the plan of salvation hangs secure. While the many say they believe in the resurrection of the dead, and no doubt they really think they do, yet from the force of their surroundings, we feel constrained to ask, do they really believe what they say? If I tell you that I believe Christ laid down his life and died for sinners, and at the same time sailed off to Paradise with the penitent thief, and I also believe he was resurrected the third day after he died, can you believe all of this? I cannot, and why? because one statement devours the other, or is in the way, and clashes with the other. So it is in our resurrection question, If death is simply a "slick trick of sleight of hand" played off on us, and we do "not surely die," but simply creep out of our old house or shell much as a serpent does, then the serpent, the old devil told the truth after all, and stands justified and honored by his millions of enthusiastic votaries, and there is no ground or need, or hope of a resurrection. Can we afford to receive and adopt these awful conclusions and stand against Jesus, who has in public said positively, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. If God be God, serve him; if Baal be your god, then serve him. How grave are the responsibilities and the results of believing and obeying God, or rejecting his Word for fiction. The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible, and of the Christian's faith, and many are they who profess to believe in it, and to repudiate the doctrine openly, or by counter claims, is most fatal to our future destiny. It is certain from a Bible standpoint, and also from observation, that death is no friend to man, but a cruel enemy, who lays his victims low in death, the land of forgetfulness, the land of the enemy. Death kills, and resurrection makes alive, that is the difference. And if there be no resurrection, no revival, no coming out and up again, then all is lost in darkness. And we are of all men most miserable, and a set of false witnesses, yet in our sins. And worse if possible than all else is, our Christian friends who have died—fallen asleep in Christ—(been separated soul and body), and separated from us, are perished, are lost in the darkness, and must sleep on endlessly. Then if this be our condition and our doom, let us eat and drink like the rich fool in the parable, for tomorrow we die, and that is our end. Oh, my Lord, what a dark picture is this, and is there no hope for the dead? If a man die, shall he live again? Yes, there is hope, Christ is risen from the dead a first fruit of them that sleep in him and in death, waiting in hope for God's Son to come from heaven to their rescue, and their change from a state of corruption to an endless life. Then, yes then, when our Deliverer comes to our rescue, and death is swallowed up in victory and we have crossed safely over the dark river, will we sing redemption's song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?, But thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Resurrection.

In John xi. 25, Jesus said, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." This, in our business transactions is tantamount to saying—"He that believeth not in me, shall not live." See John iii. 36. But those who believe in a universal resurrection, rely for that belief upon John v. 26, 27. "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice. And shall come forth." In examining the Diaglott, we find that the Greek word that is translated graves, in this quotation is mnemeios. I now turn to Donnegan's Greek Lexicon to get the meaning of mnemeios. He says—Something to preserve the memory of persons; things, or actions; a memorial, a monument, a secret or secure place where precious things are stored up and preserved." As mneinia, that which reminds; a memorial, a monument, a tomb. Also Mark v. 2, 3, 5. Here the same word is used, and translated tombs. It is not supposable that this man that met Jesus was raised from the dead because it is said, he came out of the tombs. Really had his dwelling among the monuments. In John v. 28, 29, the Savior evidently had reference to Israel as a nation. Paul says, Rom. xi. 28, "Israel is beloved for the fathers' sakes." So all Israel that are beloved for the fathers' sakes will come forth; those that have done good to life, and those that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation. Christ had no reference to literally dead persons, but to Israel alone.

I now turn to the Greek Septuagint and find that in Ezek. xxxvii. 12, the same word mnemeios is used. "I will open your (mnemeios) graves and cause you to come up out of your tephos, and bring you into the land of Israel." The word tephos means the same as we understand graves, or the literally death state. Thus insuring the return of literal Israel and the resurrection of all the righteous of past ages. This, evidently is the reason why different words are used, one for the living, the other for the dead.

Now tell me, please; ye who believe in a universal resurrection; tell me why should the wicked be raised to life? For instance, why should Col. Ingersoll be raised to life? Will God give him another "chance" for salvation? The most ultra "fair chance" believers will not acknowledge this. Then tell me why should he, or any of the wicked be made to live? Will our blessed Jesus who is all love, will he exhibit the spirit of a tyrant in the resurrection of the wicked, just for the pleasure of killing them again? Such a thought would remind one of the boy who was seen pounding a dead skunk and when asked his reasons; replied, "he is such a stinking critter I love to pound him." But our blessed Jesus is not like the boy.

But I may be referred to the second death, Rev. xx. 6, 14; xxi. 8. I reply, The first death is the death pronounced upon Adam. "Dying thou shalt die," the righteous and the wicked. This is death the first. But in the restitution the law of death will be changed. None will die in consequence of Adam's transgression, See Ezek. xviii., also lxv. 20. This is death the second and will obtain in the new dispensation, or when the restitution shall be complete. Men will be under law, the breaking of which will result in death. This is RESTITUTION.

But I may be referred to 1 Cor. xv. 26, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Also Rev. xxi. 4, "There shall be no more death." But in the Greek I notice the word death in these quotations is preceded by a definite article, (ho thanatos) the death, evidently the Adamic death. Also Rev. xx. 14, "And (ho thanatos) the death, and (ho Hades) were cast into the lake of fire," there being no more use for them.

Submitted in love for the truth,

Daniel Howard.

[After all the Greek and Hebrew is gone through with, there will be left a number of people who will chose to take the plain statement of Paul to the Roman governor "that there will be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." They will not feel in duty bound either to answer Bro. Howard's question as to why the wicked should be raised to life. Regarding the raising of the wicked just for the fun of killing them again, they consider such a suggestion as irrelevant to the question, and will not reply to that either. We give this article [illegible] tion to the telling of men and women what to do to be worthy of a resurrection among the first fruits, that he will do more good and live just as happily. Settling the question (granting it ever could be settled) of the non-resurrection of the wicked never saved any one and never will—it is no part of the gospel that saves, and the command is to preach the gospel.—Ed.)

New Testament Lessons.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own."

We are often surprised at the manner in which men of the world congregate together. And yet we ought not to be for "the Lord loves his own." To all his festivities and drinking bouts, he calls them. They must join in singing his bacchanalian songs. They must plot together to carry out his schemes. To defraud, to rob, to murder, they must meet in his secret haunts, and lay their nets to catch the unwary and innocent ones.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own." These words were spoken by Jesus to his disciples "before the feast of the passover, when he knew that his hour was come, that he should depart out of the world unto the Father." He had eaten the preliminary supper on the eve of the day when he as our passover was to be offered; had washed the feet of his beloved band, and had marked the betrayer by giving him the sopped piece of bread, when he began that wonderful discourse in which the words are found.

The world of the days of Jesus was an unbelieving world, even his own brethren of the tribe of Judah had gone far from God; many of them having been either forced or flattered into worshipping Jupiter Olympus, by the corrupting influence of Antiochus Epiphanes, 175 B. C. While others were following a law of tradition, which they imagined had been handed down from father to son, from the time of Moses, and was as binding, or more so than the words of God himself. The gospel of Jesus was ordained to overthrow Jupiter and all idol gods. It was set against all secret traditions and philosophies and commandments of men. It was to overturn all faiths whose foundations are steeped in sin. The world loved not such a faith. It hated the proclaimers of such a faith, and made war with them to the death. If the disciples of Jesus multiplied and spread, the world and its traffic would be ruined. It loved its own, but it loved not these. It would have none of them; it never will. It hates them. It hates them in China, in Armenia, in Italy, in Africa and in our own dear land, and will keep on killing them whenever it can.

It is the faith that makes the trouble; the faith that scoffs at all sensual pleasures and delights; that sternly frowns at all sin. If the gospel of Jesus gave indulgence to sin, then would the world love its disciples and welcome them to its board; but it does not; it makes "clean through the Word;" it "sanctifies through the truth;" it "keeps from evil;" it kills hatred by love; it brings security and happiness to the home, and peace to the nation. It brings the kingdom nearer, and the time when "destructions shall come to a perpetual end."

Let the world hate on. We care not for its love. We can have no partnership in its idolatrous feasts. We can never bow down to the Virgin Mary, nor to the Pope of Rome. Mohammed is not our God, nor the Czar of Russia our priest. We will cling to the faith of Jesus, and show our love to him by keeping his commandments, that he may receive us unto himself when he comes.

[illegible] the Seed.

Editor Review:

Bro. and Sister Singer, who live on the south side of Lake Ontario, for a time have been telling their neighbors of the "pearl of great price," which they have found. Some as usual consider them infidels, others were inclined to consider the matter. Five weeks ago I went by request of a number of them and spoke to them of the Scripture plan of salvation in the Singer's dining room. The subject was listened to with very great attention and was very freely discussed afterwards. Some again wished me to tell them what the Scriptures taught concerning the popular devil and hell, because they could not see how there could be, if what I had told them concerning the nature of man were correct. I went [illegible] spoke to them last Sunday [illegible] ined to them the Scripture teaching on these much abused subjects. I spoke for two hours to an extremely attentive audience of about twenty people and several more said they would have been these had the lake not been so rough. Many and varied were the comments afterward. One man said it was ridiculous to suppose that the story of the rich man and Lazarus was a narrative of facts, for he thought it utterly absurd to suppose that the wicked should be able to see and talk to each other as the story, if taken literally would mean. I showed them what Moses and the Prophets taught concerning man in death. One young man afterwards asked one of the friends, "What kind of a religion is that? I never heard of such a thing as that before." But he added, "He quotes from the Bible for proof of all his statements, the preachers do not always do that." "Darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people," and unfortunately many who have known even the way of life are like the man who is said to have prayed, "Lord bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four and no more."

Yours for the truth,

Dr. A. Wallace Mason.

Dear ones of like precious faith:

According to appointment, on the 5th of Oct., I went to Pleasanton, Kan., where I met some of my old time friends. I gave them six discourses. On the night of the 6th, the last one of Bro. Ernest's daughters put on Christ by baptism, and I hope that others will soon follow in the footsteps of the young sister. I left them on the 11th, with the promise of another visit sometime in the future, if the Lord don't come, or death does not come in my way. I bade farewell, may God bless them. From here I went to Stone City, where we expected to meet a Christian minister in public debate on two propositions, —The nature of man, and the Kingdom, but after Mr. King made a visit at the home of Sister Hattie Nett, he declined to debate. He laid a plot to defeat our meetings by influencing his people to stay away. But, for all that we had one of the best meetings that I have attended for a long time. I preached three discourses and baptized two. On Monday evening we partook of the bread and the wine with our newly begotten ones in Christ. I left them strong in the faith, and feeling that victory had been theirs. Let us give God the victory, it belongs to him.

Happily Married.

Mr. W. W. Saunders and Miss Fannie Louise Elton were married Tuesday evening Sept. 18th, 1900, at about 5:30 o'clock, at the studio of the bride, No. 166 Euclid Avenue Cleveland, Ohio, in the presence of about forty of their near friends and relatives. The bride's father, Geo. Elton, performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders left the same evening for a trip down the St. Lawrence, and beyond.

Brother Elton is to be congratulated in his family. He is the father of five children, one son and four daughters, all in the truth, all of whom were buried with Christ in baptism by himself; and all are now married, he having officiated in the marriage of the four daughters.

A Card of Thanks.

To the kind friends and brethren who have so kindly and quickly responded to my call: We have both of our old songs now, and will try and sing them often and make good use of them. That there is a little variation in the copies thus far received, showing that they have been years ago doctored a little, and that I think they need a little more doctoring to have them in line with God's "life line" so that they may be sung with the Spirit, and with the understanding also. Many thanks to you kind brethren and friends, may the good Lord bless and keep you unto that perfect day.

Spirituality.

It seems to me that one great error, common to most professed Christians, in treating of "spirituality" is always connecting the term with an ethereal or mystical existence in nowise akin to man's present corporeal constitution. It seems strange that such should be the case. The apostle Paul is very explicit on this matter. In the 8th chapter of his epistle to the Romans he places in opposition to each other, spirituality and carnality, and well describe the fruits, feelings, and rewards connected with both. He shows clearly that perfect spirituality is not attainable in the mortal state. Truly he says, "there is a first-fruits" which causes the recipients thereof to earnestly wait and hope for the "adoption," to wit, the redemption of the body. This attained, there would be true harmony; the harmony of a pure mind, joined to a pure body. The motions of the latter would then correspond happily with the thoughts of the former, and in so doing would redound to the praise and glory of him, of whose "spirit" they had partaken. The general meaning of "spirituality" as used by the apostles, embraces an entire renewal of the natural man, renewed in his thoughts, feelings, tastes, etc.; renewed after the model, "Christ Jesus," they would then become like him, and in him, and would be partakers with him in the day of his power, when, by a blessed "resurrection," they would (like him) be provided with a spiritual body. Then and not till then can perfect spirituality obtain.

Speaking of a resurrection from the dead, how beautifully Paul describes the process which must accompany this wonderful change. He refers to Jesus Christ, as the great example of the time and manner that such change would occur to those who are his followers. "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept;" "for as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." "But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Read the history of this same "Jesus," how he lived, how he died, how he rose again, what he came for, what he died for, and what he rose for; it may then be perceived that to be joined to him, to be of the same spirit with him, will result in the manifestation of a similar character, and will give a good hope of sharing with him the promised rewards. It was said of him, his soul would not be left in hades, nor his body see corruption; it is said of those who follow him, that those who sleep in Jesus, God will bring with him. They believe that when he shall appear they shall be like him. Like him, that is true spirituality—like him in suffering, like him in character, like him in resurrection, and like him in glory.

These truths are unlike the ideas entertained by the majority of modern professors, who maintain that at the moment of death, Christians are spiritualized, and transferred to regions spiritual where they are to live eternally in spiritual existence, as expressed in the words of one of their popular hymns:—

"With these we reign, with these we rise,
And kingdoms gain beyond the skies."

They seem to expect that God has no farther purpose for this earth, consequently does away with the great theme of the Bible, namely:—"the restitution of all things spoken by all the holy prophets since the world began," and the fulfillment of the prayer taught the disciples by Christ himself, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and annuls too the words of the angelic host, who in announcing the first advent of the Savior said, "peace on earth, good will toward men." Such a consummation of things will eminently exemplify a true "spirituality," and will forever exclude from our planet the carnal man. Who would not rather be reckoned amongst the best? "Seek and ye shall find."—Alex Hunter.

The magnitude of the potentiality of the maritime prosperity of Great Britain has been graphically illustrated during the past few months, owing to the state of affairs in China. When England went to war in South Africa, the whole of her 280,000 troops were dispatched from England in their transports without any appreciable interference with her mail services to the various parts of the world. True, some of the larger, more commodious, and fleeter vessels were commandeered to accelerate the passage of the troops to the seat of war, but their places upon the mail services were easily filled by other boats, and the international traffic has been carried on in its usual manner. Indeed, it was difficult to believe that the country was at war, since everything was accomplished so smoothly and without the slightest hitch. But the same cannot be said in connection with the maritime commerce of other nations. The transportations of the troops from Germany to China was such a tax upon the young country that its ordinary maritime traffic was in danger of being absolutely dislocated. The solution of the difficulty was the chartering of English vessels, which were readily obtained. Russia was placed in the same dilemma, and when France was embroiled with Madagascar, the French troops were conveyed to the scene of operations in English vessels. Gigantic though the maritime commerce of Great Britain is, it is still rapidly increasing. At present that country's foreign trade is equal to one-fifth of that of the whole world in value. According to Lloyd's Register of shipping for 1900-01, no less than 7,020 steamers aggregating 11,518,759 tons, and 1,894 sailing vessels, representing a tonnage of 1,727,687 tons, are owned by various companies throughout Great Britain. Then the various colonies own 910 steamers of 685,331 tons and 1,014 sailing vessels equal to 884,477 tons between them. Therefore, it will be seen that the grand total for Great Britain and her colonies is as follows: 7,930 steamers, aggregating 12,149,090 tons; 2,908 sailing vessels, aggregating 2,112,164 tons; a grand total, 10,838 vessels, aggregating 14,261,254 tons. According to Lloyd's, the whole of the world's ocean trade, with the exception of the smaller insignificant states, is carried on with 28,422 vessels of all kinds, representing a gross tonnage of 20,048,728 tons. Therefore, it will be seen that Great Britain and her colonies own about one-third of the world's vessels, amounting to nearly half the world's gross tonnage. Scientific American.

Sow the Seed.

Brethren and sisters, sow the seed. Don't let your good religious literature go to waste; scatter the truth broadcast. "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper this or that, or whether they both shall be good alike." Eccl. xi. 6. The time for us all to be up and doing is the present, and God will hold us responsible if we withhold the light. Let it shine; tell of Jesus' second coming, for he said, John xiv. 2, 3, "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there you may be also."

We can all be preachers; for it is not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts. Eccl. iv. 6. Praise the Lord. We John vii. 37, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." Oh, how sweet to abide in Jesus and honor him by believing his Word, that we may be ready to meet him when he comes; for he will come to receive his people unto himself. Scatter the truth.—Pacific Advocate.

Do What Needs Doing.

There are many things which men can do, but nobody wants them done. There are trades which have passed by and are useless. What would be the use of a doctor in a land where there was no sickness? or a lawyer where nobody was disposed to quarrel? True, they might attend to some collateral matters, but their main work would be at an end.

The great mistake that young men make is in selecting for themselves occupations without reference to the wants and necessities of humanity. It would be easy with an advertisement to fill an office with applicants for the position of a "book-keeper," while a call for a blacksmith's apprentice would hardly meet with a response. Lusty, vigorous young men want to wear fine clothes, measure tape, and wait on ladies. Every occupation which is stylish, dainty, and agreeable, is liable to be overcrowded. Hence we have music teachers without pupils, book-keepers with no books to keep, ministers without pulpits, lawyers without clients, doctors without patients;—and this while the world is full of work, and real workers are often overburdened.

There is work for all somewhere in the world, provided we are ready to work. The sweat of the face brings the bread, but if we are anxious to live a delicate and dainty life, then we find a much harder path to travel than we anticipated. We must learn what the world demands, and then we can undertake to supply the need."—Christian.

Proclaim the Word.

The business of the Lord's servants is to tell Lord's message, plainly, frankly, honestly, and faithfully. They know the truth; they must declare it. They see the danger; they must warn the people of it. They desire to save men; they must act in accordance with that desire. It will not suffice for them in a sort of official, perfunctory way, to go through a set of forms and ceremonies which men have prescribed. It will avail nothing for them to adopt the mouthings of the elocutionist and the studied gestures of the stage actor, for the hollowness of these is instantly detected by the discerning. What people want is not officialism and red tapism, but upright and downright common sense, and sound gospel truth. People are hungering for reality. They have abundance of fiction and popper show, froth and formalism; what they need is men who know what they are talking about, and talk what they know about; men who fear God and fear nobody else; men whose hearts are in the work of the Lord, and who yearn to save perishing souls; and when such men speak out of the fullness of their souls, warning, inviting, entreating, and instructing men, their words have weight, and sink down into the hearts of those that hear, and bring forth fruit in their lives, while mere officialism is empty, idle, and barren of all good results.

Death.

"He will swallow up death in victory." Isa. xxv. 8.

We must not amend that expression—"swallow up." There is a sound in it which is equal to an annotation. We hear a splash in the infinite Atlantic, and the thing that is sunk has gone for ever. It was but a stone. Death is to be not mitigated, relieved, thrown into perspective which the mind can gaze upon without agony; it is swallowed up. Let it go! Death has no friends. Who names the ghastly monster with healthy pleasure? Who brings death willingly to the feast? Asks him to join the dance? Begs him to tarry through the night, and weave stars of glory in the robe of bloom? He is to be swallowed up, slain, forgotten. Yet in another aspect how gracious has death been in human history! What pain he has relieved; what injuries he has thrust into the silent tomb; what tumult and controversy he has ended. Men have found an altar at the tomb, a house of reconciliation in the graveyard, music for the heart in the toll and throb of the last knell. Even death must have his tribute. He may not work willingly. He never saw himself. Let us be just.—Joseph Parker, D. D.

True Heroism.

Paul writing to the Corinthians remarked, "I will stay at Ephesus until Pentecost, for a great door, and effectual, is opened unto me and there are many adversaries." The sublime courage of the man thus appears. The work to be done is appalling in its extent, and in the heavy demands it would make upon the worker, and there were many antagonists who resisted and opposed him, and sought to lessen his influence. But in these very difficulties he recognized a call to remain at the post of duty, and though the conflict might be so unequal, he would not desert.

Works of Bro. Wiley Jones.

Twelve Words, or the true meaning of Hell, Soul, Spirit, Ghost, Paradise, Incorruption, Incorruptible, Immortal, Immortality, Forever, Everlasting, Eternal, and their originals as learned by their uses in the Bible. A tract of 40 pages, sold formerly at 10 cents a copy.

The Gospel of the Kingdom, an 8 page, double column tract, sold formerly at 10 cents a dozen.

Early Lessons, suitable for young or old, 30 pages, sold formerly for 10 cts a copy.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 80 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hope of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's benificent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by M. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Gratitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

Change of Location.

The friends will please make a note of the change of address of Brother J. S. Hatch. He has moved from this state to Tustin, Orange Co. California where letters should be addressed. We commend our Bro. Hatch to the brethren on the Pacific Coast, and add if any desire his labors in the gospel field he is ready to answer calls.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 7, 1900. NUMBER 41.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

Poetry.

Are You Shining for Jesus?

Are you shining for Jesus today, brother,
Shining so clear and so bright,
That the souls that are perishing near you,
May be guided to him by your light?
They are wandering far in the darkness,
They are lost mid the mazes of sin;
O brother, if brightly you're shining,
Perchance you may gather them in!

Are you shining for Jesus today, brother,
Shining in deed and in word?
Is your life by its purity showing
The likeness of Jesus your Lord?
The world watches closely, my brother;
If naught in your life it can see
But the fair, fragrant fruits of the Spirit,
Then the Father will glorified be.

Are you shining for Jesus today, brother,
Shining for truth and for right,
Where bold unbelief and its minions
Are posing as angels of light?
They would banish the cross of our Savior,
They would silence that story of love;
Shine out o'er their folly, and show them
How futile such efforts must prove.

O, shine out for Jesus today, brother!
Shine where he needs you the most;
Shine where the darkness hangs deepest
O'er the path of the straying and lost;
Shine only and always for Jesus,
And then when thy toiling is o'er,
In mansions of glory eternal,
Thou shall shine as the stars evermore.

Communicated.

Depart and be With Christ.

"I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ." Phil. i. 23.

Such I apprehend is the earnest and true desire of every well instructed and sincere follower of Christ. To be with Christ means the very climax of the Christian faith, the end of our trials, when faith and hope shall be lost in grand fruition. Paul like every other true believer, entertained an earnest desire to be with Christ.

WHEN WILL THAT EVENT TAKE PLACE?

The text under consideration does not indicate the time, but simply records Paul's earnest desire for that happy union. Paul, however, in other parts of his writings does unmistakably reveal the time when those who have departed life, with an earnest desire to "be with Christ" would have their heart longings gratified. See 1 Thes. iv. 16, 17: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Paul in his further writings, has confirmed the above over and over again, as the only time when those who have departed this life, will "be with the Lord."

The teaching that the departed are with the Lord immediately after the heart has ceased to pulsate, is not in harmony with the sacred Scriptures. The very earliest moment revealed in the sacred Volume as to when those who are now dead can "be with the Lord," is at the resurrection, which will never take place until the parted heavens shall reveal the coming Lord. Paul hinges everything upon the resurrection. He says, if Christ is not raised, and the dead rise not, there is absolutely no hope for anyone, our faith, hope, and preaching is a vanity and the departed are everlastingly perished. "Then they also which are asleep in Christ are perished." I Cor. xv. 18.

If the so-called immortal soul of the departed did really pass immediately (at death) into the presence of Jesus, how could it be true that it would perish if the dead rise not? Paul distinctly affirms, that the dead are perished, if the doctrine of the literal rising of the dead is all a myth.

THE WORD DEPART,

in the Greek, is analusai. Parkhurst says: "It signifies in the New Testament, to return or depart." Hence, there is a choice between the two words, and the context must largely determine the proper one to select.

The word analusai is found in Luke xii. 36: "Be like unto men who wait for their Lord when he will return (analusai) from the wedding."

As to Paul's choice between life and death, he was in doubt as to which would be best, but there was a third thing about which doubt did not trouble him, and that was he had an earnest longing desire to "be with Christ," which would be at the (analusai) return of Christ. This point should be borne in mind:

1. He was in doubt as to a choice between life and death.

2. He had no doubt about his desire of being with Christ, that he said was "far better." Better than what? Better than a choice between life and death.

3. If death is the medium by which we are introduced into the presence of Christ, it is strange that Paul could hesitate as to a choice between life and death.

Right here I wish to give you the result of the study of scholars with regard to this word "depart," in the original tongue. To get a correct understanding (when a word or passage is cloudy) we must in a large measure be governed by the common usage of the language in which it was originally written.

"Now, suppose instead of 'depart,' we select the equally admissible word 'return,' as expressing the true import of Paul's idea, we may find the matter simplified. It may be said it would not alter the significance of the statement, since to 'return and be with Christ,' would be similar in its import to 'depart and be with Christ.' Very true if the infinitive form of the verb be retained; but it so happens that the introduction of the infinitive into the English rendering is a grammatical error. It is true the infinitive is in the original, but there is also another feature which the Common Version ignores, the infinitive analusai is preceded by the article 'to.' The significance of the word will be perceived in the light of the following rule of Greek grammar. 'The infinitive with the article, is in all cases equivalent to a substantative; as ton legeo, the act of speaking. Hence, to analusai, (literally 'the to return,') is the act of returning,' and should distinctly be 'the returning.' In addition to the verb 'return;' there is the verb 'to be;' this also is in the infinitive, and preceded by the article, and therefore, ought to be understood as a substantive—the being.

Both phrases are preceded by the preposition 'eis,'—for, from which it follows that Paul's desire was for 'the returning and the being with Christ.' The verse translated in strict accordance with original, would stand as follows: 'For I am straitened by the two, having the earnest desire for the returning, and the being with Christ, far better by much."

To the same import is the Diaglott translation, which reads as follows: "I am indeed hard pressed by the two things;—I have an earnest desire for the returning, and being with Christ, since it is very much to be preferred."

Paul staked everything upon the resurrection as his only hope of future blessedness. He had no hope in death, but ever counted it as an enemy, (1 Cor. xv. 26), and never in any case acknowledged death as "the gate to endless joy," but counted it as an enemy, and that an enemy is far from being the channel of blessing either now or hereafter. He recognized the resurrection as the gate to all that is blessed hereafter, (and not death) he bent every energy to have a part in the glorious resurrection. In the same epistle we are considering (Phil. iii. 10, 11) he says: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

And in the last verses of the same chapter, he places his hope in the coming of Christ to him, in place of his going to him at death. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."

From other parts of Paul's writings we learn that this change of the body of our humiliation, and the fashioning like unto his glorious body depends upon his coming again. Death is a cruel enemy, and is a curse in place of blessing. It can never introduce us into the presence of Jesus.

Stand true to the grand old gospel of the kingdom, and you will never be troubled with the hideous fables with regard to death, proclaimed by the great apostasy, by which we are surrounded.

"My longing heart cries out: O, come,
Creation groans for thee!
The weary pilgrim sighs: O, come!
Bring immortality."

DRAWBACKS AND HINDRANCES.

"That they all may be one.....that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

In the preceding article reference was made to the published views of Dr. Thomas on God manifestation. It was pointed out that he appeared to teach that Jehovah and the Christ were one and the same person. It may be mentioned that this view whether held by Dr. Thomas or not, was adopted and strongly advocated by a number of brethren who, in 1870, issued a booklet on the subject, of 64 pages, of which more anon. It will be well to keep this narrative as far as possible in chronological order, keeping in mind that pamphleteering, etc. went on for years. A book of 250 pages, entitled "The Two Sons of God," by Edward Turney, Nottingham, was also published in 1870. It consisted of articles which had appeared in the Christadelphian Lamp. As late as 1880 a pamphlet of 50 pages was issued by David Bairstow, Halifax.

It may be noted that amid the controversy which arose on the subject of the nature of Christ, "Eureka" was strongly recommended as a source of proper instruction regarding it. As previously mentioned, the cover of the Christadelphian contained a series of questions, each one ending with the answer, "Read Eureka." The number for July 1875, the year when matters came to a head in England by the issue of 32 questions by Edward Turney, contains the following:—

"Would you be instructed in the history and doctrine of God-manifestation in the flesh? Read Eureka.

"Are you in any uncertainty on the subject of condemnation of sin in the flesh? Read Eureka.

Now what do we find? Vol. III. of this work was published in 1869: It contains some 20 pages on this subject, and must have been in the hands of the disputants for three years, and presumably read and studied by all of them, previously to the outbreak of the division in England, in 1873. Besides this Vol. I. published in 1861, contained 6½ pages.

The author himself in 1869, 1870, and 1871, (the latter the year of his decease) is found writing remonstrances against disputation on the subject, and in 1870, proposing puzzling suggestions regarding it, without ever hinting at "Eureka" as a means of settling the question, or even that it was absolutely necessary that it should be settled.

So much for the editor of the Christadelphian's faith in "Eureka." Apropos of this the following extracts are in point. In a discussion (to be afterwards referred to) brother Thomas C. Nichols, London, says, "It is my firm conviction that, under the garb of Truth, Dr. Thomas is the actual fort he (the editor the Christadelphian) defends. In fact he has admitted it."

In the Herald of the Kingdom, Vol. X. p. 248 (1861) the Doctor says, "The Herald is the organ only of 'the simplicity that is in Christ.' Let all then who are not for this lift up their banner against it openly that the real friends of the gospel of the kingdom may see clearly who are for the unadulterated milk of the Word, and who for that Word made of none effect by crotchetarian traditions.....

"Our enterprise is to develop the truth formatively, that the truth as the incorruptible seed of God, may generate such a people for the Lord as he will not be ashamed of at his appearing. Our platform is this, and upon it there is no room for the old Adam and his traditions."

Speaking of "new ideas" of brethren, he says "Publish them as wide as you please, but do not mix them up with the gospel."

Writing in the Christadelphian Dec. 1873, the editor says, "There is but one safe position, and in that we mean, by the favor of God, to entrench ourselves—namely, the whole truth as brought to light by Dr. Thomas.....for this we shall stand till death, or the Lord's coming, end the fight. This is our platform. Here we shall be found or not at all."

Note—here are two platforms—the one based on "the simplicity that is in Christ"—the other on the whole truth as brought to light by Dr. Thomas down to his decease, in 1871. The editor held on to this to the end. In Jan. 1870, writing to David Bairstow, Halifax, England, he says, "We must be content to ask and accept facts. In this Dr. Thomas showed a marvellous fidelity to the testimony. He not only taught that Jesus was the Father in manifestation, but he also taught that Jesus was left uncontrolled in his actions and force to disobey, and that he rendered a voluntary obedience (Eureka I. p. 107; Phanerosis p. 43.....We cannot do better than follow his example.....I believe (because I perceive) that he finished his work, and so long as God spares me life I shall defend it against all comers."

Referring to this, David Bairstow in a letter March 10, 1870, says—"Well, the Doctor once said to the writer, when speaking upon this matter, 'a wise man may change his mind, but a fool never.'" And again, later, "it would appear from the cover of the Christadelphian for March, 1875 that while the writings of Dr. Thomas could at one time be quoted from in support of the idea that the Word was not made flesh until the baptism of Jesus he (the Doctor) came to see that the manifestation of God began with the birth of Jesus. And the Doctor wrote in 1870, "I have obeyed the exhortation of the Apostle to add to our faith knowledge."

Such is, in brief, what is disclosed by certain utterances of the parties concerned as to the spirit and temper exhibited in the controversy, as well as the subtlety of some points occurring in it.

At a period comparatively early (Feb. 1867) this subject was broached in a monthly sheet issued at Listowell, Canada West—"The Martyrion." This was edited by W. H. Hacking and James Evans. In an article signed J. E. of the date mentioned this sentence occurs—"If sin did not exist in his flesh in any sense, how could it be condemned there?" A supplement to the same number contains a strong expression of approval of the "Declaration of first principles" issued at Birmingham. The writer says, "Let the brethren club together at the next meeting, and raise a fund to send for a quantity by all means, and we shall order them from Birmingham."

W. H. Hacking writing in the Christian Lamp of September, 1875 says, "Let me assure you that my faith..... has undergone no change in any essential point, unless indeed that be an essential point, formerly held by us, that Jesus was born under condemnation of death, his flesh being full of sin, with kindred abominations. This, I admit, I have utterly repudiated for nearly two years."

In the preceding article mention was made of a division in Chicago, and a letter from the ecclesia there to Dr. Thomas, with some remarks by him of a doctrinal nature. The Doctor's article is remarkable for another reason; containing a remonstrance against disputation on the subject of difference. He says, "I believe that these accusations may have originated from inexactness of definition on the one hand, and incomprehensiveness on the other." Then in a long paragraph quoted in preceding articles advising proper definition of Jesus Christ, etc. he says, "If they cannot do this let them cease to dispute and all fall in together as little children whose sins have been forgiven them on account of his name; and in the disposition of such let them cease vain jangling and strife of words..... Let them not twist and pervert one another's sayings by putting upon them interpretations they were never intended to bear.....One may believe the startling proposition that Christ's flesh is the bread that cometh down from heaven, because Christ says so, and yet not be able to give an exposition of how this can be satisfactory to all, or any, or even to himself. There is no reason, therefore, why his unsatisfactory exposition should cause his brethren to fall upon him with tomahawk and scalping knife."

This exposition against the "gladiatorial" spirit, was, in effect, identical with that of 1869, and repeated during the Doctor's last illness in 1871, both already quoted in these articles. These well-meant endeavors were all within about 18 months. It needs scarcely be said that they had no success.

In 1869 a large pamphlet entitled Phanerosis, already noticed in a former article, was issued. This consisted of eleven articles reprinted from the Herald of the Kingdom, Vols. VIII. and IX., (1858-59) under the heading—"Mosaic and Nazarene Teaching concerning God." In the Christian Lamp, July 1875, a question is addressed to the editor by Thomas C. Nichols, London, as follows:—"Will you allow me to ask through the columns of the Lamp, the chief of the condemnationists, or of any of his captains, if they can explain the following extract from Phanerosis, a work still published, as demonstrative of the truth. Speaking of Jesus, Dr. Thomas says:—

'He was clearly in an intellectual and moral condition parallel with Adam's before he transgressed. The grace of God was upon Adam, and imparted to him much wisdom and knowledge; but still left him to freely obey the impulses of his flesh if he preferred it, etc. This was the case also with Jesus.' Page 43." This is to be found also in Vol. VIII. p. 197 of Herald. Bro. Nichols adds, "The above extract is just my belief; if I am a Renunciationist so was Dr. Thomas." This extract from the Lamp shows the readiness with which nicknaming was introduced into the controversy.

The stir of this period brought another monthly magazine into existence—the Old Sun Dial. This was edited by James Martin and issued at Birmingham. This was patronized by those who agreed with Edward Turney, Nottingham. No. 2 contained an article by David Handley on "The Two Adams." In No. 11, is a "synopsis of our Belief," in which occurs this clause:—Speaking of the Christ, "Though bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, he was not a constitutional sinner," or a sinner in any sense whatever; but the Son of God not under sentence of death, or included in the judgment that came upon all men unto condemnation. Rom. v. 18." A discussion occupying four numbers of this sheet took place between F. Peel, Nottingham and T. C Nichols London. The subject was "The Relationship of Christ to the Law of Sin and Death." Nichols makes use of the extract from Phanerosis mentioned above, alleging that this was renounced by the editor of the Christadelphian.

About this period a 4 page tract consisting of questions and answers was issued by F. A. Chatwin, Birmingham, (Sept. 1878). Apart from any merit or demerit, this tract possesses an interest of its own showing how true the characteristic of "subtlety" belongs to this subject. The tract is headed thus by the author:—"By one who thought at first that the new theory was the true one, but is now convinced it is erroneous."

About the same date a brother Christadelphian of Edinburgh, Charles Smith, had been to Nottingham, and had engaged in a discussion with Edward Turney. By arrangement a reporter had attended. C. Smith afterwards issued a tract in which, he says, "the discussion has been printed and published without any consultation with me; without my consent, and without my having had the ordinary privilege of seeing a proof. The consequence is I am misrepresented," etc.

In Nov. 1873, the Christadelphian Lamp (first number) has some items of intelligence, one or two of which may be of sufficient interest to be quoted here:—

"Birmingham. Brethren from Nottingham, Leicester, and Maldon have lately visited this town in the interests of the truth, and are able to report the statement made that the views concerning the Christ as propounded by brethren Handley and Turney have not been 'vanquished.' On the contrary there are thirty who have embraced them, and a still larger number who are carefully examining them."

"Deal.....The ministrations of Bro. D. B. (David Brown) have been of great service in this town.....All in this Ecclesia have embraced the new views without exception.

The following is curious by comparison with the Intelligence in the Christadelphian four months earlier.

"Devonport. Brother Dashper writes, 'What a glorious truth, dear brother, a Christ of our flesh and blood, but uncondemned and therefore mighty to save.' I think I may say all here are satisfied on this important point."

In the Christadelphian for July, 1873, we find—"Devonport. Brother Dashper reports that five friends who had separated from the South Street meeting on the nature of Christ, have now returned to the fellowship of those who assemble there, the latter having approximated to the views of the former on the subject—all now believing that Jesus was the Word made flesh."

This paragraph, though not very clear, yet suited the pages of the Christadelphian. The two communications of the Ecclesia at Devonport, taken together, certainly show a good deal of the subtlety of the views contended for.

As to all this disunion among brethren proving "Drawbacks and Hindrances" to the Gospel Recovered, the reader will judge.

As showing further the interest taken in this controversy in America, I note in the Lamp for July 1875, a favorable notice of an 8 page tract signed M. L. Staples, Prince Edward, Va. entitled, "The Nature and Fall of Adam and his posterity."

Representation—Indiana Conference.

The congregations should elect their delegates in due time. Conference convenes Nov. 15th. Also report (before or at the time) to E. K. Burnhill, Sec.) the enrollment of actual membership; not counting (as some do) those moved away, out of reach and non-co-operating. All right to retain such on your record if so desired. But to count them for financial or representing purposes at Conference is a source of great inequality, and much complaint. Each congregation is entitled to one vote for each ten members. You can easily see that paying no heed to the above, destroys the ratio of representation, as well as equality of financial co-operation. Therefore, please take notice and govern yourselves accordingly.

We need what is due us on subscriptions, and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

A SERIOUS revolt is disturbing the Spanish government. Of course it is laid to the Carlists, and is of such proportions as to call for all available troops to rally to the colors.

"God's Word has two edges,—it can cut back-stroke and front-stroke. If it do thee no good, it will do thee no hurt; it is the savor of life unto life, to those that receive it, but of death unto death to them that refuse it." *

It is in the struggle with difficulty that our best powers are developed and our strength increased. Take away all need for hard uphill toil, make life a flowery field of ease, and you have spoiled true manhood, and womanhood. Just as the muscles of the body cannot become firm and tough without much physical exercise, so the muscles of the mind will remain forever flabby if no difficulty spur them on to exertion." *

It will be noticed that this paper bears date of Nov. 7. We issue four numbers a month, and as October has five Wednesdays, our last issue for that month was dated Oct. 24, and we drop the one for Oct. 31. We however go ahead and get out the paper mailing it this week, in order that we may gain time and not be so busy at the time of our meeting here the middle of November. With this explanation each will understand why the date is so much in advance.

YEARS ago we often heard it said of one thing and another, "that is the doctrine of the immortality of the soul gone to seed," and this is about what we thought when we recently read the following from the Wichita, Kan., correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean:—

"Wichita, Kan., Sept. 28.—Bessie Brown, of Cameron, Oklahoma, is married to a ghost. Furthermore, she and her spectral husband are living together in a five room cottage. The wedding took place one week ago, and the bride and groom at once moved into their new house, which Miss Brown had furnished with her own money. They are as happy as any young married couple could be, and people who pass the house can hear them talking and laughing just as if they were both in human form.

Miss Brown is of wealthy parents, high social standing, and possessed of many natural charms that make her one of the most beautiful girls in Oklahoma. She had been brooding continually over the death of John Allen to whom she was engaged when he was killed in a railroad wreck. That was about a year ago. About six weeks ago she brightened up so much that her parents thought she must be under the influence of some drug. But one day she explained that she had seen the ghost of Mr. Allen, and would sorrow no more for she was going to marry the ghost. She said she had promised him that if ever he died she would marry his ghost, and now she must keep her promise. A specialist was sent for, to examine her brain, and he pronounced her mental condition perfectly normal.

After this she called upon the minister of her parents and asked him to perform the ceremony. He tried to persuade her that it was sinful to marry a mere apparition, but she insisted. So the two went to the graveyard last week and the ceremony was performed at midnight." Has not God sent the strong delusion? 2 Thes. ii. 11. *

"DAILY and hourly do your duty; do it patiently and thoroughly. Do it as it presents itself; do it at the moment, and let it be its own reward. Never mind whether it is known and acknowledged or not, but do not fail to do it." *

Quite a Difference.

"How dismal you look!" said one bucket to another as they were on the way to a well!

"Ah!" replied the other, "I was just thinking how useless it is to be coming here to be filled. If we go away ever so full we always come back empty."

"Dear me," said his companion, how strange it seems for you to look at it in that way. Do you know, I enjoy the thought, that however empty we come to the well, we always go away full. Only look at it in that light, and you will be as cheerful as I am," *

Another Difference.

Voltaire wrote to his friend, "I hate life, and yet I am afraid to die!"

Paul wrote to Timothy in his second letter, ii. 6-8: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure (from life) is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith,—henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." *

How are Your Tempers?

"Do you get impatient under trial, fretful when chided or crossed; angry, revengeful when injured, vain when flattered, proud when prospered, complaining when chastened, unbelieving when seemingly forsaken, unkind when neglected? Are you subject to fits of discontent, ambition, selfishness? Are you worldly, covetous of riches, vain of pomp and parade, of indulgence, of honor, or ease? Are you unfeeling, contemptuous of others, seeking your own, boasters proud, lovers of your ownselves? Beware! These are old-man sentiments, and proof that he is a long way from being dead. It will be a sad mistake if you detect these evils within, and yet close your eyes to them and continue to make professions of holiness." *

Blameless but not Faultless.

We think, after nearly fifty years of a religious history, and some slight acquaintance with the Word of the Spirit, and the deceitfulness of sin, and the almost indomitable will of the flesh,—yes; we are obliged to conclude that blamelessness and faultlessness are two different conditions. How in the name of truth can children of a moral race be faultless, before him who charges even his angels with folly? Job iv. 18.

We are persuaded that every one who has named the name of Christ may be, and ought to be blameless! A little girl who does a piece of sewing faithfully, is commended though there be not a perfect stitch in it. The child is blameless, although the work it faulty. The man or woman in the Anointed Jesus who in earnest strives to walk worthy of God, and to adorn the teachings of the Lord Jesus, and confesses and forsakes, and seeks pardon for what is done amiss, in the name of Jesus, we consider to stand blameless though not faultless.

We are convinced that saints sometimes judge themselves faultless because not conscious of sin; but the pure eyes of God may detect much faultiness in them; and as their moral perceptions became keener, and experience and Scriptural intelligence helps them they will discern more and more defects in themselves.

A novice may think a very inferior painting of his very beautiful, but months of close study and practice leads him to put it out of sight. Let us be thankful that like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him; for he knoweth our frame,—he remembereth that we are dust." Thankful that Jesus leads blameless trusting souls,—lifts them up step by step to higher culture, richer wisdom and purer tastes until they "come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

For the benefit of any who may think our remarks are out of harmony with Jude 24 we add that the Diaglott renders the word faultless, in common translation blameless. *

IN answer to those who have inquired about the Report of Illinois Conference the following note from the secretary, under date of Oct. 27, will explain the case, and no blame will attach to this office.

"Bro. Underwood:

I tried to get all the report ready to send to you at once, but being away from home so much of the time have not finished it, but send some of the papers read at the Conference; will send others later."

The Right Motive.

On one occasion Andrew Fuller went into his native town to collect for the cause of missions, and one of his old acquaintances said to him:—

"Well, Andrew, I'll give five pounds, seeing it is you."

"No," said Mr. Fuller, "I can take nothing for this cause, seeing it's me," and handed the the money back.

The man felt reproved; but in a moment said,

"Andrew, you are right. Here are ten pounds, seeing it's for the Lord Jesus Christ." *

Mark Twain on the Jews.

"A recent number of 'Harper's Monthly' contained a remarkable article, by Mark Twain, 'concerning the Jews,' which concludes with the following passage:—

"If the statistics are right, the Jews constitute but one per cent of the human race. It suggests a nebulous dim puff of star dust lost in the blaze of the Milky Way. Properly, the Jew ought hardly to be heard of; but he is heard of, has always been heard of. He is as prominent on the planet as any other people, and his commercial importance is extravantly out of proportion to the smallness of his bulk. His contributions to the world's list of great names in literature, science, art, music, finance, medicine and abstruce learning are also away out of proportion to the weakness of his numbers. He has made a marvellous fight in this world, in all ages, and has done it with his hands tied behind him. He could be vain of himself, and be excused for it. The Egyptian, the Babylonian, and the Persian rose, filled the planet with sound and splendor, then faded to dream-stuff and passed away. The Greek and the Roman followed, and made a vast noise, and they are gone; other peoples have sprung up and held their torch high for a time, but it burned out, and they sit in twilight now, or have vanished. The Jew saw them all, beat them all, and is now what he always was, exhibiting no decadence, no infirmities of age, no weakening of his parts, no slowing of his energies, no dulling of his alert and aggressive mind. All things are mortal but the Jew; all other forces pass, but he remains. What is the secret of his immortality?"

The last sentence quoted from the pen of this talented writer brought to mind the words of Jesus to Nicodemus,—"Art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" He evidently knows nothing of the glorious future for that people laid out in Jehovah's programme. It is doubtful if he knows that Jesus, in the fulfilment of the promise to Mary before his birth, that he will be King of the Jews on the re-erected throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever. Luke i. 30-33. He seems to have no idea that the twelve Apostles will sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel when the Lord Jesus occupies the central throne as King of kings, and Lord of lords. But any one who regards the Bible as the revealed will of God can be assured that this will be so, by reference to Matt. xix. 28. As the Great Body of religious teachers ignore the fact that salvation, both individually and nationally, is of the Jews, we could hardly expect a humorist writer to understand the secret of the commanding position in literature, science, finance, art, music, medicine, etc., which they occupy in these last days. If Mr. Twain admits the Bible to be a Revelation from God, it is doubtful whether he knows that the God of Jacob has declared it as his purpose to use that people as his battle-axe, and weapons of war to break in pieces the nations and destroy kingdoms, Jer. li. 20; or as expressed through Isa. xli. 15, that the worm Jacob will be a new sharp threshing instrument to thresh the mountains (Great Powers) and beat them small, and make the hills (lesser kingdoms) as chaff, but the mouth of the Lord hath so spoken. We must dismiss the subject at present with the hint to our writer that "the secret of the Lord is only with them that fear him. Psa. xxv. 14. And he will show them his covenant." *

Communicated.

Purpose of a First-Fruits.

By a first-born it was God's purpose to bless and save the latter-born. This fact is the substance of the gospel; but, like all God's secrets, comes out by degrees—not all at once. It is scarcely to be discerned at first, though contained in the promise of the bruising the head of the serpent evil by the woman's seed. Gen. iii. 15. But it shines more clearly in the promise and oath of God to Abraham, confirmed to Isaac and Jacob, "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii. 15-18; xxvi. 3-4; xxviii. 14, and the seed in whom all the families of the earth are to be blessed, is distinct from and must be blessed prior to its blessing others, or becoming a blessing according to God's purpose. The blessing is to come on all families of the earth in due time, 1 Tim. ii. 6, which is God's time, and which he has kept and still keeps in his own power, Acts i. 7, but shall be made manifest ultimately in the best way to the very letter of the promise.

This purpose of blessing all the families of the earth by a first-born is further revealed and confirmed in the law of the first-fruits and the first-born, Rom. xi. 16, though here the veil of type and shadow hides from most persons the face of Moses. But in Christ the purpose is unveiled, and the mystery by the first-born to save others is by the Holy Spirit made more fully manifest. Christ, says the Apostle Paul, is the promised Seed, Gal. iii. 16, the First-born, Col. i. 18, and in and through him blessings shall flow down on the latter-born.

In prophecy, Christ was in God's mind from the beginning. He is first-born out of life. He is the only begotten Son of God, begotten of the Father before all worlds. The first-born of every creature, for by him were all things created which are in heaven and which are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities or powers; all things were created by him and for him, and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. Col. i. 15, 17. He is the first one born from the dead, first out of death, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, Col. i. 18, and it is in relation, as first born from the dead, that he is Head of the Church and first-fruits of the creature. All things are indeed of God, but it is no less true that all things are by man, as it is written, Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. 1 Cor. xv. 21. Therefore, as by first-born Adam, death came into the world, Rom. v. 12, so by another first-born shall death be overthrown or destroyed. 1 Cor. xv. 26. Herein is love indeed, that the whole remedy for sin shall come through man, even as the sin did. Thus, not only is there salvation for man, but by man, for the Son of God is also Son of man, who by a birth in the flesh has come into our lot, or flesh and blood, that by another birth out of the grave that he also might be the first-born from the dead, and it is in virtue of this relation that he fulfills for us all those offices which are included in the word, Redeemer.

What does the law of Moses teach us of this first-born from the dead?

Be it observed it is even the first-born from the grave that the law speaks of, and therefore it is even the first-born from the grave that the law speaks of, and therefore it is the woman's, not the man's first-born, the male which first openeth the womb. Num. iii. 12, 13, who might also though not necessarily be the father of the first-born, for the law was made for sinners only. 1 Tim. i. 9, needed not to speak of the first-born as proceeding out of God, but as only of the first-born as raised up by him out of the barren womb of this present fallen and unclean nature.

According to the law the first-born had the right (though it might be lost) of being priest and king, that is, of interceding for and ruling over their younger brethren, and on him devolved the duty of God or Redeemer, to redeem a brother who had waxen poor and sold himself unto a stranger to avenge his blood, to raise up seed to the dead, and to redeem the inheritance if at any time it was lost or alienated, Lev. xxv. 47, 48. To sustain these duties God gave him a double portion. Deut. xxi. 17. Does not Christ fulfill these particulars? First out of the grave, that barren womb, which cries, give, give. Prov. xxx. 15, 16. He is the first-born through whom the blessing reaches us. In this respect no Christian doubts that God's purpose is by the first-born from the dead to bless and save a latter-born.

Those who like Abraham in the present and past ages have become by faith joint heirs with Christ, (Rom. viii. 17) are also of the first-born or first fruits, and when Christ and his body are glorified together, and thus the head and body are perfected, it is most manifest; it is then that the blessing of all the families of the earth commences in its perfection, and latter-born may be expected to share in the blessing of the offices belonging to the first-born, as set forth in the types and shadows of the law. The righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, (Matt. xiii. 43) and shine on multitudes which no man can number, Rev. vii. 9. The work of the first-born will then be understood. Brethren, let us study our Bibles more, and learn to rightly divide the Word of truth. 2 Tim. ii. 15. If all will do this, we will soon comprehend what the angel said to the shepherds, "Fear not, for behold I bring you glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people," (not a few). Luke ii. 10.

In love to all,

JOHN FOORE.

Editor Restitution:

It is with feelings of sorrow that we notify you of the quite sudden death of our beloved mother, Mrs. M. J. Mansfield, which occurred Sept. 30, from the effects of paralysis, being taken eight days previously in the early morning with a severe shock. She was never able to speak again, but her mind appeared to be quite clear although it was probably somewhat affected from the first. From the last thirty-six hours, she commenced to fall rapidly and seemed to be totally unconscious to the end. She had always been much attached to THE RESTITUTION and its views on the fulfilment of prophecy, and we well remember the many times her heart was made glad by the appearance of her paper. She was always very pronounced in her view on the restoration of Israel and the speedy coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. She leaves a husband, one daughter, three sons and a brother to mourn their loss. She was born in Pittsfield, N. H., and lived in N. Boston, N. H., several years, but has lived in Danvers, Mass., about thirty-one years. A. P. Adams, of Beverly officiated at the service.

E. E. MANSFIELD.

Dear brothers and sisters:

I want to say through THE RESTITUTION that we have had one more glorious meeting in 1900. Bro. John Foore held a four days' meeting at our place, commencing on Friday evening, Oct. 12, and continuing until 15 inst. The result was two more souls were convinced of the truth and showed their faith by yielding obedience to the same, being buried with Christ in baptism wherein they are risen with him to walk in newness of life. After baptism we partook of the bread and wine in remembrance of Christ's broken body and shed blood. Bro. Foore in his preaching emphasizes the importance of understanding the faith once delivered to the saints before baptism. He gave the people here a general waking up; it was just what we needed, only this time was too short and wish he could have been with us as long again. The little flock here has been greatly benefitted by the refreshing showers of spiritual food. I wish we had more men like Bro. Foore. May God prosper the seed he is sowing.

Your Sister in hope of the soon coming kingdom,

The congregations of the Church of God, for Indiana, meeting at Plymouth, Nov. 15, gives but little time for preparation. It is very desirable that each send delegates. If not already done, select delegates at once—also send with them, or by mail to E. K. Barnhill, enrollment of members including only those now living within co-operative reach. Important business will come before the Conference in which all will be interested.

D. T. HALSTEAD, Con. Pres.

Notice.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Conference board of the Ill. State Conference will meet at the home of Bro. Earnest Gesin at Adaline, Ill., the last Sunday in Nov., 1900. Bro. Conner said that he would try to arrange to be present at the meeting, and if he can will preach.

L. BOOTH, Sec'y.

If those who owe us would remit, we will appreciate the favor.

MARRIED.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. O. Taber, Argos, Ind., October 3, 1900, Miss Stella Taber to Mr. Harry Allmanson Ford, of Geneva, Ohio. Upon the same evening they took leave of Argos for their future home at Geneva, Ohio, where the groom had his residence furnished ready for occupancy.

Parents and friends are not the only ones who feel the loss of Mrs. Ford, for the Church of God at Argos has in her lost the active labors of one of its most zealous, influential, and devoted workers. However, we rest in the firm belief that she will labor as actively for truth and righteousness in the community she now enters as it was her habitual custom to do in the one she leaves. May the Father's blessings invisibly attend Mr. and Mrs. Ford throughout their mortal journeyings, and when that glorious marriage of the Lamb shall come, may each with garments of righteousness most carefully prepared, stand as members of his bride, and share the glory, honor and love which the Father bestows upon his only begotten Son.

Quiet Lives.

The Church of God cannot prosper without its quiet lives, those who in retirement are serving God unobtrusively; unknown yet faithfully glorifying their God and fulfilling their trust. "The Niagara," writes one, "excites our wonder, fills us with amazement, perhaps with awe; but one Niagara is enough for a continent. That continent, however, requires tens of thousands of silver fountains and lucid brooks; and those clear springs and busy streams whose names have never been registered in any geography prove an unestimably greater blessing to an American than the mighty Falls whose fame fills the world. And God now and then, once or twice in a century, raises up a man great and gifted, a Niagara of a man, in whose presence the world trembles and admires. Yet the Church depends more for its prosperity upon the 10,000 happy souls who quietly and unobtrusively scatter blessings broadcast in every neighborhood and throughout the length and breadth of our beloved country. Though you be but slender rills, yet let not the slender rills think they may as well cease flowing. God fructifies the world by small rivers, and he saves the world by private Christians."

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Mrs. Sarah Lasho,	3.00

The humorist who declared himself grateful for three ways of disseminating information—the telegram, telephone and tell a woman—was probably ignorant of the case of Mrs. Gladstone. Just after her marriage Mr. Gladstone put to her the question, "Shall I tell you nothing and you can say anything, or shall I tell you everything and you say nothing?" She chose to know and to be silent, and during almost sixty years of beautiful married life kept her part of the contract.

Opportunities for Business.

During the past year the Chicago and North-Western Railway Company built 474 miles of new line through the most fertile portions of Iowa and Minnesota. These new lines of railway are now in operation and are dotted with promising towns, which are trade centers for well located communities. A descriptive pamphlet with a list of the business opportunities in each town may be obtained upon application to agents of the Chicago & North-Western Railway or to W. B. Kniskern, General Passenger & Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.—Nov. 10.

Working Together with God.

God is working his purpose out, as year succeeds to year;
God is working his purpose out, and the time is drawing near—
Nearer and nearer draws the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea.

From utmost East to utmost West, wherever man's foot hath trod,
By the mouth of many messengers goes forth the voice of God.
Give ear to me, ye continents—ye isles—give ear to me,
That the earth may be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea.

What can we do to work God's work, to purify and increase
The brotherhood of all mankind—the reign of the Prince of Peace?
What can we do to hasten the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea?

March we forth in the strength of God with the banner of Christ unfurled,
That the light of the glorious gospel of truth may shine throughout the world:
Fight we the fight with sorrow and sin, to set their captives free,
That the earth may be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea.

All we can do is nothing worth, unless God blesses the deed;
Vainly we hope for the harvest, till God gives life to the seed;
Yet nearer and nearer draws the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea.

Difficulties of Infidelity.

We do not propose to go through and answer, one by one, the popular objections against Christianity now current. But what we wish specially to observe is, that you should not permit them, to deal only in objections against Christianity; but you should remind them that they, as well as we, have difficulties to account for: and that the real question is, what party is the more credulous—they who believe that such a religion as Christianity came from man—or we, who believe it came from God.

This is the real question; and, with respect to it, each party may be described as both believers and disbelievers. They disbelieve the divine origin of Christianity, and we believe it. We disbelieve the human origin of Christianity, when they, on the other hand, believe.

When, therefore they ask, Is it likely that Christianity came from God?—they may be fairly met with the question, Is it likely that Christianity came from man? This latter is much the fairer and more rational kind of inquiry, because we are much better able to judge what might reasonably be expected from man than from God. For human nature is our own nature; and we have within ourselves, and in our daily experience of other men, and in the records of history, a good rule to guide us in judging what man is, or is not, likely to do or say; and there are plenty of religions, notoriously human in their origin, with which Christianity may be compared. But "God's ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts." He is an infinite being, who seems to be carrying on a great plan of providence through countless ages and over innumerable worlds; and therefore we must be conscious that we know but little directly of his nature, and have but a small experience of his ways of acting towards his creatures. It is much safer, consequently, to argue that Christianity did not come from man, because it is not such as might be reasonably expected from man, than to argue, that it did not come from God, because it seems to us not such, in all respects, as the Deity would be likely to deliver to us.

It is true that infidels are able to point out many circumstances in which Christianity resembles all the false religions that ever were invented. But this you will observe is no more a proof of its falsity that the fact that counterfeit coin resembles lawful money is a proof that there is no such thing as lawful money, or there is no way of distinguishing between good money and bad. What they should show, if they can, is—not that there are resemblances between Christianity and other religions—but that there is no essential difference to indicate a different origin.

You should, therefore, call upon them to explain how—if Christianity be the invention of man—it comes to pass that it differs so materially from all other religions invented by man. You should ask them to explain how it happens that our sacred books ascribe the creation of the world immediately to the Supreme being, and teach men that they are under his immediate government, to the total exclusion of all inferior deities. You should ask them to explain how it happens that the Christian promise of eternal life, through the resurrection of the body at the last day, is so different from any promise of eternal life that was ever made by man—how it happens that the Bible contains no minute and fanciful revelations of the state of the departed, and proposes no means of intercourse between us and them, nor any way by which we can influence their condition—how it happens that the New Testament contains no creeds, no catechisms, no ritual of divine worship, and prescribes no sacrifices, and no order of sacredotal priests—and how it happens that a set of ignorant Jewish peasants should have discovered and taught a purer morality than the wisest of the heathen sages had ever discovered.

These and many other such peculiarities, which no other religion but Christianity and those which have directly borrowed from Christianity possess, you may reasonably ask an infidel to account for on his principles: and if he fail to do so, you may point out to him that it is he who is credulous and not you; since he believes much stranger and more accountable things than Christians can at all credit. We, indeed, believe that, in the setting up of Christianity, some things happened different from what daily experience of the course of nature might lead us to expect. But then we assign a sufficient cause for these wonderful events—namely, the almighty power of God; and a sufficient reason for the exertion of that power—namely, to attest a divine revelation. They, on the contrary, suppose, that all the best established laws of the human mind were violated, and that men, in this one case, acted differently from the way in which they act in every other—while yet they are unable to assign any probable cause, or any specious reason for an astounding miracle.

The truth is, that, in the case of Christianity, we cannot escape miracles, whichever way we turn; and the only question is, whether we will admit miracles wrought by a sufficient cause, and for a sufficient reason, or wrought by nothing at all, and for nothing at all. Whosoever, for example, rejects as incredible the notion of there having been direct communication between God and man at any time, because we have no sensible proof of any such communication taking place now, must believe that man at first civilized himself. Now, everything that we know of the laws of the human mind tends us to judge that such a thing has never happened; nor can a single instance be alleged—without manifestly begging the question—of any nation that of itself made the first steps from a savage to a civilized state.

Again, whoever rejects as incredible the notion that Christianity first made its way by the evidence of miracles, must believe that Christ and his Apostles did, without any superhuman powers, what we have the best reason for thinking no man without such powers could do, and what certainly without such powers no other man in like circumstances had ever done. Ask any one whom you meet, Christian, deist or atheist, who was the most remarkable person that ever lived? and who effected the greatest revolution that ever was effected in the religion of mankind?—and if not totally ignorant of history, he must at once answer, Jesus of Nazareth. And the next inquiry is, How came he to be such? and how did a Jewish peasant overthrow the religion of the world, and establish his faith over the civilized world, when no one else ever succeeded in such an attempt?

The miraculous occurrences recorded in the Bible are indeed extraordinary, and wonderful, and, in themselves, improbable; but all of them put together are as nothing in point of strangeness compared with the only alternative—with what must be believed by any one who should thereupon resolve to reject those miraculous narratives. That a handful of Jewish peasants and fishermen should undertake to abolish the religions of the whole civilized world, and introduce a new one, in defiance of all the prejudices, and all the power of this world, arrayed against them; that they should think to effect this by pretending to miraculous powers when they did not, and knew they did not possess; and that they should succeed in the attempt:—all this is surely many times more incredible than anything and everything recorded in our Scriptures. And no one should make a boast of his "incredulity" in disbelieving something incomparably more strange.

But many persons are apt to forget—though it is self-evident on a moment's reflection—that disbelieving is believing; since to disbelieve any assertion is to believe its contradictory: and whoever does this on slight grounds is both credulous and incredulous; these being, in fact, one and the same habit of mind.

Thus, the Jews who rejected Jesus as a magician (as the unbelieving Jews do, at this day) accounting for his miracles as performed through the aid of evil spirits, and who are accordingly reproached with "want of faith," evidently showed the grossest credulity in adopting such an explanation. For, the only way to avoid credulity and incredulity—the two necessarily going together—is, to listen to, and yield to, the best evidence, and to believe and disbelieve on good grounds.

Indeed, some later objectors to miracles have obviated the necessity of an answer on our part by affording one themselves. One gentleman, for example, (an able writer on other subjects,) has argued that such miracles as are ascribed to Jesus could not have been wrought by him; since, if they had been, the Jews could not have avoided believing in him. Yet almost in the same breath, he declares that he himself would not have believed in Jesus, even if he had been an eye-witness of those miracles! But, apart from this inconsistency, we might point out to him that he has before his eyes strong evidence of the force of Jewish prejudice. He sees Jews clinging to a religion which he believes to be false, and to be proved false in a most striking manner—clinging to it for ages together, in spite of the clearest rational evidence, and even the sensible proof afforded by the destruction of their temple, and their own dispersion over the earth. In reality, we have no difficulty in accounting for the rejection of Christianity by the majority of Jews. It is he who should account for its reception by so many of them. The rejection of Christianity by the Jews no more shows that Christianity had not good proof to offer, than the rejection by the same people of pure deism or atheism, or whatever else they dislike, proves that nothing inconsistent with their prejudice can be supported by clear and cogent reasons. The reception of Christianity by them supposes prejudices overcome by something; and the question is, by what? The rejection of it implies nothing but the steady action of a principle known by plain fact to exist, and known by plain fact also to be capable of resisting the strongest evidence.

Unbelievers are generally very impatient of being asked to account for any thing on their part; and not unnaturally, since they seldom have any probable account to give. If you ask them, for instance, to account for the origin of such historical books, containing narratives of miracles, as those of the Old and New Testament, they reply that they had the same origin as the mythical history of other nations—that mythology was the result of "fixed idea," which led people to think that some events must have happened, and thence to imagine that these particular events really did happen. The "fundamental idea, for example, it is said of the Jewish mythology, was the earnest belief of the Jews that they were not only the favorites of Jehovah, the Creator and Lord of the whole world; and that this made them imagine that they were under his immediate government, and that all other persons were merely his instruments."

Now this is only evading one difficulty by adopting many. For one is immediately led to ask, How came this once semi-barbarous people to reach the idea that their God was "the Creator and Lord of the whole earth"—an idea that no other nation of antiquity ever reached? And, even supposing that they could of themselves have reached such an idea, how came it to suggest a mythology? In all other nations, mythology has always recoiled from the idea of the Supreme. So far from making "all other persons merely his instruments," it has withdrawn their agency from his influence. It has excluded him by a painted screen of grotesque shapes of demons, and demigods, genii, fairies, or saints, beyond which indeed Reason sometimes looked, but Fancy never. Mythology has ever stood rebuked and silent before the Lord God omnipotent.

It is not the first step, then, here that is all the difficulty, but neither is the second. We may allow both and yet the third is such a stride, that hapless theory bursts in the exertion.

If the idea of being under the peculiar guardianship of Jehovah were the cause why the Jewish history is a history of miracles wrought by him, miracle should appear most when the idea prevailed most. But it appears least in the later books of Scripture, when it is plain that the idea we speak of was as strong as ever—nay, stronger than ever. And this is surely a remarkable fact. For observe how the case stands.

A mythology (they tell us with superior airs of wisdom) is not invented by this or that man, but by "the collective mind of the nation." Very well. But was the collective mind of the nation, before the captivity, really theocratic? On the contrary, we know that it was a continual struggle against the idea of theocracy—that the people were continually falling away to the worship of other gods beside Jehovah, and continually forgetting him who was "the Creator and Lord of the whole world." Yet we are told that this perverse and intractable people—unscientific themselves and doomed for ever (like Nicholais unruly goblins in Faust) to cross the most certain rules of modern science—created a mythology founded upon an idea which they never fully or permanently mastered, until after the mythology was created!

Would this pass for good sense on any other subject but religion?—Whately's "Cautions for the Times."

The Pilgrimage.

The pilgrimage of the pilgrims has not yet ended. The weary way is still his to go. The many who were once his companions and friends have departed, some to the valley of silence, and others to more agreeable company. Hearts have grown cold in death and in affection. Youthful sympathy, like the early springs leaf is not personal. Manhood's attachments lasts until the frost of age cuts the tendrils of the human heart, when they cease. The afternoon of life, the going down of the sun, why should it not have sombre lines and darkening shadows. The approaching night may invite to rest, but the sad day calls to sad reflections. The grave may look inviting, but there is no joy there.

Age brings fewer friends, and these with weakened friendship. "It is time that he was gone who has outlived his usefulness and become a burden," say they. The aged have few sympathizers. If he is poor, his poverty is a good reason why the world should be relieved of him. If he is rich, it is time his wealth was distributed among those waiting for it. In either case he is wished away. The coming and going of life—the morning and the evening—how unlike! Songs and gladness at the daybreak; silence and gloom when it shines no longer. Here is where the pilgrimage of the pilgrim ends.

When Jesus Comes.

Some people seem surprised at the eagerness which Second Adventists display for the return of the Lord Jesus to this earth again. But why should they not be eager for his return, when that return means reunions for the parted, immortality for the mortal, health for the sick, life for the dead, land for the landless, habitations for the homeless, plenty for the destitute, bread for the hungry, water for the thirsty, sight for the blind, hearing for the deaf, speech for the dumb, strength for the weak, youth for the aged, liberty for the captives, riches for the poor, "beauty for ashes," "a garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," "the oil of joy for mourning," peace for the troubled, rest for the weary, gladness for the sorrowing, songs for the sighing, society for the friendless, perfect bodies for the crippled, mansions for huts, crowns for crosses, light for darkness, wisdom for ignorance, strength for weakness, harmony for discord, with an eternal inheritance in the kingdom of God for all his ransomed people.—Farm and Fireside.

Truth.

Doth the moon stay herself to lecture every dog that bayeth at her? Doth the lion turn aside to read each cur that barketh at him? Do the stars cease to shine because the nightingales reprove them for their dimness? Doth the sun stop in its course because of the officious cloud which veils it? Or doth the river stay because the willow dippeth its leaves into the waters? Ah! no: God's universe moves on, and if man will oppose it, it heeds him not. It is as God hath made it; it is working together for good, and it shall not be stayed by the censure nor moved on by the praise of man.

COMMENT.

1st verse "begotten" instead of "born" as in the R. V.

Japheth was evidently the oldest of the three, as his genealogy is given first here, and that of Cham next and that of Seem last. Besides in the 21st verse of this chapter it says so although the R. V. for some reason mistranslates it and makes it read the other way.

This chapter may be tiresome and uninteresting to the general reader, but it is very important historically as it is the oldest extant history of the human race after the flood. If the reader will compare the names as each C. V. and R. V. he will not wonder at much I have previously said about the perversion of the Biblical names. As a sample of their tinkering with the names in the 8th chap. of Luke 26th verse you will find in the R. V. "Gerasenes" given as the name of a people visited by the Christ and who kept swine. In the C. V. you will find this name to be "Gadarenes." The name is in fact the same as given in this chapter and said to be the name of some of the descendants of Cham and given in the text in both places as Gergesaites." They were in fact a relic of the old Chananaites who were descendants of Cham as here stated.

In the 2nd verse—descendants of Japheth, two of the sons are "Thobel" and "Mosoch" from which patronymics we have the names of the two capital cities of Eastern and Western Russia. "Moscow" and "Tobolski" namely; but given in the R. V. as "Tubal" and "Meshech" which effectually obscures this ethnological fact. The same is true of the Gamerites and the Ionvanites.

Compare the names of the Cham genealogy in the 6th and 7th verses as any accurate knowledge of the old Babuloonian and Chaldean empires depends largely upon the identification of these Chananaite names. Then notice that "Nimrod's" name was "Nebrood" and that "Assour" (the Assyrian C. V. and R. V.) "went out from this land" instead of "he (Nimrod) went forth into Assyria and builded Nineveh, etc." In other words the C. V. and R. V. ascribe to Nimrod the great empire that belongeth to Assour and "the great city" greater than Babylon or Nineveh: Dasee, they have named "Resen." These are also important ethnological facts when we consider that all our ethnology of these periods is based upon such translations as the C. V. and R. V. For there are no records of the race of these times outside of the Bible except such as are now being dug up by modern research in old Babylonia.

Notice moreover that "the Philistines" were Mesraenites and not Chananaites as is generally supposed.

In the 15th, 16th and 17th verses we have the genealogy of the Chananites and where they first settled in Palestine before they were scattered—and their boundaries given in the 18th and 19th verses.

With the 21st verse begins the Semitic genealogy and the line of God's special revelation. In this verse "Heber" instead of "Eber" R. V. Where did they get "Hebrew" from "Eber"? In the 22nd verse the name "Asshur" R. V. should be "Assour" the same name in fact as occurs in the Chamite line. "Loud" also changed to "Lud" C. V. and R. V. and then the letter y substituted for u—and so we have Lydia and no one knows who the Lydians were. "Uz" becomes "Uz" and no one knows where "the land of Uz" was referred to in the book of Joob. "The Ausites" though can be accounted for as the land of "Uz" by ordinary dialectic and euphonic changes, and we also know that this land bordered on Arabia and Idomaia. Then "Mosoch" becomes "Mash" in the R. V. and "Kainan" the son of "Arphaxad" is omitted entirely. In the 25th verse "Phaleg" becomes "Peleg" and "Jektan" "Joktan" in the R. V. Of the long list of names in the 26th, 27th, 28th and 29th verses. I will call attention to only two because these become prominent in later history. "Saba" instead of "Sheba" R. V. The Queen who visited Salomoon was "the Queen of Saba" and "Ophir" instead of "Ophir" R. V. noted for its rich gold product. These names are as I give them throughout the text of the Old and the New and they occur in both which proves conclusively that these names are the true names. Then "the earth was distributed" not "divided" R. V. in his (Phaleg') day—meaning apportioned by allotment, a great fact referred to repeatedly in later Scripture—for instance in the 32nd of Deuteronomy in the "Ode of Mooussees;" and by Paul in his address to the Athenians on Mar's Hill at Athens. It was not an even division between Phaleg and Jektan as the casual reader is led to suppose. Nor was it apportioned according to a number of the children of Israel, but "according to a number of God's angels"—in short claims to have been a divine apportionment, just as Paul says.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Those who are pure in heart have pure desires. These necessarily flow from pure affections. Where the affections are purified, holy desires are constantly felt and cherished. Pure souls go out in holy aspirations after intimate communion with God, and in longings for greater degrees of holiness, and more heavenly mindedness.

The Three Bright Pennies.

In Russia's far off frozen clime
There lived a lovely child;
The Lord to deeds and words of love
His tender heart inclined.

He loved to hear his parents read
In God's most Holy Word,
And treasured up within his breast
The blessed truths he heard.

This little boy was very sick—
And when about to die,
He called his father to his side,
And said, "I want to buy

Bibles to send to heathen lands,
Where they know not the Lord,
That they may all read for themselves
In his most Holy Word.

I can not send whole Bibles there,
Perhaps not one short word;
But I would like to give some help
To spread its truths abroad.

Those three bright pennies in my box
I think a type would buy
To print in Christ's most holy name
The dot upon the i."

That stricken father did not fail
Those little coins to send.
O children, think how many coins
In wanton waste you spend!

Christ will receive the smallest gift;
When follies tempt your eye,
Think of the little Russian boy's
Small dot upon the i.

Selected.

Life and Death Eternal.

If I believe in the hopeless doom of incorrigible sin, and also in the undimmed glory of a perfected kingdom, I must believe in the annihilation of the incorrigibility wicked. Fire, in the Bible is generally an emblem of destruction, not of torment. The chaff, the tares, the fruitless trees, are not to be tortured, but to be destroyed. The hell-fire spoken of in the New Testament is the fire of Gehenna, kept burning outside of the walls of Jerusalem, to destroy the offal of the city. Here was the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is unquenched; emblems of destruction, not of torment. I find nothing in the New Testament to warrant the terrible opinion that God sustains the life of his creatures throughout eternity only that they may continue in sin and misery. That immortality is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus; that man is mortal, and must put on immortality; that only he can put it on who becomes, through Christ, a partaker of the divine nature, and so an inheritor of him who only hath immortality; that eternal life is life eternal, and eternal death is death eternal, and everlasting destruction is destruction without remedy—this is the most natural, as it is the simplest reading of the New Testament.—Lyman Abbott.

Christians Should be Saviors.

What Jesus communicates to us is not simply a gift of life, but an obligation of service; it is a call to comradeship with a warrior redeemer. He gives us not only a promise of life, but an ideal of life. He desires to be attended by loyal souls who will see the nobility of his design, and become interpreters of it to the world, showing not only in symbol and speech what he offers, but displaying it in conduct and sacrifice like his own.

Our ordinary teaching of the Communion, reduced to the simplest logical terms, makes us a body of pitiable soliseekers, who have no obligations of service. It leaves Jesus unattended in his redemptive work. It overlooks the deepest design of his memorial, namely, that it should be the pledge of similar service on our part, the pledge of a companionship in the toil of the world's redemption. He intended that all "the saved" should become an increasing multitude of saviors. It is when we have become willing to be co-workers with Jesus in such work that the true Communion arises.—The Pulpit.

Old Sins.

Like the unlooked-for appearance of a storm-cloud suddenly obscuring a clear sky, are those recollections of former sins which occasionally rise unbidden in a good man's memory. In a moment of time his old offences confront his conscience and mutter their accusations in his affrighted ear. At first he gazes upon them with a pang akin to terror, and trembles lest such sins as his must bar him out of heaven. Then with David he cries, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness, according to the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions." With this prayer his faith revives. He sees the magnitude of his Lord's atonement to be greater, even, than the "sin of the world." He hears the still small voice of Infinite Love whispering in his conscience, "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgression for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." O voice of infinite sweetness! His heart responds to it in throbs of grateful love and tender joy. Thus,

"Love masters agony; the soul that seemed Forsaken, feels her present God again."

—Zion's Herald.

To the Brethren who love the Lord Jesus Christ, in Canada:

Who will be willing to form an association in Canada for the defence and spread of the truth? "In union there is strength." The time is short till the Master will come when we will have to give an account as to how we have used our talents. Will all those who are anxious to work in the Master's service communicate with me, stating what best can be done in their neighborhood to interest people in the truth. Address me at 42 Gloucester St., Toronto, Canada.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?".

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 30 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

The friends will please make a note of the change of address of Brother J. S. Hatch. He has moved from this state to Tustin, Orange Co. California where letters should be addressed. We commend our Bro. Hatch to the brethren on the Pacific Coast, and add if any desire his labors in the gospel field he is ready to answer calls.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money so loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLIX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 28, 1900. NUMBER 44.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalsaints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for the salvation.

Poetry.

The Natural and the Spiritual

A little seed by the wayside thrown,
Where the sun's rays full and the rain comes down;
A little bud through the soft earth driven,
A little stem that points up to heaven;
A few tender twigs where a bird may rest,
A soft where a sparrow may build her nest;
A sapling growing up tall and wide,
A tree that the flocks and the herds gather beside;
A shelter and shade on the arid plain,
And the hurricane rends at its boughs in vain.

A little truth, but expressed in sound,
An honest heart where it lodgement found,
A strange meditation begotten there,
An upward look, and a breathed prayer,
A dawning light, a refreshing dew,
And the clods on the Spirit are pierced through;
And the soul looks up from its resting place
To bask in the beams of Father's face;
And to grow and increase as a living tree,
Spreading its branches far and free,
And when by the heat or the storm dismayed,
Multitudes shelter beneath the shade.

Genesis. Chap. 13.

1. And Habram went up out of Aigoptos he and his wife and all his and Loot with him into the wilderness.

2. And Habram was very rich in domestic-animals and silver and gold.

3. And he went his way when he came into the wilderness as far as Baitheel,

4. Unto the place where his tent had been before, between Baitheel and Aggai, unto the place of the altar which he made first; and there Habram invoked the name of the Lord.

5. And Loot while going his way along with Habram had sheep and cattle and tents;

6. And the land did not afford them room enough to dwell together; because their possessions were many and the land did not afford room enough for them to dwell together.

7. And fighting occurred between the shepherds of the domestic-animals of Habram and the shepherds of the domestic-animals of Loot; and the Chananites and the Phrezites then inhabited the land.

8. And Habram said unto Loot: let there be no fighting between me and thee, between my shepherds and thy shepherds, because we men are brethren.

9. Lo, is not all the land before thee? Do thou withdraw from me. If thou to the left, I will to the right, and if thou to the right, I will to the left.

10. And Loot lifting up his eyes saw all the surrounding country of the Jordan, that it was all watered before God turned down Sodooma and Gomorra, that it was as the paradise of God and as the land of Aigoptos, as far as the entrance to Zogora.

11. And Loot chose for himself all the surrounding country of the Jordan; and Loot took up from the east, and they withdrew each from his brother.

12. And Habram took up his abode in a land of Chananu; and Loot took up his abode in a city of the surrounding inhabitants and pitched his tent in Sodoma.

13. And the men in Sodoma were wicked and very obdurate sinners in the sight of God.

14. And God said unto Habram after Loot had parted from him. Look with thine eyes from the place where thou now art toward the north and the south and the east and the west and see;

15. Because all the land that thou seest I am going to give unto thy seed whilst there is an animate-age.

16. And I am going to make thy seed as the sand of the earth; thy seed also will have been numbered.

17. Arise and go through the land in the length and breadth thereof; because unto thee and thy seed am I going to give it for the animate-age.

18. And Habram removing his tent went and dwelt at the foot of the mambrene oak which is in Chrebroon. (Hebron C. V.) And he built thereon altar unto the Lord.

COMMENT.

1st verse last clause R. V. says "Abram went up out of Egypt into the south." Text says "Into the wilderness."

2nd verse R. V. says "Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver and gold." Should read "In domestic-animals etc." "Cattle" is too specific a term for a correct translation. The word in the text is a general term for any animals that have been accustomed to be domesticated for use.

3rd verse recounts the fact that he returned to his old point of departure "between Baitheel and Aggai." See comment on previous chapter about these places. "Teen Archeen" correctly translated in the R. V. illustrates the idiomatic use of "Archee" when it can be correctly rendered "at the first" or "in the beginning." Now look back and see what I said about "En Archee" the first two words of Genesis and incorrectly rendered by the C. V. & R. V. "In the beginning."

In the 6th verse R. V. has "Perizzites" for "Pherezites" so-called from their ancestor "Pherez."

In the 8th verse "men" omitted by the R. V. which makes Habram's reason for not fighting an anthropological rather than a congenital reason, showing that Habram was up to date in sociology.

10th verse R. V. says "the plain of Jordan" should read "the surrounding country of the Jordan" for it was not a plain then any more than it is to-day, but had a diversified surface and therefore was well-watered with numerous small streams. Also "paradise" instead of "garden" describes it better, especially as it is compared to the original "paradise of God." "Zoar" R. V. the reader will notice is "Zogora."

In the 11th verse R. V. says "Lot chose for himself all the plain of Jordan" should read "All the surrounding country of the Jordan." Also that he "journeyed east," should read "journeyed from the east" that is he went west. Also in the 11th verse R. V. says "and they separated themselves the one from the other." Should read "And they withdrew each from his brother."

In the 12th verse R. V. says that "Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain and moved his tent as far as Sodom," should read "and Loot took up his abode in a city of the surrounding country and pitched his tent in Sodoma." The old name of "the surrounding country" was "Pentapolis" or "the five-city-e nutry," and "Sodoma" was one of these five cities.

13th verse illustrates well the difference between all men as "sinners" and those who are "obdurate sinners" as the distinction here made is maintained from here on in the use of this same word throughout the Scriptures both of the Old and the New.

In the 14th verse R. V. has "the Lord," text has "God."

In the 15th verse R. V. says "forever," text says "whilst there is an animate age." I think it means "forever;" but this peculiar expression is intended to teach us something more than mere duration and the only rational inference that can be drawn from this peculiar expression is that the duration will be measured as a "breathing space" and that therefore "the eternal life" of this "seed" will be an organic breathing life of some sort and not a mere "ghost life."

In the 16th verse R. V. says "dust" should be "sand." There is a difference between "sand" and "dust."

In the 17th verse R. V. says "walk" text says "go" or "make thy way through." He probably rode a camel. R. V. also omits "and thy seed" a very important omission it seems to me.

In the 18th verse R. V. "Dwelt by the oaks of Mamre." Text says "Dwelt at the foot of the Mambrene Oaks," a well-known land-mark for generations afterwards. Hebron R. V. is also Chebroon ("A place of thunderbolts" or "where many thunderbolts were poured out."

Selections.

God Reaches Down to Us.

The one great fact which needs perpetual witness in our life is this: that God dwells in nature, and God dwells in men; that his hand is reached out from the infinite to lay hold of the hand of every one that seeks him; that the ladder up which the angel prayers do run is let down from heaven to men, not built up from earth heavenward; that there is no way by which we can climb laboriously up to God, but that God, the Father, is forever stooping down, and lifting up his children in his arms, that he may give them the kiss of welcome, and pour into their bosoms the breath of his own life; that today, as in the Garden of Eden, he still takes our frozen and cold frames, and breathes into us the breath of life, if we will but let him. And the Church of God is the Church of God only as we make it a monument to this, existing, ever-present, ever life-giving God, and as we make it a meeting place between ourselves and him, a witness to all that he has done in the past, a witness to all the wonders that he has wrought in the past; a witness to the mercy and grace that led the children of Israel out of Egypt and through the Red Sea; to the mercy and the grace that attended them in all their history; to the mercy and the grace that manifested itself in the living and in the dying Savior of mankind, and touched with a coal of fire the lips of the Apostle to the Gentiles—a witness to all this, but a witness to much more than this; a witness to the God that dwells in the hearts of his people here, a witness that speaks to every man that it is God dwelling in him; that touches with a coal of fire every lip that is consecrated to speak or to sing his praise.

The Firmament.

Let us cast our eyes up to the firmament, where the rich handiwork of God presents itself to our sight, and ask ourselves some such questions as these: What power built over our heads this vast magnificent arch, and spread out the heavens with such a variety of shining objects, a thousand and ten thousand times ten thousand different stars, new suns, new moons, new worlds, in comparison with which this earth of ours is but a point, all regular in their motions, and swimming in their liquid ether? Who painted the clouds with such a variety of colors, and in such diversity of shades and figures as is not in the power of the finest pencil to emulate? Who formed the sun of such determinate size, and placed it at such a convenient distance, as not to annoy, but only to refresh us, and nourish the ground by its kindly warmth? If it were larger, it would set the earth on fire; if less it would be frozen; if it were nearer to us we would be scorched to death; if further from us, we should not be able to live for want of heat. Who then hath made it so commodious a tabernacle, (I speak with the Scriptures and according to the common notion,) out of which it cometh forth, every morning, like a bridegroom out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a giant to run his course? For so many ages past it never failed rising at its appointed time, nor once missed sending out the dawn to proclaim its approach. But at whose voice does it arise, and by whose hand is it directed in its diurnal and annual course, to give us the blessed vicissitudes of day and night, and the regular succession of different seasons? That it should always proceed in the same straight path, and never once be known to step aside; that it should turn at a certain determinate point, and not go forward in a space where there is nothing to obstruct it; that it should traverse the same path back again, in the same constant and regular pace, to bring on the seasons by gradual advances; that the moon should supply the office of the sun, and appear, at rest times, to illuminate the air, and give a vicarious light when its brother is gone to carry the day into the other hemisphere; that it should procure or at least regulate the fluxes and refluxes of the seas, whereby the water is kept in constant motion, and so preserved from putrefaction, and accommodated to man's manifold conveniences, besides the business of fishing and the uses of navigation—in a word, that the rest of the planets, and all the innumerable host of heavenly bodies, should perform their courses and revolutions with so much certainty and exactness as never once to fail, but, for almost these 6,000 years, come constantly to the same period, in the hundredth part of a minute—is a clear and incontestible proof of a Divine Architect, and of that counsel and wisdom wherewith he rules and directs the universe.—Stackhouse.

"Will the Rope Hold?"

Standing on deck during a storm, a "sea" suddenly struck the ship on the "weather quarter," close to the spot where I stood. The shock was tremendous. Not a moment too soon had I laid hold of the "mizzen-backstay," as I got the whole force of the sea we shipped.

But although I clung to that rope as with a death's grasp, I felt far from safe. It seemed as every succeeding wave would wash me overboard. To have felt safe then would have been an unspeakable comfort. Yet this feeling would not in the least have increased my safety. I was just as safe, though fearing and doubting, as I would have been though assured and joyous. My safety, in no sense whatever, depended on my feeling safe, but entirely on the strength of the roping to which I clung. The rope holding, and I clinging, I was safe whether I felt it or not.

It is just so with our salvation. To you who are alive and wakened to your danger, the tempest of an awakened conscience breaking over all your hopes, and sins innumerable, like so many surging waves, threatening to submerge, a rope of safety is within your reach; cling to it by faith and you are saved, whether you feel it or not.

It is not fancying you are saved, nor feeling you are saved, that constitutes your safety; but clinging by simple, unquestioning faith to Christ, believing what God says about Jesus, whom he "delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification."

Trembling one, "Will the rope hold?" Hearken: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Is this enough? Read then this word, John iii. 36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." Will the rope hold? Try it.

But what if I don't feel? Then trust. It is not to feeling any more than to working that salvation is promised, but only to believing. You are in infinite danger if unsaved, and also in infinite need, whether you feel it or not; for you are guilty, liable at any moment to be everlastingly lost! Then why delay? The rope of safety is within your reach. Refusing to grasp it now, it may be forever withdrawn, and then!

Lay hold, dear friend—lay hold—whether you are a little child, a strong man, or an aged woman. "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

God says this rope will hold. Trust it and you shall soon feel.

God is not a man that he should lie, and Christ says of all who trust him, "they shall never perish."

Love Eradicates Anger.

You know men who are all but perfect; and who would be almost entirely perfect, but you say they are hasty—they are touchy—they are ill-tempered. Now, there is nothing that a Christian has to take more trouble to eradicate forever from his being than ill-temper. It requires the struggle of years—perhaps of a life-time; but it has to be done. It has to be done. It is not to be looked upon as an accident of temperment, but it is a sin—one of the blackest of all the sins. It is the symptom of an unloving nature at the bottom. A want of patience, a want of kindness, a want of generosity, a want of humility, a want of courtesy, a want of unselfishness, are all symbolized in one flash of evil temper. It is the revelation of what is inside a man, and therefore the man who has that must have his whole nature sweetened. It is not enough to deal with the temper. You must go to the root, and sweeten the whole nature, and then temper will die away of itself. But how can a man who has not had a victory over that part of his nature, have a part in God's people in this world or in the next world? How is it possible? Why, a man with a temper such as I have described would make heaven miserable for all the people who are in it; and except such a man be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Christ says: "If you offend one of these little ones, it were better for you that a mill-stone were hanging about your neck and that you were cast into the depths of the sea." That is to say, it is the deliberate verdict of the Lord Jesus that it is better not to live than not to love.

Inspiration of Scripture.

After all that has been done, the bulk of Holy Scripture remains much as it was before, standing out and beyond any other thing claiming to be of a kindred nature, and showing itself to be in its essence and bearing, altogether unique and divine. The Koran, the Shaster, the Vedas, so far as they are not reflections of Scripture, are so limited, unhistorical, and inferior in morality, as to stand at the best on an altogether lower and other platform. And in comparison with the spiritual light of other nations, that possessed by the Jews, and that which is of the essence of Christianity, is—especially when we remember their otherwise great inferiority—absolutely as different and superior in degree, as to amount to a difference in kind, and to be, if not superhuman, yet altogether inexplicable, save on the supposition of its being a revelation. Standing in the silence of the universe, and asking whence we came or whither we are going—who made us, what is our destiny, is there a life beyond?—we have in the Bible a voice which answers all these questions, supplying us with what we need, and leaving us with the impression that the same power which enabled us to ask these questions is that which in this way has supplied the answers.—Bishop Argyll.

Can God Trust You?

Instead of asking yourself can you trust God, would it not be quite well indeed to ask, Can God trust me? You need have no fear whatever that God cannot be trusted. He does not shift about, stable today and unstable tomorrow. What he says today that he will do for you, he will stick to it without fail. No, you need not question whether God can be trusted, but you do need to question yourself as to whether God can trust you. When you promise him that you will be more devoted to him, can God trust in your promise? Can he depend upon your intentions? Has he any safe reason to believe that you will honestly and determinedly endeavor to be more devoted to him? And when you promise God that you will do all you can to extend his kingdom, can he trust your word for it?

Is your pledge to God as good as it is to man? Quite likely you believe that all the people who know you have strong confidence in your word. When you tell any of them that you will do a certain thing, you say that you do precisely as you have said you would. Of course, then, your neighbors can trust your word every time. Well, can God trust you in like manner? Every time that you tell him that you will do a certain thing, are you very particular to do that very thing? Or, rather, do you think that it matters but little if you do not fulfil nearly all that you have told God you would perform? Is it possible you are much more particular to keep your word good with man than you are to keep good your word with God? Think this matter over seriously. Be honest with yourself. Never tell God, in prayer, that you are going to be more liberal with your money in supporting his cause, and yet keep holding on to what you have, not increasing your contributions even to the extent of a dime.

Cannot Ye Discern the Signs of the Times?

The signs that mark the coming of Christ are about all in the past. Christ first foretold the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple. It was fulfilled to the letter. The foundation of the Temple was removed and the ground on which it stood was plowed up, as the prophet Micah had foretold; Micah iii. 12. "Zion shall be plowed as a field." The Scriptures cannot be broken.

Then commenced the slaughter of saints. About seventy million were put to death under Pagan and Papal Rome. We have passed by that.

Then the signs given in Matt. xxiv. the sun and moon darkened, and the stars falling are in the past.

The prophet Nahum, Nahum ii. tells us that in the last days the chariots (or cars) will run "like the lightning" and seem like torches; "they shall jostle one against another," etc. No carriages ever run one against another except the cars.

Then Daniel says, Dan. xii., "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." About all the inventions of today have been gotten up in my day. So we can truly say, "it is the dawning of the day."

Then look at the state of religion. Jesus said—"and while the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." Many churches are in their Laodicean state—neither cold nor hot. God says, "I will spue them out of my mouth."

Then we are today living where there is form of godliness without the power.

Christ has foretold us all about these things that should come, and "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." He also says, "When you see all these things come to pass, then lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Thank God we do know it, and our heads are uplifted, knowing that Christ is soon coming. Who shall escape? Those that are wholly sanctified and in Christ Jesus. "Those that were ready went in to the marriage," and no others. Get in before the door is closed; no time to lose.—D. D. R. in Messiah's Advocate.

"So Much To Do."

We often hear people complain because they have "so much to do." They regard work as an affliction, instead of a blessing, as it really is. If there was no work to do, life would be shorn of the bright blessings that come as a reward for labor. The world would be full of idlers, people would wander arouud in the aimless, unconcerned manner that means so little in this great world, where there is so much to do. We have only to look at the dull faces of idle people to know how strange the world would appear if it was filled with them. God has wisely given all something to do, and strength for each one to perform his part. We are happier and stronger when we engage in his great work as it really is. When we work the days do not seem so long and useless. It is labor that brings sweet, refreshing sleep when the starry night hangs over us with its silent mystery. It is labor that touches life with hope and gladness; for we know that reward shall surely come.

Let us be glad because there is much to do, and go to the work of life with gratitude welling up in our souls, knowing that we have the strength to engage in it. And let us begin early in life's morning, when we are well and strong, and when we can labor successfully for God. O, how much we can accomplish in the long, bright years that are before us! The "so much to do" is but little, after all, if we engage in it with all our might. God will help us, and then give us the precious reward at last.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 28, 1900.

We have during the last few weeks, sent letters to a number of those who are owing us, setting forth our condition, and asking for aid by renewals. Some have responded, and we are thankful to you for your prompt attention and uniformly kind words. We are forced to say that the large part of those whom we have addressed have apparently paid no heed to our call. Brethren, this is a wrong way to do. We told you the truth when we wrote, and it is truth now. It is expensive both in time and money to write letter... only one is not much, but the many makes a burden in expense and time. By a little attention you can save us both the cash outlay and the labor. You certainly know when your time is out. Then please aid us by a prompt renewal. Don't let us ask again.

LAST reports from the Czar indicate an improvement in his condition.

TOMORROW has been designated by the President of the United States as Thanksgiving day.

"REAL wealth does not consist in the things that the world can give, but in those that it cannot take away."

THE report of the Indiana Conference is in hand, and will be given in next issue. The Illinois report has been delayed somewhat, and occupying quite a space, we deemed it best to not give both in one paper.

THE Allied diplomatic body at Pekin have arrived at an agreement regarding terms of peace, and although not given out yet definitely it is known to be on a basis of punishment for the [redacted] individuals, retention of strong legation guard, and the occupation of certain points between Pekin and Taku.

"SOME good people lose hope in this world's disheartenments. They bow in sadness over their dead, saying, "There is no use in my going on. Life is empty for me now. There is nothing left worth living for. Every sweet flower has faded." Christian faith should dispel any such feeling. At the grave of Jesus, as the sun sank low, weeping ones stood, saying, "All our hearts' hopes lie buried here—all our love." But three days later that grave was opened, and those buried hopes, joys, and affections were raised up, and lived again in blessed beauty. Their hearts' treasures were only buried that they might spring up in immortal beauty."

OUM Paul Kruger, late President of the Transvaal, has arrived in France, and the people are giving him an enthusiastic welcome. It was given out that President Loubet would show him no official distinction, but he seems to have been carried away by the popular demonstration, and received him as a visiting President. This can be done solely as the English government has failed to officially notify the French government of the annexation of the Transvaal and Orange Free State. So the exhibitions of sympathy cannot be legally an "unfriendly act." The French populace boil over one day, and cool down the next, so it is not likely any great thing will come of this visit. The results of the South African war will not be reversed now.

Glad Tidings says:—"Living day by day is our duty. If we always reckoned that as the limit of our present duty, we should have little trouble. But ordinarily we give ourselves more anxiety over to-morrow and its possibilities than over the manifest duties of today. Today's duty may include preparation for tomorrow. So far to-morrow enters into today. But preparation for to-morrow is not anxiety over tomorrow. What we dread for tomorrow may never come to pass. If it comes to pass we may have triumph over its worse happenings, or added and unlooked-for strength in them. "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow; for the morrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof,"—and the blessing.

WE have a letter from a brother who has been a helpless invalid for 21 years. His wife and self are the only ones of the faith near them. He is unable to pay for the paper to be continued. Has no preaching aside from what he gets in it, and is truly thankful that he has had it so far. Will some brother or sister who has the means to spare pay for this paper that our poor brother and sister may have it.

Matter Can Think.

They say matter cannot think, and that means that it cannot reason, or remember, or love,—the body can do nothing of the kind,—that is the work of the immortal soul. And yet word came from Chicago on the 11th inst. that a little black dog for ten hours kept watch over the place where fifteen-year-old Lily Berndt fell into the reservoir of the Lassig bridge works. After the pond had been dragged in vain, little Blackie refused to leave the spot. Coaxing, threats and pleading were all alike to him. Nothing could make him leave the place. This convinced Lilly's brother that his sister was drowned. He told the police, and engine No. 56 was then driven to the scene and all the water pumped out of the basin. The body was found caught under a heavy timber.

Only last week a blind horse in West Virginia fell into a pond and his efforts to find the way out attracted the attention of its companion, and, neighing and neighing to no purpose it at last swam out to the blind one, seized it by the foretop and led it out. Either organized living matter can think or else horses and dogs have—well, they think, reason, remember, love and hate,—and if only immortal souls can perform such functions, horses and dogs must have immortal souls.

Passing Events in the Light of Prophecy.

We glean from Glad Tidings several items of interest to those who are watching as Gentile times are closing up. It says, respecting "The Chinese Problem:—

"It is not easy to follow the course of events in the East. Events there are of the kaleidoscopic nature and there is so much that it is only made up mor and a good deal of it contradictory, that it is exceedingly difficult to sift the truth.

Following the proposal of the German government there was published an appeal by the Chinese Emperor to the Emperor of German. The Kaiser replied in a very dignified telegram, in which he pointed out the enormity of the crimes that had been committed, and insisted upon the punishment of the perpetrators. These were followed by decrees, purporting to be issued by the Chinese government, in which it was declared that the culprits would be punished, and that some of the ring leaders, men of high estate, had already been degraded. The "Decrees" turned out to be forgeries.

From the Pekin Gazettes, which were published during the siege of the Legations, and have lately been brought to light, there is most indisputable evidence of the complicity of the Empress Dowager and her personal following in the plot and in the atrocities. The removal of the Chinese court further into the interior of the country has created an unfavorable impression, and renders more difficult the withdrawal of the allied forces. But everything else connected with the Chinese problem has meantime been eclipsed by the official announcement of an Anglo-German agreement.

The first article of the agreement declares that it is a matter of joint and permanent international interest that the ports of China shall remain free and open to trade for all countries, without distinction.

The second declares that the two governments will not, on their part, make use of the present complications to obtain for themselves any territorial advantages, and will direct their policy towards maintaining undiminished the territorial condition of the Chinese Empire. In case of another Power making use of the complications in order to obtain territorial advantage the two governments reserve to themselves the right to come to an understanding as to the steps to be taken to protect their interests in China.

The Anglo-German Agreement has been well received in almost every country except Russia. The spirit of that nation may be judged from the following extracts from the Russian Press—:

The Novosti considers "the partition of China inevitable." The Novoe Vremya says:—"By all means open the doors of the whole South China. Exploit it; preach the gospel by the aid of the sword. That is your affair. But we cannot open the doors of North China." The Birzhevaya Vedomosti says:—"Russia will know how to secure the safety of that which she has obtained without agreements and in spite of them."

Since the Anglo-German Agreement has been published, the Russian Legation has returned to Pekin. Russian troops now occupy Mukden, the capital of Manchuria. The rebellion in Southern China is spreading, and becoming more serious.

The British Parliamentary elections are now over. The result gives the Unionist government a majority of 133. When Parliament was dissolved their majority was 128. Any party could carry out the Divine will. The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as rivers of water he turneth it withersoever he will." But it may be that the party at one time characterized by a "spiritual foreign policy," now imbued with the "imperialistic idea," is the one best suited for his purpose in the troublesome times ahead.

Mr. R. B. Haldane, M. P., speaking at Glasgow, on the 23rd of October, gave some striking figures showing the magnitude of the British Empire. He said that in these little islands of 120,000 square miles we rule no less than 11,500,000 square miles of territory; in other words, more than all the great powers of civilization put together—Germany, France, Russia, and the United States. The populations of the Great Powers of the Continent,—Russia, France, Germany, amounts to 258 millions. Yet we with our 38,000,000 rule over 350,000,000; whereas to them is confided the large, but smaller figure of 65,000,000. In other words, we rule over more than five times as many human beings as the great powers of Europe. He further said, that nothing could be more impressive than the way in which our colonies, recognizing that they were part of a great organic whole, took their share of the great war from which we are now emerging.

Fighting still [redacted] Africa by small bands roaming about the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies; but the military authorities are reported to be stamping out the dying embers of the late conflagration. Troops are returning home, as well as many of the leading generals. The commander-in-chief will, it is reported, return soon, if nothing happens to prevent. Preparations are being made for the return of the "Outlander" refugees to the Transvaal, although it will be some time before the country is thoroughly settled down. Sir Alfred Milner, the High Commissioner, has gone to Pretoria to work out, it is generally understood, a scheme for the government of the two Colonies, which have now been incorporated in the British Empire.

Persecution of the Jews in Roumania.

We learn from the Jewish Chronicle, (England) that Mr. David Blaustein, the Superintendent of the Educational Alliance in New York, has been studying this subject on the spot. Passing through London he was asked if he came across many emigrants in his travels? His answer was as follows:—

"I may say that I followed the emigrants along the whole route. I saw them in New York, London, Paris, Frankfort, Vienna, Buda-Pesth and Predeal, the Roumanian frontier town. Here the police refused to allow them to cross the frontier, the dead-lock was only removed by the arrival of orders from the Premier, M. Carp, that the Jews might enter Roumania.

"I visited Bucharest and smaller towns, such as Piatra, Bacau and Jassy, my stay lasting from Aug. 25, to Sept. 7. At Bucharest I saw some Jewish schools which are supported by our co-religionists, and a Trades School supported by the Jewish Colonization Association; but there are in that city at least 10,000 Jewish children who are without any instruction whatever, either secular or religious. During my visit I met a number of the emigrants who had returned home. But what a mockery that word is, for they had sold everything they possessed, they were without homes, or the means to provide them. They were actually camping in the courts of the synagogues, and were awaiting the arrival of M. Astrue, the delegate of the Alliance Israelite Universelle, who was to furnish rooms for them. There was no lack of dwellings, for the houses which had been vacated by the Jewish emigrants were still empty when I was there."

"Was nothing done by the Jews," he was asked, "to alleviate the sufferings of their less fortunate co-religionists?"

"Oh, yes. They established, for instance, a people's kitchen, where I witnessed a distribution of food. Between the hours of seven and eleven in the forenoon 700 persons,—men, women and children received tea, bread and cheese; and I was assured that this was the only meal these poor people had in twenty-four hours. They all looked the very image of despair. The whole Jewish quarter,—and this applies to other towns as well as Bucharest impressed me as though it were a battle-field after the carnage was over."

Did you see anything of the relief-work in the provinces?

Yes; in the small towns of Moldavia the misery was even greater than in Bucharest, because there are no influential men to help in establishing People's Kitchens. I followed M. Astrue from place to place, and witnessed the admirable manner in which he administered relief. In every town that he visit, M. Astrue met representatives of the Jews. They submitted to him lists of persons who had sold their effects, but had not been able to leave, of persons who had returned, of families whose husbands or other adult male members had been sent to America, and of widows and orphans and other deserving poor. M. Astrue assisted all to the utmost of his ability, and of the means at his command, and according to the special needs of each family. For instance, to one he gave a horse, to another a cow. He opened kitchens on the understanding that the better class of Jews should contribute to their maintenance. He paid the fees at public schools for promising youths, and he paid rents for the winter. His sympathetic treatment of the poor people deserves the highest praise."

What is your opinion as to the immediate prospect of an improvement in the political situation?

"My opinion is that the condition of the Jews is worse than it ever was. I arrived at this conclusion as the result of conversations with well-to-do Christians, who spoke in the most hostile terms of the Jews, and in consequence of the stringent application of Anti-Jewish laws. M. Carp, the prime minister, is favorably disposed, but the enmity of the higher classes is too intense to permit of any improvement for the time being. The lower classes have quite a different feeling, for they are friendly. Of the five millions who inhabit Roumania, four millions are peasants who know absolutely nothing of the Jewish question. The remaining million may be divided into 250,000 Jews, 250,000 non-Jewish foreigners, and 500,000 native Christians, so that as a matter of fact, the entire Jewish question rests upon half-a-million native Christians, and a quarter-of-a-million Jews. As a native of Russia, I admit that the Jews in that empire possess individual freedom, but in Roumania the Jews are oppressed individually and collectively, where ever I moved I felt I was breathing an anti-Semitic atmosphere. At Bucharest, in particular, so great is the fear among the Jews, that at the hotel where I stayed the proprietor and his servants, all of them co-religionists, hardly dared to speak to me lest they might get themselves into trouble."

"Have you any suggestions to make for grappling with the present state of affairs?"

"I strongly recommend the immedi[redacted]'s kitchens, [redacted] of terrible misery [redacted] winter, and the establish[redacted] more schools, for the moral suffering of our brethren is far greater than their physical sufferings. I am also convinced that emigration is an absolute necessity. As many as possible should be aided to migrate, but to make this movement effective all Jewish forces in Europe must unite so that when the emigrants come to America they shall not become a burden on the public funds."

We also gather from the Jewish Chronicle that a movement is on foot to make Jerusalem a great Jewish center independent of Zionism; that is to say, a religious center, as Rome is now, although temporal power has departed from the Catholic Church. The plan seems to be to establish a great academy or university where every branch of learning would be cultivated, taught by men of world-wide reputation, attracting Jewish students from all parts of the world. The nucleus of such a University has already sprung into existence in the new "Toynbee Hall," with its library of 18,000 Jewish books. A museum of Jewish antiquities is also suggested, and the Chronicle says it does not require a great stretch of imagination to picture a great synagogue in Jerusalem—a sort of Jewish cathedral whose architectural features, religious services and other details would be on a scale of imposing magnificence.

It is remarkable that although still under the iron heel of oppression, the children of Abraham throughout the world have dreams of coming glory for them as a people, and are bent upon bringing it about themselves. We confess we do not understand now the Roumania troubles and emigration from that country to America is to aid the resettlement of that in the land of their fathers; but we believe it all the same. It may be for the purpose of lifting the hundreds of thousands of them to a higher plane of existence by intercourse with western brethren to fit them for subjects of the great King.

Short Sermons. No. 9.

The Lord's coming—what is it?

This like all other Bible questions is important to us if we understand it, and it fits us and our faith, otherwise its importance is all lost to us. For instance if you or I really think that we are immortal, or have immortal souls that survive the ordeal of death and then and there mount up through the skies to heaven and receive our reward—a bright crown of glory and a harp of gold, then what would or could our Lord's coming add to our joys? Hence such a faith as this renders that stupendous event a non-important affair, and we seldom ever hear them preach or mention it. If they do it is in a cold and indifferent way "and may be a thousand years off," and they seem to shrink from it, and dread it as they would death, while on the other hand, if death is an enemy as the Bible so declares, and kills us dead, and we know not anything until the Life-Giver comes and calls for the dead to come forth, as in the sample case of Lazarus, then his coming is to the Christain who has fallen asleep in Jesus, of paramount importance, and they are entirely dependent on this glorious event for a resurrection to future life and reward. He says to his waiting ones, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man as his work shall be." In the type the Lord's people were required to remain without, and wait for their high-priest to come out of the Most Holy Place and bless them. They could not go in there while he was there. Just so it is now in the antetype—Jesus our High-Priest, has gone into the heaven itself to appear in the presence of God for us, and we must of necessity wait and watch and pray for his return, and then if found worthy we will get a glorious reward. This is God's gospel plan of salvation, and to ignore, neglect and reject it is to miss all the good in store for the faithful.

Yes, but what do we mean by his coming or rather what does the Bible teach on this question? Jesus said to his disciples whose hearts were sad because he had told them he was going away, "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Now, does our Lord and Master really mean that he would send the cruel enemy, death, and kill them, and take their immortal souls to heaven? If so that was poor encouragement as they knew nothing about such souls. No, he meant what he said, that if he went away—left them, that he would come again—come back to them, and for them, that they might be with him. This glorious promise will not admit of any variation or prevarication or substitution. Nothing short of the personal coming of our dear Lord and Savior will fill this promise of his to his disciples whose longing heart cries out oh come, bring immortality. No coming of the Lord, no reward. No immortality for the Christian this side of the coming of the Life Giver, think and say what you may to the contrary. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye appear with him in glory." When and then marks the time of seeing and being with our dear Lord and Master.

When the time came for Jesus to leave his disciples, whose hearts were made sad at the thought, he lifted up his hands and gave them a parting blessing and was parted from them and carried up into heaven, and a cloud received him out of their sight. "And while they looked steadfastly towards heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Nothing short of the return of our dear Lord and Master will fill his promise, and this prediction to his disciples, nothing. This was and is the faith of the gospel, and of the true primitive Christian, who turned from idols to serve the true and living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven.

Obituary.

Lydia A. Elliot was born in Clark Co., Aug. 24, 1868; died Nov. 8, 1900. She was united in marriage to Emres Glick, Sept. 9, 1890. She leaves a husband, one daughter, father and mother, three sisters, two brothers and a host of friends to mourn her loss. She was a woman who was highly esteemed by all that knew her. Funeral services by the writer, who spoke to a large company of people, at her home Annapolis, Ill. Thus while it was with tears of sadness that the bereaved companion, father and mother and friends followed her casket to the cemetery, yet they looked forward to the resurrection when the Life-giver shall come, who will do away with that awful enemy death. May the dear Lord soon comfort these lonely ones is our prayer.

that they be empowered to act and pay for the same out of the Conference fund.

Also that the Committee pay the railroad fare and $10.00 to each of the preachers present.

Saturday evening Sister Woodward preached—topic, "Will sincerity alone save us?" This was excellent and we regret being unable to write it in full.

At 9:30 Sunday school and at 10:30 we listened to Bro. S. Wilson tell of the "Universal Trust." After which Bro. Woodward waited on the Lord's table. Meeting then adjourned till 2:30 when the young people entertained the older ones very pleasantly for an hour, after which Bro. Conner preached, comparing our two estates: "What we are now and what we shall be." Meeting then adjourned till 7:00 when a number expressed their views as to "What does it mean that we should love one another?"

At 7:30 sermon by Bro. A. J. Eychaner, subject "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

The Conference adjourned to meet in Sept. 1901, and the Conference Board to meet the last Sunday in Nov. 1900, at the residence of Bro. E. F. Gesin at Adeline, whose post office address is Forreston, Ill.

L. Booth, Sec.

To show what the young people are doing we submit this report of the young people's society, Aug. 1900. Reports from societies at Chicago, Dixon and Adeline read and approved. Also reports of Secretary and Treasurer. Election of officers followed: Pres., Miss Lelia Whitehead; Vice Pres., Edwin Renner; Sec., Miss Anna Drew; Treasurer, Charles Lindsay. By motion the name of the society was changed to "Bereans" and the constitution amended accordingly. Meeting then adjourned.

General report for the Illinois State Society. Out of 13 isolated members written to, answers have been received from but 4. So far as information can be obtained there are but three regularly organized societies in the State, viz: Chicago, Adeline and Dixon. The Iowa State President wishes the Illinois State Society to change the name to "The Bereans." Acts xvii. 10. The majority of the societies and isolated members are in favor of the change.

Charles Lindsay of Adeline was appointed by the President to make out a directory of our young people of Illinois. The leaflets published by the State Society have been used for the past year in a majority of societies.

The following committees were appointed by the President: Committee on leaflets, Anna Drew, Anna L. Adams, of Dixon, and Edwin Renner of Lanark. Committee on programme, Ada Drew, of Dixon; Chairman, Lawrence Wilson of Austin, Emma Lindsay of Adeline, and Mina Knodle of Oregon.

Anna L. Adams, State Sec.

Report of the young people's society of Chicago. When first organized our attendance was but three or four, but during the past year it has increased to ten or eleven. They assisted their Sunday School financially with their entertainment, sent a delegate to the Conference last year, took charge of a church service, have used the lesson leaflets during the past year published by the State society and have pledged themselves to use the same the coming year. They meet once in two weeks and sent their dues to the State Treasury, and have decided to accept the name of "Bereans."

Jessie Wilson, Sec.

Report of the young people's Bible Society of Dixon. We had formerly quite a large society but on account of some moving away and others dropping out for various reasons we have now but seven regular members. We meet every Sunday after Sunday School and the President appointing the leader from time to time. We are using the leaflets published by the State Society and will use them the coming year. Have paid our dues to the State Treasury. We are in favor of changing the name to Bereans.

Anna L. Adams, Sec.

Report of society at Adeline. The society at Adeline meets every Friday evening. This is our second year's work. We started with ten members and have increased to twenty-five. Our first year's work was on the life of Christ and the New Testament. The last year began with the Old Testament and are now on the Prophecies. We expect to use the leaflets published by the State society the coming year.

These works are excellent for use by those who wish to do missionary labor, and we offer them at such a low price that they should be out in a short time. Bro. Jones had large editions of these tracts printed, and by dying suddenly, and his Widow being in feeble health, we have undertaken the task of selling them. Her income is quite limited, and all that can be gotten out of the sales goes to her after expenses are paid. When you buy these tracts you get several times the worth of your money, and also aid a worthy Sister, who will thank you for it.

Assorted package 80 cents per pound. Gospel of the Kingdom, alone at 25 cents per pound.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses. A Volume of 283 pages, cloth 25 cents, leather bound, embossed, and gilt edges, $1.00. By Wiley Jones. This book is so well known that it is only necessary to announce that it is for sale, to insure a market for it. We have undertaken to dispose of these books for the Widow of our lamented Brother Jones, and while getting them at this low price, you at the same time will help Sister Jones to much-needed money.

Change of Location.

The friends will please make a note of the change of address of Brother J. S. Hatch. He has moved from this state to Tustin, Orange Co. California where letters should be addressed. We commend our Bro. Hatch to the brethren on the Pacific Coast, and add if any desire his labors in the gospel field he is ready to answer calls.
